That did the like for Fleance : if thou didst it,
 Thou art the nonpareil.

Mur. Most royal sir,

Fleance is 'scap'd.

Macb. Then comes my fit again : I had else been perfect ;

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock :
 As broad and general as the casing air :
 But now, I am cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
 To saucy doubts and fears. But Banquo 's safe ?

Mur. Ay, my good lord : safe in a ditch he hides,
 With twenty trenched gashes on his head ;
 The least a death to nature.

Macb. Thanks for that
 There the grown serpent lies ; the worm, that 's fled,
 Hath nature that in time will venom breed,
 No teeth for the present.—Get thee gone ; to-morrow
 We 'll hear, ourselves again. [Exit Murderer.

Lady M. My royal lord,
 You do not give the cheer ; the feast is sold
 That is not often vouch'd, while 't is a making,
 'T is given with welcome : To feed, were best at home.
 From thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony,
 Meeting were bare without it.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer !—
 Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
 And health on both !

Len. May it please your highness, sit !

Enter the Ghost of BANQUO and sits in MACBETH'S place.

Macb. Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,
 Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present ;
 Who may I rather challenge for unkindness
 Than pity for mischance !

Rosse. His absence, sir, Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your highness
 To grace us with your royal company ?

Macb. The table 's full.

Len. Here is a place reserv'd, sir.

Macb. Where ?

Len. Here, my good lord. What is 't that moves your highness ?

Macb. Which of you have done this ?

Lords. What, my good lord ?

Macb. Thou canst not say I did it : never shake Thy gory locks at me.

Rosse. Gentlemen, rise ; his highness is not well.

Lady M. Sit, worthy friends :—my lord is often thus,
 And hath been from his youth : 'pray you, keep seat ;
 The fit is momentary ; upon a thought
 He will again be well : If much you note him,
 You shall offend him, and extend his passion ;
 Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man ?

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on that Which might appal the devil.

Lady M. O proper stuff !

This is the very painting of your fear :
 This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,
 Led you to Duncan. O, these flaws, and starts, (Impostors to true fear,) would well become
 A woman's story, at a winter's fire, Authoriz'd by her grandam. Shame itself !
 Why do you make such faces ? When all 's done,
 You look but on a stool.

Macb. Prithee, see there ! behold ! look ! lo ! how say you ?

Why, what care I ? If thou canst nod, speak us—

If charnel-houses, and our graves, must send
Those that we bury, back, our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites.

Lady M. What! quite unmann'd in folly?

Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady M. Fie, for shame!

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, i' the olden time,
Ere human statute purg'd the gentle weal;
Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd Too terrible for the ear: the times have been,
That when the brains were out the man would die,
And there an end: but now, they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,
And push us from our stools: This is more strange Than such a murder is.

Lady M. My worthy lord,
Your noble friends do lack you.

Macb. I do forget:—
Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends;
I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down:—Give me some wine, fill full:—

Enter Ghost.

I drink to the general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss;
Would he were here! to all, and him, we thirst,
And all to all.

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Macb. Avaunt! and quit my sight! Let the earth hide thee!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with!

Lady M. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom: 't is no other;
Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare: Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger,
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble: Or, be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword;
If trembling I inhabit then, protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow!

[Ghost disappears.]

Unreal mockery, hence!—Why, so;—being gone,
I am a man again.—Pray you, sit still.

Lady M. You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting,
With most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? You make me strange
Even to the disposition that I owe,
When now I think you can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine are blanch'd with fear.

Rosse. What sights, my lord?

Lady M. I pray you, speak not; he grows worse and worse;

Question enrages him: at once, good night:—
Stand not upon the order of your going,
But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health Attend his majesty!

Lady M. A kind good night to all!

[Exeunt Lords and Attendants.]

Macb. It will have blood; they say, blood will have blood:

* Inhabit then.—This is the original reading, which has been changed into inhibit thee. Horne Tooke was the first to denounce this alteration; contending that the true meaning is, that if he were dared to the desert he would not skulk within his house.

Stones have been known to move, and trees to Augurs, and understood relations, have
By magot-pies, and choughs, and mooks
forth

The secret'st man of blood.—What is the sig

Lady M. Almost at odds with morning, which.

Macb. How say'st thou, that Macduff person,

At our great bidding?

Lady M. Did you send to him,

Macb. I hear it by the way; but I will
There's not a one of them, but in his house
I keep a servant fee'd. I will to-morrow (And betimes I will) unto the weird sisters:
More shall they speak; for now I am bent
By the worst means, the worst: for mine own
All causes shall give way; I am in blood
Stepp'd in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er:

Strange things I have in head, that will to light
Which must be acted, ere they may be scan

Lady M. You lack the season of all natures

Macb. Come, we'll to sleep: My strange abuse

Is the initiate fear, that wants hard use:—
We are yet but young in deed.

SCENE V.—The Heath. Thunder

Enter HECATE, meeting the three Witches

1 Witch. Why, how now, Hecate? you look

Hec. Have I not reason, beldams as you are, Saucy, and over-bold? How did you dare

To trade and traffic with Macbeth,
In riddles, and affairs of death;
And I, the mistress of your charms,
The close contriver of all harms,
Was never call'd to bear my part,
Or show the glory of our art!

And, which is worse, all you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son,
Spiteful, and wrathful; who, as others do,
Loves for his own ends, not for you.
But make amends now: Get you gone,
And at the pit of Acheron

Meet me i' the morning; thither he Will come to know his destiny.

Your vessels, and your spells, provide,
Your charms, and everything beside:
I am for the air; this night I'll spend Unto a dismal and a fatal end.

Great business must be wrought ere noon:
Upon the corner of the moon

There hangs a vaporous drop, profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that, distill'd by magic slights,
Shall raise such artificial sprites,

As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion:
He shall spurn fate, scorn death, and bear
His hopes 'bove wisdom, grace, and fear:
And you all know, security
Is mortal's chiefest enemy.

SONG. [Within.] "Come away, come away

Hark, I am call'd; my little spirit, see,
Sits in a foggy cloud, and stays for me.

1 Witch. Come, let's make haste: she's back again.

SCENE VI.—Forres. A Room in the Palace

Enter LENOX, and another Lord

Len. My former speeches have had but little terpret farther: only, I say, been strangely borne: The gracious can

Macbeth:—marry, he was dead:—
valiant Banquo walked too late;
ay say, if't please you, Fleance kill'd,
ed. Men must not walk too late.
ant the thought, how monstrous
colm, and for Donalbain, racious father! damned fact!
eve Macbeth! did he not straight,
the two delinquents tear,
slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep:
obly done? Ay, and wisely too;
ave anger'd any heart alive
en deny it. So that, I say, all things well: and I do think,
Duncan's sons under his key, se heaven, he shall not,) they should find o kill a father; so should Fleance.
for from broad words, and 'cause he fail'd t the tyrant's feast, I hear in disgrace: Sir, can you tell ows himself?

The son of Duncan,
is tyrant holds the due of birth,
English court; and is receiv'd

Of the most pious Edward with such grace,
That the malevolence of fortune nothing
Takes from his high respect: Thither Macduff
Is gone to pray the holy king, upon his aid
To wake Northumberland, and warlike Siward:
That, by the help of these, (with Him above
To ratify the work,) we may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights;
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives;
Do faithful homage, and receive free honours;—
All which we pine for now: And this report Hath so exasperate the king, that he Prepares for some attempt of war.

Len. Sent he to Macduff?

Lord. He did: and with an absolute, "Sir, not I;"
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, "You'll rue the time
That clogs me with this answer."

Len. And that well might Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance

His wisdom can provide. Some holy angel
Fly to the court of England, and unfold
His message ere he come; that a swift blessing
May soon return to this suffering country
Under a hand accus'd!

Lord. I'll send my prayers with him!

[Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

A dark Cave. In the middle, a Caldron boiling. Thunder.

Enter the three Witches.

Thrice the brinded cat hath mew'd.
Thrice; and once the hedge-pig whin'd.
Harrier cries:—"T is time, 't is time.

Round about the caldron go;
poison'd entrails throw.
hat under cold stone,
nd nights hast thirty-one
'd venom sleeping got,
ou first i' the charmed pot!
ble, double, toil and trouble;
urn; and, caldron, bubble.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
caldron boil and bake:
newt, and toe of frog,
f bat, and tongue of dog,
fork, and blind-worm's sting,
s leg, and owl's wing,
harm of powerful trouble;
bell-broth boil and bubble.
ble, double, toil and trouble;
urn; and, caldron, bubble.

Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf;
s' mummy; maw, and gulf,
ravin'd salt-sea shark;
'hemlock, digg'd i' the dark;
f blaspheming Jew;
goat, and slips of yew,
l in the moon's eclipse;
' Turk, and Tartar's lips;
of birth-strangled babe,
deliver'd by a drab,
he gruel thick and slab;
ereto a tiger's chaudron,<sup>a</sup> ingredients of our caldron.
ble, double, toil and trouble;
urn; and, caldron, bubble.
Cool it with a baboon's blood,
e charm is firm and good.

<sup>a</sup> Chaudron—entrails.

Enter HECATE, and the other three Witches.

Hec. O, well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share i' the gains,
And now about the caldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

[Music and a Song, 'Black spirits,' &c.]

2 Witch. By the pricking of my thumbs, Something wicked this way comes:—
Open, locks, whoever knocks.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. How now, you secret, black, and midnight
hags,

What is't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I conjure you, by that which you profess, (Howe'er you come to know it,) answer me:
Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches: though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up;
Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down;
Though castles topple on their warders' heads;
Though palaces, and pyramids, do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure
Of nature's germi<sup>b</sup> tumble all together,
Even till destruction sicken, answer me
To what I ask you.

1 Witch. Speak.

2 Witch. Demand.

3 Witch. We'll answer.

1 Witch. Say, if thou 'dst rather hear it from our mouths,

Or from our masters'?

Macb. Call them, let me see them.

<sup>a</sup> This is the original stage direction. The modern editors have inserted four lines of a song, which they find in Middleton's "Witch," but without any authority for their introduction here, beyond the stage-direction. In the Witch scene of Act III. we have mention of a song "Come away." These words are also in Middleton. If the song of the fourth act should be inserted in the text, why not that of the third act?

<sup>b</sup> Germi<sup>b</sup>—the original is germine. Germi<sup>b</sup> are seeds; germaine, kindred, something closely related to another.

1 Witch. Pour in sow's blood, that hath eaten
Her nine farrow; grease, that 's sweaten
From the murderer's gibbet; throw
Into the flame.

All. Come, high, or low;
Thyself, and office, dextly show.

Thunder. An Apparition of an armed Head rises.

Macb. Tell me, thou unknown power,—

1 Witch. He knows thy thought;
Hear his speech, but say thou nought.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth! beware Macduff;

Beware the thane of Fife.—Dismiss me :—Enough.

[Descends].

Macb. What'er thou art, for thy good caution, thanks;
Thou hast harp'd my fear aright :—But one word more :—
1 Witch. He will not be commanded: Here's another,
More potent than the first.

Thunder. An Apparition of a bloody Child rises.

App. Macbeth! Macbeth! Macbeth!—

Macb. Had I three ears, I 'd hear thee.

App. Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The power of man, for none of woman born Shall harm Macbeth.

[Descends].

Macb. Then live, Macduff: What need I fear of thee?

But yet I 'll make assurance double sure,
And take a bond of fate: thou shalt not live;
That I may tell pale-hearted fear it lies,
And sleep in spite of thunder.—What is this,

Thunder. An Apparition of a Child crowned, with a Tree in his Hand, rises.

That rises like the issue of a king;
And wears upon his baby brow the round
And top of sovereignty?

All. Listen, but speak not to 't.

App. Be lion-mettled, proud; and take no care
Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are:
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam wood to high Dunsinane hill
Shall come against him.

[Descends].

Macb. That will never be;
Who can impress the forest; bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? sweet bodements! good!
Rebellious head, rise never, till the wood
Of Birnam rise, and our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature; pay his breath
To time, and mortal custom.—Yet my heart
Thrills to know one thing: Tell me, (if your art
Can tell so much,) shall Banquo's issue ever Reign in this kingdom?

All. Seek to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied: deny me this,
And an eternal curse fall on you! Let me know :—
Why sinks that caldron? and what noise<sup>a</sup> is this?

[Hautboys].

1 Witch. Show! 2 Witch. Show! 3 Witch. Show!

All. Show his eyes, and grieve his heart;
Come like shadows, so depart.

Eight Kings appear, and pass over the Stage in order;
the last with a Glass in his hand; Banquo following.

Macb. Thou art too like the spirit of Banquo; down!
Thy crown does sear mine eyeballs :—And thy hair,<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Noise.—This is the music of the hautboys, the word noise being synonymous with the sound of instruments. It was so little understood, even by John Kemble, that under his management a shrill was here heard.

<sup>b</sup> Hair.—This is the original word; but the modern reading is air. Monck Mason acutely defends the old reading: "It implies that their hair was of the same colour, which is more likely to mark a family likeness than the air, which depends on habit."

Thou other ge
A third is lik
Why do you
What! will t
Another yet?
And yet the
Which shows
That two-fold
Horrible sigh
For the blood And points a 1 Witch.
Stands Macb
Come, sisters
And show th
I 'll charm t
While you p
That this gre
Our duties d

Macb. W hou Stand aye a Come in, wi

Len.

Macb. Sa

Len.

Macb. Ca

Len.

Macb. In

And damn't

The gallopi

Len. T i

Macduff is ;

Macb.

Len. Ay.

Macb. T i

The flighty

Unless the c

The very fir

The firstlin

To crown m

The castle c

Seize upon

His wife, hi

That trace I

This deed I

But no mor

Come, bring

SCENE I

Enter 1

Lady Mac

lan

Yo

Res.

L. Mac

His flight

Our fears d

Res.

Whether it w

L. Macd.

bab

His mansion,

From whence

He wants the

The most din

Her young on

All is the fear

As little is the

So runs again

<sup>a</sup> Black-Letter

meaning, begim

My dearest coz,
 I myself: But, for your husband,
 I dare not speak much further:
 Times, when we are traitors,
 Kill ourselves; when we hold rumour
 True; yet know not what we fear;
 Wild and violent sea,
 Move.—I take my leave of you:
 But I'll be here again:
 First will cease, or else climb upward
 Ere before.—My pretty cousin,
 Adieu!

Heard he is, and yet he's fatherless.
 So much a fool, should I stay longer,
 Disgrace, and your discomfort:
 Adieu.

[Exit ROSS.]
 Ah, your father's dead;
 How do you now? How will you live?
 Do, mother.

What, with worms and flies?
 What I get, I mean; and so do they.
 Or bird! thou'ldst never fear the net,
 The gin
 Would I, mother? Poor birds they are For.

Dead, for all your saying.
 He is dead; how wilt thou do for a

How will you do for a husband?
 Yes, I can buy me twenty at any market.
 You'll buy 'em to sell again.
 You speak't with all thy wit; and yet,

For thee.
 A father a traitor, mother?
 That he was.

A traitor?
 Yes, one that swears and lies.
 All traitors that do so?
 Every one that does so is a traitor, and

That they all be hanged that swear and lie?
 Every one.

Must hang them?
 Yes, the honest men.
 Liars and swearers are fools: for there
 Are earers enough to beat the honest men,
 And m.

God help thee, poor monkey! But Not for a father?
 Ere dead, you'd weep for him: if you
 Ere a good sign that I should quickly Prattle.

Prattler! how thou talkest!

Enter a Messenger.

Out, fair dame! I am not to you known,
 'Tis my state of honour I am perfect.
 My anger does approach you nearly:
 I am a homely man's advice,

And hence, with your little ones.
 I am, methinks, I am too savage;
 You were fell cruelty,
 To show your person. Heaven preserve you!
 Adieu.

[Exit Messenger.]
 Whither should I fly?
 O, I remember now
 Myself; where, to do harm,
 I go to do good, sometime,
 I am wondrous folly: why then, alas!
 O womanly defence,
 What are these faces?

Enter Murderers.

Mur. Where is your husband?
 L. Macd. I hope, in no place so unsanctified,
 Where such as thou mayst find him.

Mur. He's a traitor.
 Son. Thou liest, thou shag-eared villain.

Mur. What, you egg! [Stabbing him]
 Young fry of treachery!

Son. He has kill'd me, mother:
 Run away, I pray you. [Dies] [Exit LADY MACDUFF, crying "Murder," and pursued by the Murderers.]

SCENE III.—England. A Room in the King's Palace.

Enter MALCOLM and MACDUFF.

Mal. Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there Weep our sad bosoms empty.

Macd. Let us rather,
 Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men,
 Bestride our down-fall'n birthdom: Each new morn,
 New widows howl; new orphans cry; new sorrow
 Strike heaven on the face, that it resounds
 As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like syllable of doilour.

Mal. What I believe I'll wail,
 What know, believe; and, what I can redress,
 As I shall find the time to friend, I will.
 What you have spoke, it may be so, perchance.
 This tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues,
 Was once thought honest; you have lov'd him well;
 He hath not touch'd you yet. I am young, but something

You may deserve of him through me; and wisdom
 To offer up a weak, poor innocent lamb,
 To appease an angry God.

Macd. I am not treacherous.
 Mal. But Macbeth is.

A good and virtuous nature may recoil,
 In an imperial charge. But I shall crave your pardon;
 That which you are my thoughts cannot transjose:
 Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell:
 Though all things foul would wear the brows of grace,
 Yet grace must still look so.

Macd. I have lost my hopes.
 Mal. Perchance, even there, where I did find my doubts.

Why in that rawness left you wife and child,
 (Those precious motives, those strong knots of love, Without leave-taking?)—I pray you,
 Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
 But mine own safeties:—You may be rightly just,
 Whatever I shall think.

Macd. Bleed, bleed, poor country!
 Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure,
 For goodness dares not check thee! wear thou thy wrongs,
 The title is affeer'd.—Fare thee well, lord:
 I would not be the villain that thou think'st
 For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
 And the rich East to boot.

Mal. Be not offended;
 I speak not as in absolute fear of you.
 I think, our country sinks beneath the yoke;
 It weeps, it bleeds; and each new day a gash
 Is added to her wounds: I think, withal,
 There would be hands uplifted in my right;
 And here, from gracious England, have I o'er
 Of goodly thousands: But, for all this,
 When I shall tread upon the tyrant's head,

* Shag-eared.—This should be probably shag hair'd, a form of abuse found in old plays, and even in law reports.

* The title is affeer'd—confirmed—admitted—as a verdict decide upon a claim, and terminate a dispute.

Or wear it on my sword, yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer, and more sundry ways than ever,
By him that shall succeed.

Macd. What should he be?

Mal. It is myself I mean: in whom I know
All the particulars of vice so grafted,
That, when they shall be open'd, black Macbeth
Will seem as pure as snow; and the poor state Esteem him as a lamb, being compared With my confineless harms.

Macd. Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd
In evils, to you Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of every sin
That has a name: But there's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness: your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust; and my desire
All continent impediments would o'erbear,
That did oppose my will: Better Macbeth,
Than such a one to reign.

Macd. Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
The untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. But fear not yet
To take upon you what is yours: you may Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoodwink.
We have willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you, to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves,
Finding it so inclin'd.

Mal. With this there grows,
In my most ill-compos'd affection, such
A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
Desire his jewels, and this other's house:
And my more-having would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more; that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good, and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth.

Macd. This avarice Sticks deeper; grows with more pernicious root Than summer-seeming lust; and it hath been
The sword of our slain kings: Yet do not fear;
Scotland hath foysons* to fill up your will,
Of your mere own: All these are portable,
With other graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I have none: The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them; but abound
In the division of each several crime, Acting it many ways. Nay, had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Upbraid the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Macd. O Scotland! Scotland!

Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak:
I am as I have spoken.

Macd. Fit to govern!
No, not to live.—O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant bloody-sceptre'd,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accurs'd,
And does blaspheme his breed?—Thy royal father
Was a most sainted king: the queen, that bore thee,
Off her upon her knees than on her feet,

* Foysons—abundant provision.

Died every day she lived. Fare thee well!
These evils thou repeat'st upon thyself
Have banish'd me from Scotland.—O, my bow Thy hope ends here!

Mal. Macduff, this noble man
Child of integrity, bath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thought
To thy good truth and honour. Devilish Mac
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his power; and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste: But God above Deal between thee and me! for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet Unknown to woman; never was forsworn;
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith; would not betray
The devil to his fellow; and delight
No less in truth, than life: my first false speak
Was this upon myself: What I am truly,
Is thine, and my poor country's, to command:
Whither, indeed, before thy here-approach,
Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at a point,* was setting forth:
Now we'll together: And the chance, of goods
Be like our warranted quarrel! Why are you
Macd. Such welcome and unwelcome things
'T is hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor.

Mal. Well; more anon.—Comes the king pray you?

Doct. Ay, sir: there are a crew of wretched
That stay his cure: their malady convinces
The great assay of art; but, at his touch,
Such sanctity hath heaven given his hand,
They presently amend.

Mal. I thank you, doctor.

Macd. What 's the disease he means? [Exit]

Mal. 'T is call'd
A most miraculous work in this good king:
Which often, since my here-remain in England,
I have seen him do. How he solicits heaven,
Himself best knows: but strangely-visited people
All swoln and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye,
The mere despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers: and 't is spoken,
To the succeeding royalty he leaves
The healing benediction. With this strange
He hath a heavenly gift of prophecy;
And sundry blessings hang about his throne,
That speak him full of grace.

Enter ROSS.

Macd. See, who comes
Mal. My countryman; but yet I know him

Macd. My ever-gentle cousin, welcome hither!

Mal. I know him now: Good God, betimes!
The means that make us strangers!

Rosse. Sir, Amen.

Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosse. Alas, poor Almost afraid to know itself! It cannot Be call'd our mother, but our grave: where not
But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile;
Where sighs, and groans, and shrieks that rent the air
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow

* Is it not that the "ten thousand warlike men" were assembled "at a point?"—at a particular spot where it collected—a point of space.

stacy; the dead man's knell ask'd, for who; and good men's lives
 the flowers in their caps, they sicken.

O, relation,
 yet too true!
 't is the newest grief?
 at of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
 seems a new one.

How does my wife?
 by, well.

And all my children?
 Well too.
 e tyrant has not batter'd at their peace?
 they were well at peace, when I did ve them.

not a niggard of your speech: How goes it?
 hen I came hither to transport the tidings,
 e heavily borne, there ran a rumour rthy fellows that were out;
 a my belief witness'd the rather,
 w the tyrant's power a-foot:
 me of help; your eye in Scotland
 e soldiers, make our women fight dire distresses.

Be 't their comfort, ng thither: gracious England hath Seward, and ten thousand men; d a better soldier, none
 ndom gives out.

'Would I could answer with the like! But I have words be howl'd out in the desert air, ag should not latch them.*

What concern they?
 single breast?

No mind that 's honest
 res some woe; though the main part ou alone.

If it be mine,
 rom me, quickly let me have it.
 t not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
 possess them with the heaviest sound,
 t they heard.

Macd. Humph! I guess at it.
Rosse. Your castle is surpris'd; your wife, and babes, Savagely slaughter'd: to relate the manner,
 Were, on the quarry of these murder'd deer,
 To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful heaven!—
 What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows;
 Give sorrow words: the grief that does not speak
 Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break.

Macd. My children too?
Rosse. Wife, children, servants, all that could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence! My wife kill'd too?

Rosse. I have said.
Mal. Be comforted:

Let 's make us med'cines of our great revenge,
 To cure this deadly grief.

Macd. He has no children.—All my pretty ones?
 Did you say, all?—O, hell-kite!—All?
 What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
 At one fell swoop?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.
Macd. I shall do so;

But I must also feel it as a man:
 I cannot but remember such things were,
 That were most precious to me.—Did heaven look on,
 And would not take their part? Sinful Macdoff,
 They were all struck for thee! naught that I am,
 Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
 Fell slaughter on their souls: Heaven rest them now!

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword: let grief Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macd. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes,
 And braggart with my tongue!—But gentle heavens,
 Cut short all intermission; front to front,
 Bring thou this fiend of Scotland, and myself;
 Within my sword's length set him; if he 'scape,
 Heaven forgive him too!

Mal. This time * goes manly.
 Come, go we to the king; our power is ready;
 Our lack is nothing but our leave: Macbeth
 Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you may;
 The night is long that never finds the day. [Exeunt.]

ACT V.

1.—Dumainane. A Room in the Castle.
 or of Physic, and a waiting Gentlewoman.
 ve two nights watched with you, but can rath in your report. When was it she last ee his majesty went into the field, I have from her bed, throw her nightgown upon her closet, take forth paper, fold it, write it, afterwards seal it, and again return to this while in a most fast sleep.

reat perturbation in nature! to receive at slit of sleep, and do the effects of watching.
 smbery agitation, besides her walking and performances, what, at any time, have you

d, sir, which I will not report after her.
 may, to me; and 't is most meet you should.
 ther to you, nor any one; having no wit-n my speech.

* LADY MACBETH, with a taper.
 she comes! This is her very guise; and, fast asleep. Observe her: stand close.

* Latch them—lay hold of them

Doct. How came she by that light?
Gent. Why, it stood by her: she has light by her continually; 't is her command.

Doct. You see, her eyes are open.
Gent. Ay, but their sense is shut.

Doct. What is it she does now? Look how she rubs her hands.

Gent. It is an accustomed action with her, to seem thus washing her hands. I have known her continue in this a quarter of an hour.

Lady M. Yet here 's a spot.
Doct. Hark, she speaks: I will set down what comes from her, to satisfy my remembrance the more strongly.

Lady M. Out, damned spot! out, I say!—One;
 Two: Why, then 't is time to do 't:—Hell is murky!
 —Fie, my lord, fie! a soldier, and afeard? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?—Yet who would have thought the old man to have had so much blood in him!

Doct. Do you mark that?
Lady M. The thane of Fife had a wife; Where is * Time.—Rowe changed this to time. Gifford has shown, in a note on Massinger, that the two words were once synonymous in a musical acceptation; and that time was the more ancient and common term.

she now?—What, will these hands ne'er be clean?—
No more o' that, my lord, no more o' that: you mar all with this starting.

Doct. Go to, go to; you have known what you should not.

Gent. She has spoke what she should not, I am sure of that: Heaven knows what she has known.

Lady M. Here 's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand.
Oh! oh! oh!

Doct. What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charged.

Gent. I would not have such a heart in my bosom,
for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well,—

Gent. Pray God, it be, sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practice: Yet I have known those which have walked in their sleep who have died holily in their beds.

Lady M. Wash your hands, put on your night-gown;
look not so pale:—I tell you yet again, Banquo's buried; he cannot come out on 's grave.

Doct. Even so!

Lady M. To bed, to bed; there 's knocking at the gate. Come, come, come, come, give me your hand.
What's done cannot be undone; To bed, to bed, to bed.

[Exit LADY MACBETH.]

Doct. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foul whisperings are abroad: Unnatural deeds
Do breed unnatural troubles: Infected minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.
More needs she the divine than the physician.
God, God, forgive us all! Look after her;
Remove from her the means of all annoyance,
And still keep eyes upon her.—So, good night:
My mind she has mated,<sup>a</sup> and amaz'd my sight:
I think, but dare not speak.

Gent. Good night, good doctor.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The Country near Dunsinane.

Enter, with drum and colours, MENTETH, CATHNESS, ANGUS, LENOX, and Soldiers.

Ment. The English power is near, led on by Malcolm,
His uncle Siward, and the good Macduff.
Revenge burn in them: for their dear causes
Would, to the bleeding and the grim alarm, Excite the mortified man.<sup>b</sup>

Ang. Near Birnam wood
Shall we well meet them; that way are they coming.

Cath. Who knows if Donalbain be with his brother?

Len. For certain, sir, he is not: I have a file
Of all the gentry: there is Siward's son,
And many unrough youths, that even now
Protest their first of manhood.

Ment. What does the tyrant?

Cath. Great Dunsinane he strongly fortifies:
Some say he 's mad; others, that lesser hate him,
Do call it valiant fury: but, for certain,
He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of rule.

Ang. Now does he feel
His secret murders sticking on his hands;
Now minutely revolts upbraid his faith-breach;
Those he commands move only in command,
Nothing in love: now does he feel his title
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief.

<sup>a</sup> Mated—amated—dismayed.
<sup>b</sup> Mortified man.—We think, with Warburton, that the poet here means a hermit or religious ascetic,—one indifferent to the concerns of the world, but who would be excited to fight by such
"uses" of revenge as Macduff comes with.

Ment. Who then shall bla
His pester'd senses to recoil, and start
When all that is within him does conde
Itself, for being there?

Cath. Well, march we
To give obedience where 't is truly ow'd
Meet we the medicine of the sickly wea
And with him pour we, in our country's Each drop of us.

Len. Or so much as it needs,
To dew the sovereign flower, and dawn
Make we our march towards Birnam.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Dunsinane. A Room.

Enter MACBETH, DOCTOR, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more reports; let Till Birnam wood remove to Dunsinane
I cannot taint with fear. What 's the
Was he not born of woman? The sp
All mortal consequences have pronounc
"Fear not, Macbeth; no man that 's be Shall e'er have power upon thee."
thanes,

And mingle with the English epicures:
The mind I sway by, and the heart I Shall never sagg<sup>a</sup> with doubt, nor shake

Enter a Servant.

The devil damn thee black, thou cream-
Where got'st thou that goose look?

Serv. There is ten thousand—

Macb. Geese, y

Serv.

Macb. Go, prick thy face, and over-ru Thou lily-liver'd boy. What soldiers, p Death of thy soul! those linen cheeks of
Are counsellors to fear. What soldiers, y

Serv. The English force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence.—Seyton
at heart,

When I behold—Seyton, I say!—This p
Will cheer me ever, or dis-seat me now.
I have liv'd long enough: my way of life
Is fallen into the sear, the yellow leaf;
And that which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friend
I must not look to have; but, in their stead,
Curses not loud, but deep, mouth-honour, b
Which the poor heart would fain deny, and Seyton!—

Enter SEYTON.

Sey. What 's your gracious pleasure?

Macb. What

Sey. All is confirm'd, my lord, which w
Macb. I'll fight, till from my bones my Give me my armour.

Sey. 'T is not needful yet.

Macb. I'll put it on.

Send out more horses, skir<sup>c</sup> the country ro
Hang those that talk of fear.—Give me mine
How does your patient, doctor?

Doct. Not so sick,
As she is troubled with thick-coming fancies
That keep her from her rest.

Macb. Cure her of that:
Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd:
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow;
Raze out the written troubles of the brain;
And, with some sweet oblivious antidote,

<sup>a</sup> Sagg—sink down.

<sup>b</sup> Gifford says, "sear of life is neither more nor simple periphrasis for life."

<sup>c</sup> Skir—scur—scur.

tuff'd beam of that perilous staff,
is upon the heart?

Therein the patient
er to himself.

row physic to the dogs, I'll none of it.—
ine armour on; give me my staff:—
out.—Doctor, the thanes fly from me:—
spatch:—If thou couldst, doctor, cast
my land, find her disease,
to a sound and pristine health,
see to the very echo,
and again.—Pull 't off, I say.—
na,* or what purgative drug, English hence?—Hearest thou of good lord; your royal preparation something.

Bring it after me,—
I'm afraid of death and bane, rest come to Dunsinane. [Exit.
I from Dunsinane away and clear,
should hardly draw me here. [Exit.

—Country near Dunsinane. A Wood in view.

drum and colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD SON, MACDUFF, MENTETH, CATHNESS, ENOX, ROSS, and Soldiers, marching.

ins, I hope the days are near at hand,
its will be safe.

We doubt it nothing.
t wood is this before us?

The wood of Birnam.
every soldier hew him down a bough,
efore him; thereby shall we shadow of our host, and make discovery of us.

It shall be done.
earn no other, but the confident tyrant Dunsinane, and will endure own before 't.

'T is his main hope:
re is advantage to be given,
nd less<sup>b</sup> have given him the revolt;
ve with him but constrained things,
are absent too.

Let our just censures ne event, and put we on oldiership.

The time approaches,
h due decision make us know
ll say we have, and what we owe.
culative their unsure hopes relate;
sue strokes must arbitrate:
ch advance the war. [Exeunt, marching.

V.—Dunsinane. Within the Castle.

drums and colours, MACBETH, SETON, and Soldiers.

ng out our banners on the outward walls;
ll "They come:" Our castle's strength siege to scorn: here let them lie, and the ague, eat them up:
it forc'd with those that should be ours,
ve met them darestful, beard to beard,
m backward home. What is that noise?

[A cry within, of women.
the cry of women, my good lord.
ive almost forgot the taste of fears:
e are not sure about this word. The original less.—Shakespeare uses these words, as Chaucer

e them, for greater and less.

The time has been, my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse, and stir
As life were in 't: I have suppd full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaught'rous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.—Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The queen, my lord, is dead.
Macb. She should have died hereafter;
There would have been a time for such a word.—
To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty<sup>a</sup> death. Out, out, brief candle!
Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
And then is heard no more: it is a tale
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing.—

Enter a Messenger.

Thou com'st to use thy tongue; thy story quickly.

Mess. Gracious my lord,
I should report that which I saw I saw,
But know not how to do it.

Macb. Well, say, sir.
Mess. As I did stand my watch upon the hill,
I look'd toward Birnam, and, anon, methought,
The wood began to move.

Macb. Liar, and slave!
[Striking him.

Mess. Let me endure your wrath if 't be not so;
Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say, a moving grove.

Macb. If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling thee: if thy speech be sooth,
I care not if thou dost for me as much.—
I pull in resolution;<sup>b</sup> and begin

To doubt the equivocation of the fiend,
That lies like truth: "Fear not, till Birnam wood
Do come to Dunsinane;"—and now a wood Comes toward Dunsinane.—Arm, arm, and out!—
If this which he avouches does appear,
There is nor flying hence, nor tarrying here
I'gin to be a-weary of the sun,
And wish the estate o' the world were now undone.—
Ring the alarum-bell:—Blow wind! come wrack!
At least we'll die with harness on our back. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—The same. A Plain before the Castle.

Enter, with drums and colours, MALCOLM, old SIWARD, MACDUFF, &c., and their Army, with boughs.

Mal. Now, near enough; your leavy screens throw down,
And show like those you are:—You, worthy uncle,
Shall, with my cousin, your right noble son,
Lead our first battle: worthy Macduff, and we,
Shall take upon us what else remains to do,
According to our order.

Siw. Fare you well.—
Do we but find the tyrant's power to-night,
Let us be beaten if we cannot fight.

<sup>a</sup> Dusty.—Dance has the following valuable illustration of the passage: "Perhaps no quotation can be better calculated to show the propriety of this epithet than the following grand lines in 'The Vision of Pierce Plowman,' a work which Soak-spear might have seen:—

'Death came drivyng after, and all to dust pashed Kynge and kayser, knyghtes and popes.'
<sup>b</sup> Monek Mason gives an illustration from Fletcher, which explains the use of pull in:—

"All my spirits
As if they had heard my passing bell go for me,
Fall in their powers, and give me up to destiny."

Macd. Make all our trumpets speak; give them all breath,
Those clamorous harbingers of blood and death.

[Exeunt. Alarums continued.]

SCENE VII.—The same. Another part of the Plain.

Enter MACBETH.

Macb. They have tied me to a stake; I cannot fly,
But, bear-like, I must fight the course.—What's he
That was not born of woman? Such a one Am I to fear, or none.

Enter Young SIWARD.

Yo. Sio. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

Yo. Sio. No; though thou call'st thyself a hotter name
Than any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Yo. Sio. The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.

Macb. No, nor more fearful.

Yo. Sio. Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword
I'll prove the lie thou speak'st.

[They fight, and Young SIWARD is slain.]

Macb. Thou wast born of woman.—
But swords I smile at, weapons laugh to scorn, Brandish'd by man that's of a woman born. [Exit.]

Alarums. Enter MACDUFF.

Macd. That way the noise is:—Tyrant, show thy face:
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still.
I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves; either thou, Macbeth,
Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheathe again undeeded. There thou shouldst be;
By this great clatter, one of greatest note
Seems bruted. Let me find him, fortune!
And more I beg not. [Exit. Alarum.]

Enter MALCOLM and Old SIWARD.

Sio. This way, my lord;—the castle's gently
render'd:

The tyrant's people on both sides do fight;
The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do.

Mal. We have met with foes
That strike beside us.

Sio. Enter, sir, the castle. [Exeunt. Alarum.]

Re-enter MACBETH.

Macb. Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On mine own sword? Whiles I see lives, the gashes
Do better upon them.

Re-enter MACDUFF.

Macd. Turn, bell-hound, turn.

Macb. Of all men else I have avoided thee:
But get thee back, my soul is too much charg'd
With blood of thine already.

Macd. I have no words,
My voice is in my sword; thou bloodier villain
Than terms can give thee out. [They fight.]

Macb. Thou lovest labour:
As easy mayst thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed:
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable crests;
I bear a charmed life, which must not yield
To one of woman born.

Macd. Despair thy charm;
And let the angel whom thou still hast serv'd
Tell thee, Macduff was from his mother's womb Untimely ripp'd.

Macb. Accurs'd be that tongue that tells me so,

For it hath cow'd my better part of man!
And be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense;
That keep the word of promise to our ear,
And break it to our hope.—I'll not fight with thee.
Macd. Then yield thee, coward,
And live to be the show and gaze of the time.
We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole; and underwrit,
"Here may you see the tyrant."

Macb. I will not yield,
To kiss the ground before young Malcolm's feet,
And to be baited with the rabble's curse.
Though Birnam wood be come to Dunsinane,
And thou oppos'd, being of no woman born,
Yet I will try the last: Before my body
I throw my warlike shield: lay on, Macduff;
And damn'd be him that first cries "Hold, enough!"

Retreat. Flourish. Re-enter, with drum and pipe, MALCOLM, Old SIWARD, ROSSE, LENOX, CATHERNESS, MENTETH, and Soldiers.

Mal. I would the friends we miss were safe;
Sio. Some must go off; and yet, by these I see
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduff is missing, and your noble son.
Rosse. Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he died.

Sio. Then he is dead?

Rosse. Ay, and brought off the field: your sorrow
Must not be measur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Sio. Had he his hurts before?

Rosse: Ay, on the front.

Sio. Why, then, God's soldier

Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death:
And so his knell is knoll'd.

Mal. He's worth more sons
And that I'll spend for him.

Sio. He's worth no more.
They say, he parted well, and paid his shroud;
And so, God be with him!—Here comes news of

Re-enter MACDUFF, with MACBETH's head.

Macd. Hail, king! for so thou art: behold, stands

The usurper's curs'd head: the time is free;
I see thee compass'd with thy kingdom's pearl,
That speak my salutation in their minds;
Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,— Hail, king of Scotland!

All. Hail, king of Scotland! [Flourish.]

Mal. We shall not spend a large expense of Before we reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you. My thanes and I
Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland
In such an honour nam'd. What's more to do,
Which would be plant'd newly with the time,—
As calling home our exil'd friends abroad
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny;
Producing forth the cruel ministers
Of this dead butcher, and his fiend-like queen,
Who, as 't is thought, by self and violent hands
Took off her life;—this, and what needful else
That calls upon us, by the grace of Grace,
We will perform in measure, time, and place:
So thanks to all at once, and to each one,
Whom we invite to see us crown'd at Scone.

[Flourish.]

TIMON
OF ATHENS.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

'THE Life of Tymon of Athens' was first published in the folio collection of 1623. The text, in this first edition, has no division into acts and scenes. We have reason to believe that, with a few exceptions, it is accurately printed from the copy which was in the possession of Henninge and Condell; and we have judged it important to follow that copy with very slight variations. In our fuller editions we have entered into a minute examination of this play, for the purpose of expressing our belief that it was founded by Shakspeare upon some older play, of which much has been retained; and that our poet's hand can only be traced with certainty in those scenes in which Timon appears.

The Timon of Shakspeare is not the Timon of the popular stories of Shakspeare's day. The 28th novel of 'The Palace of Pleasure' has for its title "Of the strange and beastly nature of Timon of Athens, enemy to mankind." According to this authority, "he was a man but by shape only"—he lived "a beastly and churlish life." Neither was the Timon of Plutarch the Timon of Shakspeare. The Greek biographer, indeed, tells us, that he was angry with all men, and would trust no man, "for the unthankfulness of those he had done good unto, and whom he took to be his friends;" but that he was represented as "a viper and malicious man unto mankind, to shun all other men's companies but the company of young Alcibiades, a bold and insolent youth." The Timon of Plutarch, and of the popular stories of Shakspeare's time, was little different from the ordinary cynic. The Timon of Shakspeare is in many respects essentially different from any model with which we are acquainted, but it approaches nearer, as Mr Skottowe first observed, to the Timon of Lucian than the commentators have pointed out. The character of Shakspeare's misanthrope presents one of the most striking creations of his originality.

The vices of Shakspeare's Timon are not the vices of a sensualist. It is true that his offices have been oppressed with riotous feeders,—that his vaults have wept with drunken spilt of wine,—that every room

"Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy."

But he has nothing selfish in the enjoyment of his prodigality and his magnificence. He himself truly expresses the weakness as well as the beauty of his own character: "Why, I have often wished myself poorer, that I might come nearer to you. We are born to do benefits, and what better or properer can we call our own, than the riches of our friends? O, what a precious comfort 't is, to have so many, like brothers, commanding one another's fortunes!" Charles Lamb, in his contrast between 'Timon of Athens' and Hogarth's 'Rake's Progress,' has scarcely done justice to Timon: "The wild course of riot and extravagance, ending in the one with driving the Prodigal from the society of men into the solitude of the deserts; and, in the other, with conducting Hogarth's Rake through his several stages of dissipation into the still more complete desolations of the mad-house, in the play and in the picture are described with almost equal force and nature." Hogarth's Rake is all sensuality and selfishness; Timon is essentially high-minded and generous: he truly says, in the first chill of his fortunes—

"No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart, Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given."

In his splendid speech to Apemantus in the fourth act, he distinctly proclaims, that in the weakness with which he had lavished his fortunes upon the unworthy, he had not pampered his own passions:—

"Hadst thou, like us, from our first swath, proceed'd
The sweet degrees that this brief world affords
To such as may the passive drugs of it
Freely command, thou wouldest have plung'd thyself
In general riot; melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust; and never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd
The sugar'd game before thee. But myself,
Who had the world as my confectionary;
The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men
At duty, more than I could frame employment:
That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves
Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush
Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare
For every storm that blows."

The all-absorbing defect of Timon—the root of those generous vices which wear the garb of virtue—is the entire want of discrimination (by which he is also characterized in Lucian's dialogue). Shakspeare has seized upon this point, and held firmly to it. He releases Ventilius from prison,—he bestows an estate upon his servant,—he lavishes jewels upon all the dependants who crowd his board. That universal philanthropy, of which the most selfish men sometimes talk, is in Timon an active principle; but let it be observed that he has no preferences—a most remarkable example of the profound sagacity of Shakspeare. Had he loved a single human being with that intensity which constitutes affection in the relation of the sexes, and friendship in the relation of man to man, he would have been exempt from that unjudging lavishness which was necessary to satisfy his morbid craving for human sympathy.

With this key to Timon's character, it appears to us that we may properly understand the "general and exceptless rashness" of his misanthropy. The only relations in which he stood to mankind are utterly destroyed. In lavishing his wealth as if it were a common property, he had believed that the same common property would flow back to him in his hour of adversity. "O, you gods, think I, what need we have any friends, if we should never have need of them? they were the most needless creatures living, should we not have use for them: and would most resemble some instruments hung up in cases, that keep their sounds to themselves." His false confidence is at once, and irreparably, destroyed. If Timon had possessed one friend with whom he could have interchanged confidence upon equal terms, he would have been saved from his fall, and certainly from his misanthropy.

TIMON OF ATHENS.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

TIMON, a noble Athenian.
Act I. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 4;
Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 3. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2.

FLAMINIUS, a Lord, and a flatterer of Timon.
Appears, Act I. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 2.

FLAVIUS, a Lord, and a flatterer of Timon.
Appears, Act I. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1.

FLAVIUS, a Lord, and a flatterer of Timon.
Appears, Act I. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 3.

IDIUS, one of Timon's false friends.
Appears, Act I. sc. 2.

EMANTUS, a churlish philosopher.
Act I. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2. Act IV. sc. 3.

ALCIBIADES, an Athenian general.
Act I. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 5.
Act IV. sc. 3. Act V. sc. 5.

FLAVIUS, steward to Timon.
Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 4. Act IV.
sc. 2; sc. 3. Act V. sc. 2.

FLAMINIUS, servant to Timon.
Appears, Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1; sc. 4.

LUCILIUS, servant to Timon.
Appears, Act I. sc. 1.

SERVILIUS, servant to Timon.
Appears, Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 2; sc. 4.

PHRYNIA, servant to Timon's creditors.
Appears, Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2.

PHRYNIA, servant to Timon's creditors.
Appears, Act III. sc. 4.

PHRYNIA, servant to Timon's creditors.
Appears, Act III. sc. 4.

LUCIUS, servant to Timon's creditors.
Appears, Act III. sc. 4.

HORTENSIVS, servant to Timon's creditors.
Appears, Act III. sc. 4.

Two Servants of Varro, a creditor of Timon.
Appear, Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 4.

A Servant of Isidore, a creditor of Timon.
Appears, Act II. sc. 2.

Cupid and Maskers.
Appear, Act I. sc. 2.

Three Strangers.
Appear, Act III. sc. 2.

Poet.
Appears, Act I. sc. 1. Act V. sc. 1.

Painter
Appears, Act I. sc. 1. Act V. sc. 1.

Jeweller.
Appears, Act I. sc. 1.

Merchant.
Appears, Act I. sc. 1.

An old Athenian.
Appears, Act I. sc. 1.

A Page.
Appears, Act II. sc. 2.

A Fool.
Appears, Act II. sc. 2.

PHRYNIA, a mistress to Alcibiades.
Appears, Act IV. sc. 2.

TIMANDRA, a mistress to Alcibiades.
Appears, Act IV. sc. 2.

Other Lords, Senators, Officers, Soldiers, Banditti, and Attendants.

SCENE.—ATHENS, AND THE WOODS ADJOINING.

ACT I.

I.—Athens. A Hall in Timon's House.

Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and others, at several doors.

Enter Timon.

Timon. I am glad you are well.
Have not seen you long: How goes the world?
Wears, sir, as it grows.

Ay, that 's well known:
Articular rarity? what strange,
If old record not matches? See,
Unto! all these spirits thy power
'd to attend. I know the merchant.
Know them both; th' other 's a jeweller.
't is a worthy lord!

Nay, that 's most fix'd.
Not incomparable man; breath'd, as it were,
Able and continue goodness:

When Hamlet says,
't is the breathing time of day with me,"
is time of habitual exercise, by which his animal fitted for "untirable and continue" exertion.
between this and the habitual exercise of "goodness."
—he exerts, he goes beyond common virtues.

Jew. I have a jewel here.
Mer. O, pray, let 's see 't: For the lord Timon, sir?
Jew. If he will touch the estimate: But, for that—Poet. "When we for recompense have prais'd the vile,
It stains the glory in that happy verse
Which aptly sings the good."
Mer. 'T is a good form. [Looking at the jewel.
Jew. And rich: here is a water, look you.
Pain. You are rapt, sir, in some work, some dedication
To the great lord.
Poet. A thing slipp'd idly from me.
Our poesy is as a gum, which oozes
From whence 't is nourished: The fire i' the flint Shows not till it be struck; our gentle flame
Provokes itself, and, like the current, flies
Each bound it chafes.<sup>b</sup> What have you there?
Pain. A picture, sir.—When comes your book forth?
Poet. Upon the heels of my presentment, sir.
Let 's see your piece.
Pain. 'T is a good piece.

<sup>a</sup> The poet is here supposed to be reading his own performance.

<sup>b</sup> This passage has been considered difficult, but if we receive bound in the sense of boundary, obstacle, the image is tolerably clear.

Poet. So 't is: this comes off well and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable: How this grace Speaks his own standing!<sup>a</sup> what a mental power
This eye shoots forth! how big imagination
Moves in this lip! to the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life.
Here is a touch: Is 't good?

Poet. I 'll say of it,
It tutors nature: artificial strife<sup>b</sup>
Lives in these touches, livelier than life.

Enter certain Senators, and pass over.

Pain. How this lord 's follow'd!

Poet. The senators of Athens:—Happy men!

Pain. Look, more!

Poet. You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors.

I have, in this rough work, shap'd out a man
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hug
With amplest entertainment: My free drift
Halts not particularly, but moves itself
In a wide sea of wax:<sup>c</sup> no levell'd malice Infects one comma in the course I hold;
But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leaving no tract behind.

Pain. How shall I understand you?

Poet. I 'll unbolt<sup>d</sup> to you.
You see how all conditions, how all minds, (As well of glib and slippery creatures, as Of grave and austere quality,) tender down
Their services to lord Timon: his large fortune,
Upon his good and gracious nature hanging,
Subdues and properties to his love and tendance
All sorts of hearts; yea, from the glass-fac'd flatterer
To Apemantus, that few things loves better Than to abhor himself: even he drops down
The knee before him, and returns in peace
Most rich in Timon's nod.

Pain. I saw them speak together.

Poet. Sir, I have upon a high and pleasant hill, Feign'd Fortune to be thron'd: The base o' the mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kinds of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere
To propagate their states: amongst them all,
Whose eyes are on this sovereign lady fix'd,
One do I personate of lord Timon's frame,
Whom Fortune with her ivory hand wafes to her;
Whose present grace to present slaves and servants
Translates his rivals.

Pain. 'T is conceiv'd to scope.
This throne, this Fortune, and this hill, methinks,
With one man beckon'd from the rest below,
Bowing his head against the steepy mount
To climb his happiness, would be well express'd
In our condition.<sup>e</sup>

Poet. Nay, sir, but hear me on:
All those which were his fellows but of late,
(Some better than his value,) on the moment
Follow his strides, his lobbies fill with tendance,
Rain sacrificial whisperings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup, and through him
Drink the free air.<sup>f</sup>

Pain. Ay, marry, what of these?

<sup>a</sup> The commentators have not noticed what appears to us tolerably obvious, that the flattering painter had brought with him a portrait of Timon, in which the grace of the attitude spoke "his own standing,"—the habitual carriage of the original.

<sup>b</sup> Artificial strife—the contest of art with nature.

<sup>c</sup> An allusion to the ancient practice of writing upon waxen tablets with a style.

<sup>d</sup> Unbolt—unfold, explain.

<sup>e</sup> Condition is here used for art.

<sup>f</sup> Drink the free air—live, breathe but through him.

Poet. When Fortune, in her shift and mood,

Spurns down her late belov'd, all his dependants
Which labour'd after him to the mountain's top
Even on their knees and hands, let him slip
Not one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'T is common:

A thousand moral paintings I can show,
That shall demonstrate these quick blows of fate
More pregnantly than words. Yet you do seem
To show lord Timon that mean eyes have seen
The foot above the head.

*Trumpets sound. Enter TIMON, attended;
Vant of VENTIDIUS talking with him.*

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say

Ven. Serv. Ay, my good lord: five talents debt;

His means most short, his creditors most strict
Your honourable letter he desires To those have shut him up; which failing to Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius! Well;
I am not of that feather to shake off
My friend when he must need me. I do know
A gentleman that well deserves a help,
Which he shall have: I 'll pay the debt and

Ven. Serv. Your lordship ever binds him.

Tim. Commend me to him: I will send him
And, being enfranchis'd, bid him come to me
'T is not enough to help the feeble up,
But to support him after.—Fare you well.

Ven. Serv. All happiness to your honour.

Enter an Old Athenian.

Old Ath. Lord Timon, hear me speak.

Tim. Freely, go

Old Ath. Thou hast a servant named Lucius

Tim. I have so: What of him?

Old Ath. Most noble Timon, call the man
thee.

Tim. Attends he here, or no?—Lucilius!

Enter LUCILIUS.

Luc. Here, at your lordship's service.

Old Ath. This fellow here, lord Timon's creature,

By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first have been inclined to thee
And my estate deserves an heir more rais'd
Than one which holds a trencher.

Tim. Well; what

Old Ath. One only daughter have I, no less On whom I may confer what I have got:
The maid is fair, o' the youngest for a bride,
And I have bred her at my dearest cost,
In qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her love; I prithee, noble lord,
Join with me to forbid him her resort;
Myself have spoke in vain.

Tim. The man is honest

Old Ath. Therefore he will be, Timon:
His honesty rewards him in itself,<sup>g</sup>
It must not bear my daughter.

Tim. Does she love

Old Ath. She is young, and apt:
Our own precedent passions do instruct us
What levity 's in youth.

Tim. [To LUCILIUS] Love you the maid?

<sup>g</sup> The following is Coleridge's explanation of the
—"The meaning of the first line the poet himself rather unfolds, in the second. 'The man is honest' and for that very cause, and with no additional motive, he will be so. No man can be justly called is not so for honesty's sake, itself including the price ny good lord, and she accepts of it.

f in her marriage my consent be missing,
s to witness, I will choose n forth the beggars of the world, s her all.

How shall she be endow'd,
d with an equal husband?
hree talents, on the present; in future, all gentleman of mine hath serv'd me long;
ortune I would strain a little,
d in men. Give him thy daughter:
tow, in him I'll counterpoise,
n weigh with her.

Most noble lord,
is your honour, she is his.
and to thee; mine honour on my pro-
-ly I thank your lordship: Never may ortune fall into my keeping,
ow'd to you!

[Exeunt LUCILIUS and Old Athenian.
haste my labour, and long live your lord-
-!
nk you; you shall hear from me anon:
-What have you there, my friend?
-ce of painting, which I do beseech to accept.

Painting is welcome.
s almost the natural man;
nour traffics with man's nature, ide: These pencil'd figures are hey give out. I like your work;
find I like it: wait attendance
further from me.

The gods preserve you!
fare you, gentlemen: Give me your hand s dine together.—Sir, your jewel nder praise.

What, my lord? dispraise?
er satiety of commendations.
y you for 't as 't is extoll'd ow me quite.

My lord, 't is rated
-sell would give: But you well know value, differing in the owners, their masters: believe 't, dear lord,
jewel by the wearing it.
mock'd.
y good lord; he speaks the common
-s,
-speak with him.
who comes here. Will you be chid?

Enter APEMANTUS.
ll bear with your lordship.
He'll spare none.
morrow to thee, gentle Apemantus!
I be gentle, stay thou for thy good mor-

Timon's dog, and these knaves honest.
-ost thou call them knaves? thou know'st
not.
-hey not Athenians?

I repent not.
-ow me, Apemantus.
-I know'st I do; I called thee by thy
-
-art proud, Apemantus.
-othing so much as that I am not like
-n.
-er art going?
-nock out an honest Athenian's brains.
-s a deed thou 't die for.

Apem. Right, if doing nothing be death by the law.
Tim. How likest thou this picture, Apemantus?
Apem. The best, for the innocence.
Tim. Wrought he not well that painted it?
Apem. He wrought better that made the painter;
and yet he 's but a filthy piece of work.

Pain. You are a dog.
Apem. Thy mother 's of my generation: What 's
she, if I be a dog?

Tim. Wilt dine with me, Apemantus?
Apem. No; I eat not lords.
Tim. An thou shouldst, thou 'dst anger ladies.
Apem. O, they eat lords; so they come by great bellies.

Tim. That 's a lascivious apprehension.
Apem. So thou apprehend'st it: Take it for thy la-bour.

Tim. How dost thou like this jewel, Apemantus?
Apem. Not so well as plain-dealing, which will not cost a man a doit.

Tim. What dost thou think 't is worth?
Apem. Not worth my thinking.—How now, poet?
Poet. How now, philosopher?

Apem. Thou liest.
Poet. Art not one?
Apem. Yes.
Poet. Then I lie not.
Apem. Art not a poet?
Poet. Yes.

Apem. Then thou liest: look in thy last work, where thou hast feign'd him a worthy fellow.

Poet. That 's not feign'd, he is so.
Apem. Yes, he is worthy of thee, and to pay thee for thy labour: He that loves to be flattered is worthy o'
the flatterer. Heavens, that I were a lord!

Tim. What wouldst do then, Apemantus?
Apem. Even as Apemantus does now, hate a lord with my heart.

Tim. What, thyself?
Apem. Ay.
Tim. Wherefore?
Apem. That I had no angry wit to be a lord.—Art not thou a merchant?

Mer. Ay, Apemantus.
Apem. Traffic confound thee, if the gods will not!
Mer. If traffic do it, the gods do it.
Apem. Traffic 's thy god, and thy god confound thee!

Trumpets sound. Enter a Servant.
Tim. What trumpet 's that?
Serv. 'T is Alcibiades, and some twenty horse,
All of companionship.

Tim. Pray entertain them; give them guide to us.— [Exeunt some Attendants.
You must needs dine with me:—Go not you hence
Till I have thank'd you; and, when dinner 's done,
Show me this piece.—I am joyful of your sights.

Enter ALCIBIADES, with his company.
Most welcome, sir! [They salute.
Apem. So, so; there!—
Aches contract and starve your supple joints!—
That there should be small love 'mongst these sweet
knaves,

And all this court'sy! The strain of man 's bred out Into baboon and monkey.

Alcib. Sir, you have sav'd my longing, and I feed
Most hungerly on your sight.

Tim. Right welcome, sir.
Ere we depart, we'll share a bounteous time
In different pleasures. Pray you, let us in.

[Exeunt all but APEMANTUS.
Enter Two Lords.
1 Lord. What time a day is 't, Apemantus?

Apem. Time to be honest.

1 Lord. That time serves still.

Apem. The most accursed thou that still omitt'st it.

2 Lord. Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.

Apem. Ay; to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools.

2 Lord. Fare thee well, fare thee well.

Apem. Thou art a fool to bid me farewell twice.

2 Lord. Why, Apemantus?

Apem. Shouldst have kept one to thyself, for I mean to give thee none.

1 Lord. Hang thyself.

Apem. No, I will do nothing at thy bidding; make thy requests to thy friend.

2 Lord. Away, unpeaceable dog, or I'll spurn thee hence.

Apem. I will fly, like a dog, the heels of the ass.

1 Lord. He's opposite to humanity. Come, shall we in, [Exit.

And taste lord Timon's bounty? he outgoes
The very heart of kindness.

2 Lord. He pours it out; Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward: no meed, but he repays
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him,
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance.

1 Lord. The noblest mind he carries,
That ever govern'd man.

2 Lord. Long may he live in fortunes! Shall we in?

1 Lord. I'll keep you company. [Reunt.

SCENE II.—The same. A Room of State in Timon's House.

Hautboys playing loud music. A great banquet served in; FLAVIUS and others attending; then enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, LUCIUS, LUCULLUS, SEMPRONIUS, and other Athenian Senators, with VENTIDIUS, and Attendants. Then comes, dropping after all, APEMANTUS, discontentedly.

Ven. Most honour'd Timon,
It hath pleas'd the gods to remember my father's age,
And call him to long peace.
He is gone happy, and has left me rich:
Then, as in grateful virtue I am bound
To your free heart, I do return those talents, Doubled, with thanks, and service, from whose help
I deriv'd liberty.

Tim. O, by no means,
Honest Ventidius: you mistake my love;
I gave it freely ever; and there's none
Can truly say he gives, if he receives:
If our betters play at that game, we must not dare
To imitate them: Faults that are rich, are fair.

Ven. A noble spirit.

[They all stand ceremoniously looking on TIMON.

Tim. Nay, my lords, ceremony was but devis'd at first
To set a gloss on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recanting goodness, sorry ere 't is shown;
But where there is true friendship, there needs none.
Pray sit; more welcome are ye to my fortunes,
Than my fortunes to me. [They sit.

1 Lord. My lord, we always have confess'd it.

Apem. Ho, ho, confess'd it! hang'd it, have you not?

Tim. O, Apemantus!—you are welcome.

Apem. No, you shall not make me welcome:

I come to have thee thrust me out of doors.

Tim. Fye, thou'rt a churl; you have got a humour
there

Does not become a man, 't is much to blame:—

They say, my lords, ira furor brevis est,

But you'd man's very angry.

Go, let

For he c

Nor is b

Apem

I come t

Tim.

therefore

prithce,

Apem

Ne'er fla

Of men

It grieve

In one n

He chee

I woude

Methink

Good for

There's

Sits next

The brea

Is the re

If I were

Least they

Great m

Tim.

2 Lor

Apem.

Those he

Here's t

Honest w

This, and

Feasts ar

Much go

Tim. (

Alcib.

Tim.

than a di

Alcib.

no meat

such a fe

Apem.

mies ther

me to 'ex

1 Lord

that you express so selves for

Tim. (

themselve

from you have you

you chiefl

you to n

<sup>a</sup> Apem

the 'Tale

<sup>b</sup> Every

alf; and thus far I confirm you. O, you [, what need we have any friends, if we have need of them? they were the most ures living should we ne'er have use for would most resemble sweet instruments ases, that keep their sounds to themselves.
 often wished myself poorer, that I might o you. We are born to do benefits: and r properer can we call our own than the friends? O, what a precious comfort 't is any like brothers, commanding one an-es! O joy, e'en made away ere it can be eyes cannot hold out water, methinks; to ults, I drink to you.
 ou wepest to make them drink, Timon.
 y had the like conception in our eyes,
 instant, like a babe sprung up.
 , ho! I laugh to think that babe a bastard.
 promise you, my lord, you mov'd me
 ch.
 ch!* Tucket sounded.
 it means that trump?—How now?

Enter a Servant.

se you, my lord, there are certain ladies of admittance.
 es? What are their wills?
 e comes with them a forerunner, my lord,
 at office to signify their pleasures.
 y, let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid.

to thee, worthy Timon;—and to all unties taste!—the five best senses thee their patron; and come freely thy plenteous bosom:
 e, touch, smell, pleas'd from thy table
 :
 w come but to feast thine eyes.
 are welcome all; let them have kind ittance.

their welcome. [Exit Cupid.
 u see, my lord, how ample y' are belov'd.

Enter Cupid, with a masque of Ladies as with lutes in their hands, dancing and day, what a sweep of vanity comes this way!

 they are mad women.

is the glory of this life,
 shows to a little oil and root.
 selves fools to disport ourselves;
 r flatteries, to drink those men,
 ge we void it up again,
 as spite and envy.

it 's not depraved, or depraves?
 t bears not one spurn to their graves la' gift?
 those that dance before me now,
 y stamp upon me: It has been done:
 r doors against a setting sun.

*ise from table, with much adorning of id, to show their loves, each singles out
 , and all dance, men with women, a lofty co to the hautboys, and cease.*

have done our pleasures much grace, fair
 es,
 ion on our entertainment,
 t half so beautiful and kind;
 ed worth unto 't, and lustre,
 'd me with mine own device;
 you for it.

an ironic and contemptuous expression.

1 Lady. My lord, you 'ake us even at the best.

Apem. 'Faith, for the worst is filthy; and would not hold taking, I doubt me.

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet
 Attends you: please you to dispose yourselves.

All Lad. Most thankfully, my lord.
 [Exeunt Cupid and Ladies.]

Tim. Flavius!

Flav. My lord.

Tim. The little casket bring me hither.

Flav. Yes, my lord.—More jewels yet!

There is no crossing him in his humour; [Aside.
 Else I should tell him,—Well,—i' faith, I should,
 When all 's spent, he'd be cross'd then, an he could.
 'T is pity bounty had not eyes behind;
 That man might ne'er be wretched for his mind.

[Exit, and returns with the casket]

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Serv. Here, my lord, in readiness.

2 Lord. Our horses.

Tim. O my friends,

I have one word to say to you;—Look you, my good
 lord,

I must entreat you, honour me so much,
 As to advance this jewel; accept it, and wear it,
 Kind my lord.

1 Lord. I am so far already in your gifts,—

All. So are we all.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord, there are certain nobles of the senate
 Newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairly welcome.

Flav. I beseech your honour, Vouchsafe me a word; it does concern you near.

Tim. Near? why then another time I'll hear thee:
 I prithee, let 's be provided to show them entertainment.

Flav. I scarce know how. [Aside.]

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. May it please your honour, the lord Lucius,
 Out of his free love, hath presented to you
 Four milk-white horses, trapp'd in silver.

Tim. I shall accept them fairly: let the presents

Enter a third Servant.

Be worthily entertain'd.—How now, what news?

3 Serv. Please you, my lord, that honourable gentleman, lord Lucullus, entreats your company to-morrow to hunt with him; and has sent your honour two brace of greyhounds.

Tim. I'll hunt with him; and let them be receiv'd,
 Not without fair reward.

Flav. [Aside.] What will this come to?
 He commands us to provide, and give great gifts,
 And all out of an empty coffer.—

Nor will he know his purse; or yield me this,
 To show him what a beggar his heart is,
 Being of no power to make his wishes good;
 His promises fly so beyond his state,
 That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes for every word;

He is so kind, that he now pays interest for 't;
 His lands put to their books. Well, 'would I were Gently put out of office, before I were forc'd out!

Happier is he that has no friend to feed,
 Than such that do even enemies exceed.

I bleed inwardly for my lord. [Exit.]

Tim. You do yourselves

Much wrong, you hate too much of your own merits:
 Here, my lord, a trille of our love.

3 Lord. With more than common thanks I will receive it.

3 Lord. O, he is the very soul of bounty!
 Tim. And now I remember, my lord, you gave Good words the other day of a hay courser
 I rode on: it is yours, because you lik'd it!
 2 Lord. O, I beseech you, pardon me, my lord, in that.
 Tim. You may take my word, my lord; I know, no man
 Can justly praise, but what he does affect:
 I weigh my friend's affection with mine own;
 I'll tell you true. I'll call to you.
 All Lords. None so welcome.
 Tim. I take all and your several visitations
 So kind to heart, 't is not enough to give;
 Methinks, I could deal kingdoms to my friends,
 And ne'er be weary.—Alcibiades,
 Thou art a soldier, therefore seldom rich;
 It comes in charity to thee: for all thy living
 Is 'mongst the dead; and all the lands thou hast
 Lie in a pitch'd field.
 Alcib. Ay, devil'd land, my lord.
 1 Lord. We are so virtuously bound,— Tim. And so
 Am I to you.
 2 Lord. So infinitely endear'd—

Tim. All to you.—Lights, more lights.
 1 Lord. The best of Honour and fortunes, keep with you, lord Timon.
 Tim. Ready for his friends.
 [Exit ALCIBIADES.]
 Apem. What a co
 Serving of becks, and jutting out of hums!
 I doubt whether their legs be worth the sums That are given for 'em. Friendship's full of Methinks, false hearts should never have sound
 Thus honest fools lay out their wealth on count
 Tim. Now, Apemantus, if thou wert not so I would be good to thee.
 Apem. No, I'll nothing: for if I should too, there would be none left to rail upon then thou wouldst sin the faster. Thou giv'st Timon, I fear me, thou wilt give away thyself shortly.* What need these feasts, pomps, and va
 Tim. Nay, an you begin to rail on society am sworn not to give regard to you. Fare come with better music.
 Apem. So;—Thou'lt not hear me now,— not then. I'll lock thy heaven from thee.
 O, that men's ears should be
 To counsel deaf, but not to flattery!

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Athens. A Room in a Senator's House.

Enter a Senator, with papers in his hand.

Sen. And late, five thousand:<sup>a</sup> to Varro, and to Isidore,
 He owes nine thousand; besides my former sum,
 Which makes it five and twenty.—Still in motion
 Of raging waste? It cannot hold; it will not.
 If I want gold, steal but a beggar's dog
 And give it Timon, why, the dog coins gold:
 If I would sell my horse, and buy twenty more Better than he, why, give my horse to Timon,
 Ask nothing, give it him, it foals me, straight,<sup>b</sup>
 And able horses: No porter at his gate;
 But rather one that smiles, and still invites
 All that pass by.<sup>c</sup> It cannot hold; no reason
 Can sound<sup>d</sup> his state in safety. Caphis, ho!
 Caphis, I say!

Enter CAPHIS.

Caph. Here, sir: What is your pleasure?
 Sen. Get on your cloak, and haste you to lord
 Timon.
 Importune him for my monies; be not cens'd
 With slight denial; nor then silenc'd, when—
 "Commend me to your master"—and the cap
 Plays in the right hand, thus:—but tell him, sirrah
 My uses cry to me, I must serve my turn
 Out of mine own; his days and times are past,
 And my reliances on his fractured dates
 Have smit my credit: I love, and honour him;
 But must not break my back, to heal his finger;
 Immediate are my needs; and my relief
 Must not be toss'd and turn'd to me in words,
 But find supply immediate. Get you gone:

<sup>a</sup> We follow the punctuation of the original. It appears to us that the senator is recapitulating what Timon owes himself—
 "and late, five thousand"—"besides my former sum, which makes it five-and-twenty." The mention of what Timon owes in Varro and Isidore is parenthetical.

<sup>b</sup> Straight—immediately.

<sup>c</sup> The porter at a great man's gate was proverbially a repulsive person.

<sup>d</sup> Sound. The meaning appears to be, that no reason which opens Timon's state can find it safe.

Put on a most importunate aspect,
 A visage of demand: for, I do fear,
 When every feather sticks in his own wing,
 Lord Timon will be left a naked gull,
 Which flashes now a phoenix. Get you gone.
 Caph. I go, sir.
 Sen. Ay, go, sir.—Take the bonds along
 And have the dates in compt.
 Caph. I will, sir.
 Sen. Go.

SCENE II.—A Hall in Timon's House.

Enter FLAVIUS with many bills in his hand.

Flav. No care, no stop! so senseless of exp
 That he will neither know how to maintain it
 Nor cease his flow of riot: Takes no account
 How things go from him; nor resumes no care
 Of what is to continue. Never mind
 Was to be so unwise, to be so kind.
 What shall be done? He will not bear, till I must be round with him, now he hunting.
 Fye, fye, fye, fye!

Enter CAPHIS, and the Servants of ISIDORE VARRO.

Caph. Good even, Varro:<sup>a</sup> What
 You come for money?
 Var. Serv. Is 't not your business to Caph. It is;—and yours too, Isidore!
 Isid. Serv. It is a
 Caph. 'Would we were all discharg'd!
 Var. Serv. I ha
 Caph. Here comes the lord.

Enter TIMON, ALCIBIADES, and Lords.
 Tim. So soon as dinner's done, we'll forth
 My Alcibiades.—With me? What is your <sup>a</sup> Be ruined by the securities you give.

<sup>b</sup> Good even, Varro. It is remarkable that the several scene take the names of their masters, like the lord
 Sir Charles of 'High Life Below Stairs.'

Oh, here is a note of certain dues.
Whence are you?

Of Athens here, my lord.
My steward.

It your lordship, he hath put me off
of new days this month;
ask'd by great occasion,
down: and humbly prays you,
other noble parts you'll suit,
is right.

Mine honest friend,
Fair to me next morning.
Good my lord,—

Contain thyself, good friend.
Be Varro's servant, my good lord,—

From Isidore;
Is your speedy payment,—
Did know, my lord, my master's wants,—
Was due on forfeiture, my lord, six weeks,

My steward puts me off, my lord;
Expressly to your lordship.
My breath:—

Good my lords, keep on;
[Exeunt ALCIBIADES and Lords.
You instantly.—Come hither, pray you,
[To FLAVIUS.

Did that I am thus encounter'd demands of debt, broken bonds,
of long-since-due debts,
or?

Please you, gentlemen,
receivable to this business:
I cease till after dinner;
his lordship understand is not paid.

Do so, my friends:
Contented. [Exit TIMON.
Pray draw near. [Exit FLAVIUS.

Enter APEMANTUS and Fool.

Stay, here comes the fool with Apeme some sport with 'em.
ing him, he'll abuse us.
plague upon him, dog!
ow dost, fool?
dialogue with thy shadow?
peak not to thee.

is to thyself.—Come away.
[To the Fool.
o VAR. SERV.] There's the fool hangs ady.

u stand'st single, thou art not on him
the fool now?

asked the question.—Poor rogues and rds between gold and want!
it are we, Apemantus?

?
u ask me what you are, and do not —Speak to 'em, fool.
you, gentlemen?
mercies, good fool: How does your
?

setting on water to scald such chick-
Would we could see you at Corinth.
Gramercy.

Enter Page.
here comes my mistress' page.
Fool.] Why, how now, captain? what e company? How dost thou, Ape-

Apem. 'Would I had a roil in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Page. Prithee, Apemantus, read me the superscription of these letters; I know not which is which.

Apem. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Apem. There will little learning die then, that day thou art hanged. This is to lord Timon; this to Alci-biades. Go; thou wast born a bastard, and thou'lt die a bawd.

Page. Thou wast whelped a dog; and thou shalt famish, a dog's death. Answer not, I am gone.

[Exit Page.
Apem. Even so thou out-run'st grace. Fool, I will go with you to lord Timon's.

Fool. Will you leave me there?

Apem. If Timon stay at home.—You three serve three usurers?

All Serv. Ay; 'would they served us!

Apem. So would I,—as good a trick as ever hangman served thief.

Fool. Are you three usurers' men?

All Serv. Ay, fool.

Fool. I think no usurer but has a fool to his servant;
My mistress is one, and I am her fool. When men come to borrow of your masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry; but they enter my mistress' house merrily, and go away sadly: The reason of this?

Var. Serv. I could render one.

Apem. Do it then, that we may account thee a whoremaster and a knave; which notwithstanding, thou shalt be no less esteemed.

Var. Serv. What is a whoremaster, fool?

Fool. A fool in good clothes, and something like thee. 'T is a spirit: sometime it appears like a lord;
sometime like a lawyer; sometime like a philosopher, with two stones more than his artificial one: He is very often like a knight, and, generally, in all shapes that man goes up and down in, from fourscore to thirteen, this spirit walks in.

Var. Serv. Thou art not altogether a fool.

Fool. Nor thou altogether a wise man: as much foolery as I have, so much wit thou lackest.

Apem. That answer might have become Apemantus.

All Serv. Aside, aside; here comes lord Timon.

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Apem. Come with me, fool, come.

Fool. I do not always follow lover, elder brother, and woman; sometime, the philosopher.

[Exeunt APEMANTUS and Fool.
Flav. Pray you, walk near; I'll speak with you anon. [Exit Serv.

Tim. You make me marvel: Wherefore, ere this time,

Had you not fully laid my state before me;

That I might so have rated my expense,

As I had leave of means?

Flav. You would not hear me,

At many leisures I propos'd.

Tim. Go to:

Perchance, some single vantages you took,

When my indisposition put you back;

And that unaptness made your minister,*

'Tis thus to excuse yourself.

Flav. O my good lord!

At many times I brought in my accounts;

Laid them before you; you would throw them off,

And say, you found them in mine honesty.

When, for some trifling present, you have bid me

Return so much, I have shook my head, and wept;

Yes, 'gainst the authority of manners, pray'd you

* The meaning of this construction is,—perchance you used that unaptness your minister

To hold your hand more close: I did endure
Not seldom, nor no slight checks; when I have Prompted you, in the ebb of your estate,
And your great flow of debts. My lov'd lord,
Though you hear now, (too late!) yet now 's a time,
The greatest of your having lacks a half
To pay your present debts

Tim. Let all my land be sold.

Flav. 'T is all engag'd, some forfeited and gone;
And what remains will hardly stop the mouth
Of present dues: the future comes apace:
What shall defend the interim? and at length
How goes our reckoning?

Tim. To Lacedæmon did my land extend.

Flav. O my good lord, the world is but a word;
Were it all yours, to give it in a breath,
How quickly were it gone?

Tim. You tell me true.

Flav. If you suspect my husbandry, or falsehood,
Call me before the exactest auditors,
And set me on the proof. So the gods bless me,
When all our offices* have been oppress'd
With riotous feeders; when our vaults have wept
With drunken spilt of wine; when every room
Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy;
I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,
And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Prithce, no more.

Flav. Heavens, have I said, the bounty of this
lord!

How many prodigal bits have slaves, and peasants,
This night englutted! Who is not Timon's?
What heart, head, sword, force, means, but is lord Timon's?

Great Timon, noble, worthy, royal Timon?
Ah! when the means are gone that buy this praise,
The breath is gone whereof this praise is made:
Feast-won, fast-lost; one cloud of winter showers,
These flies are couchl'd.

Tim. Come, sermon me no further:
No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart;
Unwisely, not ignobly, have I given.
Why dost thou weep? Canst thou the conscience lack
To think I shall lack friends? Secure thy heart;
If I would broach the vessels of my love,
And try the argument of hearts by borrowing,
Men, and men's fortunes, could I frankly use,
As I can bid thee speak.

Flav. Assurance bless your thoughts!

Tim. And, in some sort, these wauts of mine are crown'd,
That I account them blessings; for by these Shall I try friends; You shall perceive, how you Mistake my fortunes; I am wealthy in my friends.
Within there!—Flaminius! Servilius!

Enter FLAMINIUS, SERVILIUS, and other Servants.

Serv. My lord, my lord,—

Tim. I will despatch you severally.—You Lucius,—to lord Lucullus you; I humbly honour to-day;—you, to Sempronius: Com to their loves; and, I am proud, say, that my have found time to use them toward a supply
let the request be fifty talents.

Flam. As you have said, my lord.

Flav. Lord Lucius, and Lucullus? humph

Tim. Go you, sir, [to another Serv.] to the (Of whom, even to the state's best health, I ha Deserv'd this hearing.) bid 'em send o' the in
A thousand talents to me.

Flav. I have been bold,
(For that I knew it the most general way.)
To them to use your signet, and your name;
But they do shake their heads, and I am ten
No richer in return.

Tim. Is 't true? can 't be?

Flav. They answer, in a joint and corpora
That now they are at fall, want treasure, can Do what they would; are sorry—you are hap
But yet they could have wish'd—they know Something hath been amiss—a noble nature
May catch a wrench—would all were well—
And so, intending other serious matters,
After distasteful looks, and these hard fractio
With certain half-caps, and cold-moving na
They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods, reward
'Prithce, man, look cheerly! These old fellos
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary:
Their blood is cak'd, 't is cold, it seldom flo
'T is lack of kindly warmth, they are not kil
And nature, as it grows again toward earth,
Is fashion'd for the journey, dull, and heavy Go to Ventidius,—[to a Serv.] 'Prithce, [th be not sad,

Thou art true and honest; ingeniously I spe
No blame belongs to thee:—[to Serv.] Vent
Buried his father; by whose death he 's stag
Into a great estate: when he was poor,
Imprison'd, and in scarcity of friends,
I clear'd him with five talents. Greet him
Bid him suppose some good necessity
Touches his friend, which craves to be remov
With those five talents:—that had, [to Fl.
these fellows

To whom 't is instant due. Ne'er speak, a
That Timon's fortunes 'mong his friends out

Flav. I would I could not think it: T is bounty's foe;
Being free itself it thinks all others so.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Athens. A Room in Lucullus's House.

FLAMINIUS waiting. Enter a Servant to him.

Serv. I have told my lord of you, he is coming down to you.

Flam. I thank you, sir.

Enter LUCULLUS.

Serv. Here 's my lord.

Lucul. [Aside.] One of lord Timon's men? a gift,
I warrant. Why, this hits right; I dreamt of a silver bason and ewer to-night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius;

* Offices. These are not the apartments for servants, in our present acceptance of the term, but rooms of hospitality.

you are very respectively* welcome, sir.—Fi wine.—[Exit Servant.] And how does that complete, free-hearted gentleman of Athens bountiful good lord and master?

Flam. His health is well, sir.

Lucul. I am right glad that his health
And what hast thou there under thy clo Flaminius?

Flam. 'Faith, nothing but an empty box, in my lord's behalf, I come to entreat your supply; who, having great and instant occa fifty talents, hath sent to your lordship to get nothing doubting your present assistance first * Respectively—respectfully.

la, la, la,—nothing doubting, says he? and! a noble gentleman 't is, if he would good a house. Many a time and often I th him, and told him on 't; and come er to him, of purpose to have him spend t he would embrace no counsel, take no ay coming. Every man has his fault, and is; I ha' told him on 't, but I could ne'er t.

Re-enter Servant, with wine.

se your lordship, here is the wine. uninius, I have noted thee always wise. e.

ur lordship speaks your pleasure. ave observed thee always for a towardly —give thee thy due,—and one that knows to reason; and canst use the time well, if thee well: good parts in thee.—Get you —[To the Servant, who goes out.—Draw t Flaminius. Thy lord's a bountiful out thou art wise; and thou know'st well ough thou com'st to me, that this is no time y; especially upon bare friendship, with-

Here's three solidares for thee: good me, and say thou saw'st me not. Fare

t possible, the world should so much differ: t that liv'd? Fly, damned baseness, worships thee!

[Throwing the money away.

I now I see thou art a fool, and fit for thy [Exit LUCULLUS.

y these add to the number that may scald

! in be thy damnation.

of a friend, and not himself!

p such a faint and milky heart, s than two nights? O you gods, ter's passion! This slave unto his honour

t meat in him;

t thrive, and turn to nutriment,

am'd to poison?

ies only work upon 't!

e 's sick to death, let not that part of

re

rd paid for, be of any power

ess, but prolong his hour!

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A public Place.

Enter LUCIUS, with Three Strangers.

the lord Timon? he is my very good honourable gentleman.

I know him for no less, though we are o him. But I can tell you one thing, my ch I hear from common rumours: now happy hours are done and past, and his from him.

o, do not believe it; he cannot want for ut believe you this, my lord, that, not of his men was with the lord Lucullus, to ay talents; nay, urged extremely for 't, hat necessity belonged to 't, and yet was ell you, denied, my lord.

a strange case was that? now, before the amed on't. Denied that honourable man;

little honour showed in 't. For my own eds confess I have received some small a him, as money, plate, jewels, and such is here used in the sense of liberality.

like trifles, nothing comparing to us; yet, had he mis- took him, and sent to me, I should ne'er have denied his occasion so many talents.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Ser. See, by good hap, yonder 's my lord; I have sweat to see his honour.—My honoured lord,—

[To LUCIUS.

Luc. Servilius! you are kindly met, sir. Fare thee well:—Commend me to thy honourable virtuous lord, my very exquisite friend.

Ser. May it please your honour, my lord hath sent—

Luc. Ha! what has he sent? I am so much endeared to that lord; he 's ever sending: How shall I thank him, think'st thou? And what has he sent now?

Ser. He has only sent his present occasion now, my lord: requesting your lordship to supply his instant use with so many talents.

Luc. I know his lordship is but merry with me; He cannot want fifty-five hundred talents.

Ser. But in the mean time he wants less, my lord.

If his occasion were not virtuous,

I should not urge it half so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speak seriously, Servilius?

Ser. Upon my soul 't is true, sir.

Luc. What a wicked beast was I, to disfigure myself against such a good time, when I might have shown myself honourable! How unluckily it happened, that I should purchase the day before for a little part, and undo a great deal of honour!—Servilius, now before the gods I am not able to do 't, the more beast, I say:—I was sending to use lord Timon myself, these gentlemen can witness; but I would not, for the wealth of Athens, I had done 't now. Commend me bountifully to his good lordship: and I hope his honour will conceive the fairest of me, because I have no power to be kind:—And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions, say, that I cannot pleasure such an honourable gentleman. Good Servilius, will you befriend me so far, as to use mine own words to him?

Ser. Yes, sir, I shall.

Luc. I 'll look you out a good turn, Servilius.—

[Exit SERVILIUS.

True, as you said, Timon is shrunk, indeed;

And he that 's once denied will hardly speed.

[Exit LUCIUS.

1 Stran. Do you observe this, Hostilius?

2 Stran. Ay, too well.

1 Stran. Why this is the world's soul;

And just of the same piece

Is every flatterer's sport: who can call him his friend

That dips in the same dish? for, in my knowing,

Timon has been this lord's father,

And kept his credit with his purse;

Supported his estate; nay, Timon's money

Has paid his men their wages: He ne'er drinks,

But Timon's silver treads upon his lip:

And yet, (O, see the monstrousness of man

When he looks out in an ungrateful shape!)

He does deny him, in respect of his,

What charitable men afford to beggars.

3 Stran. Religion groans at it.

1 Stran. For mine own part,

I never tasted Timon in my life,

Nor came any of his bounties over me,

To mark me for his friend; yet, I protest,

For his right noble mind, illustrious virtue,

And honourable carriage,

Had his necessity made use of me,

I would have put my wealth into donation,

And the best half should have return'd to him,

So much I love his heart: But, I perceive,

Men must learn now with pity to dispense:

For policy sits above conscience.

[Ezeunt.

3 B

SCENE III.—A Room in Sempronius's House.Enter SEMPRONIUS, and a Servant of Timon's.

Sem. Must he needs trouble me in 't? Humph!
'bove all others?

He might have tried lord Lucius, or Lucullus;
And now Ventidius is wealthy too,
Whom he redeem'd from prison: All these Owe their estates unto him.

Serv. My lord,
They have all been touch'd and found base metal;
For they have all denied him!

Sem. How! have they denied him?
Has Ventidius and Lucullus denied him?
And does he send to me? Three? humph!—
It shows but little love or judgment in him.
Must I be his last refuge? His friends, like physicians,

Thrice give him over: Must I take th' cure upon me?
H' has much disgrac'd me in 't, I 'm angry at him,
That might have known my place: I see no sense for 't,
But his occasions might have woo'd me first;
For, in my conscience, I was the first man
That e'er receiv'd gift from him:
And does he think so backwardly of me now,
That I 'll requite it last? No.

So it may prove an argument of laughter
To the rest, and 'mongst lords I be thought a fool.
I had rather than the worth of thrice the sum,
H' had sent to me first, but for my mind's sake;
I had such a courage to do him good. But now return,
And with their faint reply this answer join:
Who bates mine honour, shall not know my coin.

[Exit.]
Serv. Excellent! Your lordship 's a goodly villain.
The devil knew not what he did when he made man politic; he crossed himself by 't: and I cannot think,
but, in the end, the villainies of man will set him clear.
How fairly this lord strives to appear foul! takes vir-tuous copies to be wicked; like those that, under hot ardent zeal, would set whole realms on fire: Of such a nature is his politic love.

This was my lord's best hope; now all are fled,
Save only the gods: Now his friends are dead,
Doors that were ne'er acquainted with their wards
Many a bounteous year, must be employ'd
Now to guard sure their master.
And this is all a liberal course allows;
Who cannot keep his wealth must keep his house.

*[Exit.]*SCENE IV.—A Hall in Timon's House.Enter two Servants of Varro, and the Servant of Lucius, meeting TITUS, HORTENSIVS, and other Servants to Timon's creditors, waiting his coming out.

Var. Serv. Well met; good-morrow, Titus and Hortensius.

Tit. The like to you, kind Varro.

Hor. Lucius?

What, do we meet together?

Luc. Serv. Ay, and I think
One business doth command us all; for mine
Is money.

Tit. So is theirs and ours.

Enter PHILOTUS.

Luc. Serv. And, sir, Philotus too!

Phi. Good day at once.

Luc. Serv. Welcome, good brother,
What do you think the hour?

Phi. Labouring for nine.

Luc. Serv. So much?

Phi. Is not my lord as

Luc. Serv.

Phi. I wonder on 't; he was wont to shi
Luc. Serv. Ay, but the days are waxed him:

You must consider, that a prodigal course
Is like the sun's; but not, like his, recover
I fear,

'T is deepest winter in lord Timon's purse;
That is, one may reach deep enough, and Find little.

Phi. I am of your fear for that.

Tit. I 'll show you how to observe a stran
Your lord sends now for money.

Hor. Most true,

Tit. And he wears jewels now of Timon's
For which I wait for money.

Hor. It is against my heart.

Luc. Serv. Mark, how stran Timon in this should pay more than he owe
And e'en as if your lord should wear rich
And send for money for 'em.

Hor. I am weary of this charge, the gods
I know, my lord hath spent of Timon's weal
And now ingratitude makes it worse than st

1 Var. Serv. Yes, mine 's three thous
What 's yours?

Luc. Serv. Five thousand mine.

1 Var. Serv. 'T is much deep: and it s by the sum,

Your master's confidence was above mine:
Else, surely, his had equall'd.

Enter FLAMINIUS.

Tit. One of lord Timon's men.

Luc. Serv. Flaminius! sir, a word: 'Pray, ready to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed, he is not.

Tit. We attend his lordship: 'Pray, signi

Flam. I need not tell him that; he know too diligent. [Exit.]

Enter FLAVIUS, in a cloak, mistak

Luc. Serv. Ha! is not that his steward as He goes away in a cloud: call him, call him
Tit. Do you hear, sir?

1 Var. Serv. By your leave, sir,—

Flav. What do you ask of me, my friend?

Tit. We wait for certain money here, sir.
Flav.

If money were as certain as your waiting,
'T were sure enough.

Why then prefer'd you not your sums and b
When your false masters eat of my lord's weal
Then they could smile, and fawn upon his d
And take down th' interest into their gullets

You do yourselves but wrong, to stir me up;
Let me pass quietly:

Believe 't, my lord and I have made an end
I have no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luc. Serv. Ay, but this answer will not w

Flav. If 't will not serve, 't is not so base
For you serve knaves.

1 Var. Serv. How! what does his casual mutter?

2 Var. Serv. No matter what; he 's past revenge enough. Who can speak broader has no house to put his head in? Such may great buildings.

Enter SERVILIUS.

Tit. O, here 's Servilius; now we shall answer.

Serv. If I might beseech you, gentlemen, ur, I should derive much from 't: for, soul, my lord leans wond'rously to discomfortable temper has forsook him; he health, and keeps his chamber. Many do keep their chambers are not far beyond his health, should the sooner pay his debts, dear way to the gods.

Good gods! cannot take this for answer, sir. [Alcib.] Servilius, help!—my lord! my

ON, in a rage; FLAMINIUS following. are my doors oppos'd against my pas-ver free, and must my house be enemy, my gaol? Oh I have feasted, does it now, kind, show me an iron heart?

Put in now, Titus.

rd, here is my bill.

Here 's mine.

And mine, my lord.

Serv. And ours, my lord.

ir bills.

Take me down with 'em: cleave me to the le.*

Alas! my lord,—

my heart in sums.

fifty talents.

But my blood,

Five thousand crowns, my lord.

thousand drops pays that.

—and yours?

v. My lord,—

v. My lord,—

me, take me, and the gods fall upon you!

[Exit.]

I, I perceive our masters may throw their money; these debts may well be called for a madman owes 'em. [Exeunt.]

Re-enter TIMON and FLAVIUS.

Have e'en put my breath from me, the

as:

evils.

Dear lord,—

t if it should be so?

lord,—

save it so:—My steward!

my lord.

ly. Go, bid all my friends again,

Flus, and Sempronius; all:

feast the rascals.

O my lord,

kick from your distracted soul;

much left, to furnish out

ble.

Be 't not in thy care; go, invite them all; let in the tide

more; my cook and I 'll provide.

[Exeunt.]

ENE V.—The Senate House.

sitting. Enter ALCIBIADES, attended.

lord, you have my voice to it;

body;

which Timon here employs is used by Dekker forbook;—"They durst not strike down their large bills;" the allusion is to bills, or battle-

'T is necessary he should die:

Nothing emboldens sin so much as mercy.

2 Sen. Most true; the law shall bruise him.

Alcib. Honour, health, and compassion to the senate!

1 Sen. Now, captain.

Alcib. I am an humble suitor to your virtues;

For pity is the virtue of the law,

And none but tyrants use it cruelly.

It pleases time, and fortune, to lie heavy

Upon a friend of mine, who, in hot blood,

Hath stepp'd into the law, which is past depth

To those that, without heed, do plunge into 't.

He is a man, setting his fate aside,

Of comely virtues:

Nor did he soil the fact with cowardice;

(An honour in him, which buys out his fault,)

But, with a noble fury, and fair spirit,

Seeing his reputation touch'd to death,

He did oppose his foe:

And with such sober and unnoted passion

He did behave his anger, ere 't was spent,

As if he had but prov'd an argument.

1 Sen. You undergo too strict a paradox,

Striving to make an ugly deed look fair:

Your words have took such pains, as if they labcur'd

To bring manslaughter into form, and set quarrelling

Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,

Is valour misbegot, and came into the world

When sects and factions were newly born:

He 's truly valiant that can wisely suffer

The worst that man can breathe;

And make his wrongs his outsides,

To wear them like his raiment, carelessly;

And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,

To bring it into danger.

If wrongs be evils, and enforce us kill,

What folly 't is to hazard life for ill!

Alcib. My lord,—

1 Sen. You cannot make gross sins look clear;

To revenge is no valour, but to bear.

Alcib. My lords, then, under favour, pardon me,

If I speak like a captain.—

Why do fond men expose themselves to battle,

And not endure all threats? sleep upon 't,

And let the foes quietly cut their throats,

Without repugnancy? If there be Such valour in the bearing, what make we

Abroad? why then, women are more valiant,

That stay at home, if bearing carry it;

And the ass, more captain than the lion;

The fellow loaden with irons, wiser than the judge,

If wisdom be in suffering. O my lords,

As you are great, be pitifully good:

Who cannot condemn rashness in cold blood?

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;

But, in defence, by mercy, 't is most just.

To be in anger is impiety;

But who is man that is not angry?

Weigh but the crime with this.

2 Sen. You breathe in vain.

Alcib.

In vain? his service done

At Lacedemon, and Byzantium,

Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1 Sen. What 's that?

Alcib. Why, say, my lords, h' has done fair service,

And slain in fight many of your enemies:

How full of valour did he bear himself

In the last conflict, and made plenteous wounds!

2 Sen. He has made too much plenty with 'em.

He 's a sworn rioter: he has a sin

That often drowns him, and takes his valour prisoner

If there were no foes, that were enough

To overcome him: in that beastly fury

He has been known to commit outrages,

And cherish factions: 't is infer'd to us,
His days are foul, and his drink dangerous.

1 Sen. He dies.

Alcib. Hard fate! he might have died in war.
My lords, if not for any parts in him,
(Though his right arm might purchase his own time,
And be in debt to none,) yet, more to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join 'em both:
And, for I know, your reverend ages love security,
I'll pawn my victories, all my honour to you,
Upon his good returns.

If by this crime he owes the law his life,
Why let the war receive 't in valiant gore;
For law is strict, and war is nothing more.

1 Sen. We are for law, he dies; urge it no more,
On height of our displeasure: Friend, or brother,
He forfeits his own blood that spills another.

Alcib. Must it be so? it must not be. My lords,
I do beseech you, know me.

2 Sen. How?

Alcib. Call me to your remembrances.

3 Sen. What?

Alcib. I cannot think but your age has forgot me;
It could not else be I should prove so base,
To sue, and be denied such common grace:
My wounds ache at you.

1 Sen. Do you dare our anger?
'T is in few words, but spacious in effect;
We banish thee for ever.

Alcib. Banish me?
Banish your dotage; banish usury,
That makes the senate ugly.

1 Sen. If, after two days' shine, Athens contain thee, Attend our weightier judgment. And, not to swell our spirit,

He shall be executed presently. [Exeunt Senators.]

Alcib. Now the gods keep you old enough; that you may live

Only in bone, that none may look on you!
I'm worse than mad: I have kept back their foes,
While they have told their money, and let out
Their coin upon large interest; I myself,
Rich only in large burts:—All those, for this?
Is this the balsam, that the usuring senate
Pours into captains' wounds? Banishment?
It comes not ill; I hate not to be banish'd;
It is a cause worthy my spleen and fury,
That I may strike at Athens. I'll cheer up
My discontented troops, and lay for hearts.
'T is honour with most lands to be at odds;
Soldiers should brook as little wrongs as gods. [Exit.]

SCENE VI.—A magnificent Room in Timon's House.

Music. Tables set out: Servants attending. Enter divers Lords, at several doors.

1 Lord. The good time of day to you, sir.

2 Lord. I also wish it to you. I think this honourable lord did but try us this other day.

1 Lord. Upon that were my thoughts tiring, when we encountered: I hope it is not so low with him, as he made it seem in the trial of his several friends.

2 Lord. It should not be, by the persuasion of his new feasting.

1 Lord. I should think so: He hath sent me an earnest inviting, which many my near occasions did urge me to put off; but he hath conjured me beyond them, and I must needs appear.

2 Lord. In like manner was I in debt to my importunate business, but he would not hear my excuse. I am sorry, when he sent to borrow of me, that my provision was out.

1 Lord. I am sick of that grief too, as I how all things go.

2 Lord. Every man here 's so. What was borrowed of you?

1 Lord. A thousand pieces.

2 Lord. A thousand pieces!

1 Lord. What of you?

3 Lord. He sent to me, sir.—Here he came.

Enter TIMON and Attendants.

Tim. With all my heart, gentlemen be how fare you?

1 Lord. Ever at the best, hearing well of ship.

2 Lord. The swallow follows not summering than we your lordship.

Tim. [Aside] Nor more willingly learn such summer-birds are men.—Gentlemen, I will not recompense this long stay: feast you the music awhile; if they will fare so hard trumpet's sound: we shall to 't presently.

1 Lord. I hope it remains not unkindly lordship, that I returned you an empty mess.

Tim. O, sir, let it not trouble you.

2 Lord. My noble lord,—

Tim. Ah, my good friend! what cheer?

[The banquet.]
2 Lord. My most honourable lord, I am shame, that when your lordship this other me I was so unfortunate a beggar.

Tim. Think not on 't, sir.

2 Lord. If you had sent but two hours be-

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remem-Come, bring in all together.

2 Lord. All covered dishes!

1 Lord. Royal cheer, I warrant you.

3 Lord. Doubt not that, if money, and can yield it.

1 Lord. How do you? What 's the news?

3 Lord. Alcibiades is banished: Hear ye

1 & 2 Lord. Alcibiades banished!

3 Lord. 'T is so, be sure of it.

1 Lord. How? how?

2 Lord. I pray you upon what?

Tim. My worthy friends, will you draw

3 Lord. I'll tell you more anon. Here feast toward.

2 Lord. This is the old man still.

3 Lord. Will 't hold, will 't hold?

2 Lord. It does: but time will—and as-

3 Lord. I do conceive.

Tim. Each man to his stool, with that would to the lip of his mistress: your diet all places alike. Make not a city feast of meat cool ere we can agree upon the first sit. The gods require our thanks.

You great benefactors, sprinkle our society fulness. For your own gifts make yourself but reserve still to give lest your deities Lend to each man enough, that one need another: for, were your godheads to borrow would forsake the gods. Make the meat more than the man that gives it. Let no twenty be without a score of villains: If there women at the table, let a dozen of them be are.—The rest of your fees, O gods,—the Athens, together with the common lag of poverty is amiss in them, you gods, make suitable tion. For these my present friends, as they nothing, so in nothing bless them, and to they welcome.

Uncover, dogs, and lap.

[The dishes uncovered, are full of Some speak. What does his lordship mean?

ber. I know not.
 ay you a better feast never behold,
 of mouth-friends! smoke and lukewarm ater fection. This is Timon's last;
 and spangled you with flatteries,
 ff, and sprinkles in your faces [Throwing water in their faces.
 g villainy. Live loath'd, and long,
 g, smooth, detested parasites,
 lestroyers, affable wolves, meek bears,
 f fortune, trencher-friends, time's flies,
 ee slaves, vapours and minute-jacks!
 d beast, the infinite malady
 uite o'er!—What, dost thou go?
 y physic first—thou too,—and thou;—
 es the dishes at them, and drives them out.
 lend thee money, borrow none.—
 a motion? Henceforth be no feast, villain 's not a welcome guest.

Burn, house; sink, Athens! henceforth hated be
 Of Timon, man, and all humanity. [Exit.

Re-enter the Lords, with other Lords, and Senators.

1 Lord. How now, my lords?
 2 Lord. Know you the quality of lord Timon's fury?
 3 Lord. Pish! did you see my cap?
 4 Lord. I have lost my gown.
 3 Lord. He 's but a mad lord, and nought but humour sways him. He gave me a jewel the other day, and now he has beat it out of my hat:—Did you see my jewel?
 4 Lord. Did you see my cap?
 2 Lord. Here 't is.
 4 Lord. Here lies my gown.
 1 Lord. Let 's make no stay.
 2 Lord. Lord Timon 's mad.
 3 Lord. I feel 't upon my bones.
 4 Lord. One day he gives us diamonds, next day stones. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

E. I.—Without the Walls of Athens.

Enter TIMON.

me look back upon thee. O thou wall,
 in those wolves, dive in the earth,
 at Athens! Matrons turn, incontinent!
 ail in children! Slaves and fools rave wrinkled Senate from the bench, r in their steads! To general filths the instant, green Virginity—
 r parent's eyes! Bankrupts, hold fast; render back, out with your knives,
 r trusters' throats! Bound servants, steal!
 d robbers your grave masters are,
 law! Maid, to thy master's bed;
 is o' the brothel! Son of sixteen,
 n'd crutch from thy old limping sire,
 out his brains! Piety and fear,
 he gods, peace, justice, truth,
 e, night rest, and neighbourhood,
 manners, mysteries, and trades,
 rvances, customs, and laws,
 our confounding contraries,
 fusion live!—Plagues, incident to men, and infectious fevers heap
 pe for stroke! Thou cold sciatica, enators, that their limbs may halt their manners! Lust and liberty minds and marrows of our youth;
 the stream of virtue they may strive,
 themselves in riot! Itches, blains, Athenian bosoms; and their crop
 prosy! Breath infect breath;
 ciety, as their friendship, may ison! Nothing I 'll bear from thee, as, thou detestable town!
 at too, with multiplying bans!
 o the woods; where he shall find it beast more kinder than mankind.
 found (bear me, you good gods all)
 is both within and out that wall!

the punctuation of the original. When Timon look back upon thee," he apostrophizes the city seat of his splendour and his misery. To say metrical beauty of the pause after thee, there is ore and propriety, as it appears to us, in the hich we adopt.
 here used in the sense of turn—turn yourself
 y."

And grant, as Timon grows, his hate may grow
 To the whole race of mankind, high and low!
 Amen. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Athens. A Room in Timon's House.

Enter FLAVIUS, with Two or Three Servants.

1 Serv. Hear you, master steward, where 's our master?
 Are we undone? cast off? nothing remaining?

Flav. Alack, my fellows, what should I say to you?
 Let me be recorded by the righteous gods,
 I am as poor as you.

1 Serv. Such a house broke!
 So noble a master fallen! All gone! and not
 One friend to take his fortune by the arm,
 And go along with him!

2 Serv. As we do turn our backs
 From our companion thrown into his grave,
 So his familiars to his buried fortunes
 Slink all away; leave their false vows with him,
 Like empty purses pick'd: and his poor self,
 A dedicated beggar to the air,
 With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty,
 Walks, like contempt, alone.—More of our fellows.

Enter other Servants.

Flav. All broken implements of a ruin'd house.

3 Serv. Yet do our hearts wear Timon's livery,
 That see I by our faces; we are fellows still,
 Serving alike in sorrow: Leak'd is our bark;
 And we, poor mates, stand on the dying deck,
 Hearing the surges threat: we must all part
 Into this sea of air.

Flav. Good fellows all,
 The latest of my wealth I 'll share amongst you.
 Wherever we shall meet, for Timon's sake,
 Let 's yet be fellows; let 's shake our heads, and say,
 As 't were a knell unto our master's fortunes,
 "We have seen better days." Let each take some;

[Giving them money
 Nay, put out all your hands. Not one word more:
 Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poor.

[Exeunt Servants
 O, the fierce* wretchedness that glory brings us!
 Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
 Since riches point to misery and contempt?
 Who 'd be so mock'd with glory? or to live

* Fierce—violent, excessive.

But in a dream of friendship?
 To have his pomp, and all what state compounds,
 But only painted, like his varnish'd friends?
 Poor honest lord, brought low by his own heart;
 Undone by goodness! Strange, unusual blood,<sup>a</sup>
 When man's worst sin is, he does too much good!
 Who then dares to be half so kind again?
 For bounty, that makes gods, does still mar men.
 My dearest lord,—bless'd to be most accurs'd,
 Rich, only to be wretched—thy great fortunes
 Are made thy chief afflictions. Alas, kind lord!
 He's flung in rage from this ungrateful seat
 Of monstrous friends:
 Nor has he with him to supply his life,
 Or that which can command it.
 I'll follow, and inquire him out:
 I'll ever serve his mind with my best will;
 Whilst I have gold I'll be his steward still. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The Woods.Enter TIMON.

Tim. O blessed breeding sun, draw from the earth
 Rotten humidity; below thy sister's orb
 Infect the air! Twinn'd brothers of one womb,— Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
 Scarce is dividant,—touch them with several fortunes;
 The greater scorns the lesser: Not nature,
 To whom all sores lay siege, can bear great fortune,
 But by contempt of nature:
 Raise me this beggar, and deny 't that lord;
 The senator shall bear contempt hereditary,
 The beggar native honour:
 It is the pasture lards the brother's sides,
 The want that makes him lean.<sup>b</sup> Who dares, who dares,
 In purity of manhood stand upright,
 And say, "This man's a flatterer"? If one be,
 So are they all; for every grize<sup>c</sup> of fortune
 Is smooth'd by that below: the learned pate
 Ducks to the golden fool: All is oblique;
 There's nothing level in our cursed natures,
 But direct villainy. Therefore, be abhorr'd
 All feasts, societies, and throngs of men!
 His semblable, yea, himself, Timon disdains:
 Destruction fang mankind!—Earth, yield me roots!

[Digging.]

Who seeks for better of thee, sauce his palate
 With thy most operant poison! What is here?
 Gold? yellow, glittering, precious gold?
 No, gods, I am no idle votarist.
 Roots, you clear heavens! Thus much of this, will make
 Black, white; foul, fair; wrong, right;
 Base, noble; old, young; coward, valiant.
 Ha, you gods! why this? What this, you gods? Why this

<sup>a</sup> Blood—natural disposition.<sup>b</sup> There is considerable obscurity in all this passage, both in the progress of the thought and the form of expression. It appears to us that it may be simplified by bearing in mind that our idea runs through the whole from the commencement, "twinn'd brothers," down to "the want that makes him lean." Touch the twinn'd brothers with several fortunes, that is, with different fortunes, and the greater scorns the lesser. The poet then interposes a reflection that man's nature, obnoxious as it is to all miseries, cannot bear great fortune without contempt of kindred nature. The greater and the lesser brothers now change places:—<sup>c</sup> "Raise me this beggar, and deny 't that lord."

The lord is now despised, the beggar now honoured; and the poet goes on to show that the difference of property is the sole cause of the difference of estimation. He puts this in the most contemptuous way, making the power of feeding and fattening constitute the great distinction between the brother, whose pasture lards his sides, and him, the other brother, whose want produces leanness.

<sup>c</sup> Grize, grease, grieces, gree, are all words expressing a step a degree.

Will lug your priests and servants from you Pluck stout men's pillows from below their
 This yellow slave
 Will knit and break religions; bless the ad
 Make the hoar leprosy ador'd; place thieve
 And give them title, knee, and approbation
 With senators on the bench: this is it,
 That makes the wappen'd widow wed again
 She, whom the spital-house and ulcerous so Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and
 To the April-day again.<sup>b</sup> Come, damned
 Thou common whore of mankind, that putt
 Among the rout of nations, I will make thee Do thy right nature.—[March afar of drum?—Thou 'rt quick,
 But yet I'll bury thee: Thou 'lt go, strong
 When gouty keepers of thee cannot stand:—
 Nay, stay thou out for earnest. [Keeping]

Enter ALCIBIADES, with drum and fife, in manner; PHRYNIA and TIMON.Alcib. Speak, what art thou there?Tim. A beast, as thou art. The canker heart,

For showing me again the eyes of man!

Alcib. What is thy name? Is man so hat
That art thyself a man?Tim. I am misanthropos, and hate man!
For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dog,
That I might love thee something.Alcib. I know th
But in thy fortunes am unlearn'd and stran*Tim.* I know thee too; and more, than thee,I not desire to know. Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground, gules,
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? This fell whore
Hath in her more destruction than thy sweet
For all her cherubin look.Phry. Thy lips rot off!Tim. I will not kiss thee; then the rot
To thine own lips again.Alcib. How came the noble Timon to thi
Tim. As the moon does, by wanting light
But then renew I could not, like the moon;
There were no suns to borrow of.Alcib. Noble Timon, what friendship may
Tim. None, but to maintain my opinion.Alcib. What is it, Timon?
Tim. Promise me friendship, but perform thou wilt not promise, the gods plague thee,
a man! if thou dost perform, confound thee,
a man!Alcib. I have heard in some sort of thy mi
Tim. Thou saw'st them, when I had prop
Alcib. I see them now; then was a blessed Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of Timon. Is this the Athenian minion, whom Voic'd so regardfully?Tim. Art thou Timandra?
Timon. Yes.Tim. Be a whore still! They love thee thee.Give them diseases, leaving with thee their
Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves
For tubs and baths; bring down rose-cheek'd
To the tub-fast and the diet.Timon. Hang thee, man!Timon. Yes.Tim. Be a whore still! They love thee thee.Give them diseases, leaving with thee their
Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves
For tubs and baths; bring down rose-cheek'd
To the tub-fast and the diet.Timon. Hang thee, man!Timon. Yes.Tim. Be a whore still! They love thee thee.Give them diseases, leaving with thee their
Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves
For tubs and baths; bring down rose-cheek'd
To the tub-fast and the diet.Timon. Hang thee, man!Timon. Yes.Tim. Be a whore still! They love thee thee.Give them diseases, leaving with thee their
Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves
For tubs and baths; bring down rose-cheek'd
To the tub-fast and the diet.Timon. Hang thee, man!Timon. Yes.Tim. Be a whore still! They love thee thee.Give them diseases, leaving with thee their
Make use of thy salt hours: season the slaves
For tubs and baths; bring down rose-cheek'd
To the tub-fast and the diet.

on him, sweet Timandra; for his wits and lost in his calamities.
 The gold of late, brave Timon,
 Proof doth daily make revolt
 As band: I have heard, and griev'd,
 Athens, mindless of thy worth,
 Great deeds, when neighbour states,
 Ord and fortune, trod upon them,—
 See beat thy drum, and get thee gone.
 Thy friend, and pity thee, dear Timon.
 Dost thou pity him, whom thou dost
 Leave alone?
 Fare thee well:
 I hold for thee.

Keep 't, I cannot eat it.
 I have laid proud Athens on a heap,—
 As thou 'gainst Athens?

Ay, Timon, and have cause.
 Gods confound them all in thy conquest;
 When thou hast conquer'd!
 I am, Timon?
 By killing of villains, thou wast born to Untry.

Go on,—here 's gold,—go on;
 Every plague, when Jove
 High-vic'd city hang his poison
 : Let not thy sword skip one:
 I'd age for his white beard,
 I'd: Strike me the counterfeit matron;
 Only that is honest,
 I'd: Let not the virgin's cheek
 Trenchant sword; for those milk paps,
 The window-bars bore at men's eyes,
 The leaf of pity writ,
 Own horrible traitors: Spare not the babe,
 I smiles from fools exhaust their mercy;
 I'd, whom the oracle
 I'd pronounce thy throat shall cut,
 I'd, and remorse: Swear against objects;
 I'd, thine ears, and on thine eyes;
 I'd, or yells of mothers, maids, nor babes,
 I'd, iests in holy vestments bleeding,
 I'd, not. There 's gold to pay thy soldiers:
 I'd, infusion; and, thy fury spent,
 I'd, thyself! Speak not, be gone.
 I'd, thou gold yet? I 'll take the gold thou I'd, me,
 I'd, myself.

How, or dost thou not, heaven's curse upon

Timon. Give us some gold, good Timon:
 I'd, thou more?

I'd, to make a whore forswear her trade,
 I'd, shores, a bawd. Hold up, you sluts,
 I'd, wantant: You are not oathable,—
 I'd, now, you 'll swear, terribly swear,
 I'd, adders and to heavenly agues,
 I'd, gods that bear you,—spare your oaths,
 I'd, or conditions: Be whores still;
 I'd, pious breath seeks to convert you,
 I'd, more, allure him, burn him up;
 I'd, fire predominate his smoke,
 I'd, coats: Yet may your pains, six months,
 I'd, cry: And thatch your poor thin roofs
 I'd, of the dead;—some that were hang'd,
 I'd, wear them, betray with them: Whore

How may mire upon your face:
 I'd, les!

Timon. Well, more gold;—What then;
 I'd, we 'll do anything for gold.

So the 'Tale of Oedipus' according to John

Tim. Consumptions sow

In hollow bones of man; strike their sharp shins,
 And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's voice,
 That he may never more false title plead,
 Nor sound his quilllets shrilly: hoar the flamen
 That scolds against the quality of flesh,
 And not believes himself: down with the nose,
 Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away
 Of him, that his particular to foresee,
 Smells from the general weal: make curl'd-pate ruffians
 Bald;

And let the unscarr'd braggarts of the war
 Derive some pain from you: Plague all;
 That your activity may defeat and quell
 The source of all erection.—There 's more gold:
 Do you damn others, and let this damn you,
 And ditches grave you all!<sup>a</sup>

Phry. & Timan. More counsel with more money, Bounteous Timon.

Tim. More whore, more mischief first; I have given you earnest.

Alcib. Strike up the drum towards Athens. Farewell, Timon;

If I thrive well, I 'll visit thee again.

Tim. If I hope well, I 'll never see thee more.

Alcib. I never did thee harm.

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me.

Alcib. Call'st thou that harm?

Tim. Men daily find it. Get thee away,

And take thy beegles with thee.

Alcib. We but offend him.—
 Strike.

[Drum beats. Exit ALCIBIADES, PHRYNIA and TIMANDRA.]

Tim. That nature, being sick of man's unkindness,
 Should yet be hungry;—Common mother, thou,

[Digging]

Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast,
 Teems, and feeds all; whose self-same mettle,
 Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
 Engenders the black toad, and adder blue,
 The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm,
 With all the abhorred births below crisp heaven
 Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine;
 Yield him, who all the human sons doth hate,
 From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root!
 Ensear thy fertile and conceptions womb,
 Let it no more bring out ingrateful man!
 Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears;
 Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward face
 Hath to the marbled mansion all above
 Never presented!—O, a root,—Dear thanks!
 Dry up thy marrows, vines, and plough-torn leas;
 Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish draughts,
 And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
 That from it all consideration slips!

Enter APEMANTUS.

More man? Plague! plague!

Apem. I was directed hither: Men report
 Thou dost affect my manners, and dost use them.

Tim. 'T is then, because thou dost not keep a dog
 Whom I would imitate: Consumption catch thee!

Apem. This is in thee a nature but infected;
 A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung
 From change of fortune. Why this spade? this place?
 This slave-like habit? and these looks of care?
 Thy flatterers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft;
 Hug their diseas'd perfumes, and have forgot
 That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods,
 By putting on the cunning of a carper.

<sup>a</sup> So in 'Chapman's Homer's Iliad':—

—"The throats of dogs shall gnaw
 His manly limbs."

Be thou a flatterer now, and seek to thrive
 By that which has undone thee : hinge thy knee,
 And let his very breath, whom thou 'lt observe,
 Blow off thy cap ; praise his most vicious strain,
 And call it excellent : Thou wast told thus :
 Thou gav'st thine ears, like tapsters that bade welcome,
 To knaves and all approachers : 'T is most just
 That thou turn rascal ; hadst thou wealth again,
 Rascals should have 't. Do not assume my likeness.

Tim. Were I like thee I 'd throw away myself.

Apem. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like thyself ;

A madman so long, now a fool : What, think'st
 That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
 Will put thy shirt on warm ? Will these moist trees,
 That have out-liv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
 And skip when thou point'st out ? Will the cold brook,
 Candied with ice, caudle thy morning taste,
 To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit ? Call the creatures,— Whose naked natures live in all the spite
 Of wreakful heaven ; whose bare unhoussed trunks,
 To the conflicting elements expos'd,
 Answer mere nature,—bid them flatter thee ;
 O ! thou shalt find—

Tim. A fool of thee : Depart.

Apem. I love thee better now than e'er I did.

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Apem. Why ?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.

Apem. I flatter not ; but say thou art a caitiff.

Tim. Why dost thou seek me out ?

Apem. To vex thee.

Tim. Always a villain's office, or a fool's ;

Dost please thyself in 't ?

Apem. Ay.

Tim. What ! a knave too ?

Apem. If thou didst put this sour-cold habit on
 To castigate thy pride, 't were well ; but thou
 Dost it enforcedly ; thou 'dst courtier be again,
 Wert thou not beggar. Willing misery
 Outlives incertain pomp, is crown'd before :
 The one is filling still, never complete ;
 The other, at high wish : Best state, contentless, Hath a distracted and most wretched being,
 Worse than the worst, content.

Thou shouldst desire to die, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath that is more miserable.

Thou art a slave, whom Fortune's tender arm
 With favour never clasp'd ; but bred a dog.
 Hadst thou, like us, from our first swath proceeded
 The sweet degrees that this brief world affords
 To such as may the passive drugs of it
 Freely command, thou wouldst have plung'd thyself
 In general riot ; melted down thy youth
 In different beds of lust ; and never learn'd
 The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd
 The sugar'd game before thee. But myself,
 Who had the world as my confectionary ;
 The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men
 At duty, more than I could frame employment ;
 That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves
 Do on the oak, have with one winter's brush
 Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare
 For every storm that blows ;—I, to bear this,
 That never knew but better, is some burden :
 Thy nature did commence in sufferance, time Hath made thee hard in 't. Why shouldst thou hate men ?

They never flatter'd thee : What hast thou given ?

If thou wilt curse, thy father, that poor rag,

Must be thy subject ; who, in spite, put stuff

To some she beggar, and compounded thee

Poor rogue hereditary. Hence ! be gone ?

If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,

Thou hadst

Apem. A

Tim.

Apem. I

Tim.

Were all th

I 'd give th

That the w

Thus would

Apem.

Tim. Fi

Apem. S

th

Tim. T

If not, I w

Apem. V

Tim. Tl

Tell them

Apem. I

Tim.

For here it

Apem.

Tim.

Where fee

Apem.

where I ea

Tim. V

mind !

Apem.

Tim. T

Apem.

but the es

thy guilt,

much curi

art despise

thee, eat i

Tim. C

Apem.

Tim. A

Apem.

shouldst h

didst thou means ?

Tim. W

thou ever l

Apem.

Tim. I

keep a dog

Apem.

compare to

Tim. W

themselves

Apem.

Tim. W

sion of mer

Apem.

Tim. A

to attain to guile thee

thee : if th

when, pera

thou wert

and still t

thou wert

and oft th

wert thou t

thee, and r

wert thou

wert thou

pard : wert

lion, and

fety were remotion; and thy defence, it beast couldst thou be, that were not st? and what a beast art thou already,
 y loss in transformation!
 ou couldst please me with speaking to it have hit upon it here: The commons is become a forest of beasts.
 has the ass broke the wall, that thou art er comes a poet and a painter: The try light upon thee: I will fear to catch ay: When I know not what else to do, sin.

there is nothing living but thee, thou
 ne. I had rather be a beggar's dog art the cap of all the fools alive.
 *

 thou wert clean enough to spit upon.
 gue on thee, thou art too bad to curse.
 ains that do stand by thee are pure.
 is no leprosy but what thou speak'st.
 me thee.—

-but I should infect my hands.
 ld my tongue could rot them off!
 thou issue of a mangy dog!
 me, that thou art alive;
 see.

'Would thou wouldst burst!
 Away,
 gue! I am sorry I shall lose [Throws a stone at him.

Beast!
 Slave!
 Toad!
 Rogue, rogue, rogue!
 PERMANTUS retreats backward, as going.
 s false world; and will love nought
 re necessities upon 't.
 resently prepare thy grave;
 ght foam of the sea may beat
 'daily: make thine epitaph,
 e at others' lives may laugh.
 og-killer, and dear divorce

[Looking on the gold.
 on and sire! thou bright defiler rest bed! thou valiant Mars!
 g, fresh, lov'd, and delicate wooer,
 th thaw the consecrated snow
 in's lap! thou visible god,
 ose impossibilities,
 n kiss! that speak'st with every tongue
 e! O thou touch* of hearts!
 : man rebels; and by thy virtue nfounding odds, that beasts
 orld in empire!

'Would 't were so;— n dead!—I'll say, thou hast gold:
 ong'd to shortly.

Throng'd to?
 Ay.

ck, I prithee.
 Live, and love thy misery!
 ve so, and so die!—I am quit.
 [Exit PERMANTUS.
 men?—Eat, Timon, and abhor them.

Enter Banditti.
 e should he have this gold? It is some one slender ort of his remainder: The ld, and the falling from of his friends, his melancholy.

noised he hath a mass of treasure.
 s make the assay upon him. If he care * Touch—touch-stone.

not for 't, he will supply us easily: If he covetously reserve it, how shall 's get it?

2 Ban. True; for he bears it not about him, 't is hid.

1 Ban. Is not this he?

Banditti. Where?

2 Ban. 'T is his description.

3 Ban. He; I know him.

Banditti. Save thee, Timon.

Tim. Now, thieves?

Banditti. Soldiers, not thieves.

Tim. Both too, and women's sons.

Banditti. We are not thieves, but men that much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is you want much of meat.

Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;
 Within this mile break forth a hundred springs:
 The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet hips;
 The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
 Lays her full mess before you. Want? why want?

1 Ban. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water,
 As beasts, and birds, and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes:

You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you con,
 That you are thieves profess'd; that you work not
 In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft
 In limited* professions. Rascal thieves,
 Here 's gold: Go, suck the subtle blood of the grape,
 Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
 And so 'scape hanging. Trust not the physician;

His antidotes are poison, and he slays
 More than you rob. Take wealth and lives together;

Do villainy, do, since you protest<sup>b</sup> to do 't
 Like workmen. I'll example you with thievery:

The sun 's a thief, and with his great attraction
 Robs the vast sea: the moon 's an arrant thief,
 And her pale fire she snatches from the sun:

The sea 's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
 The moon into salt tears: the earth 's a thief,
 That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen
 From general excrement: each thing 's a thief;

The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough power
 Have uncheck'd theft.<sup>c</sup> Love not yourselves: away;
 Rob one another. There 's more gold: Cut throats;

All that you meet are thieves: To Athens go;
 Break open shops; nothing can you steal,
 But thieves do lose it: Steal not less, for this
 I give you; and gold confound you howsoever!

Amen. [TIMON retires to his cave.
 3 Ban. He has almost charmed me from my profession, by persuading me to it.

1 Ban. 'T is in the malice of mankind, that he thus advises us; not to have us thrive in our mystery.

2 Ban. I'll believe him as an enemy, and give over my trade.

1 Ban. Let us first see peace in Athens: There is no time so miserable but a man may be true.

[Exeunt Banditti.

Enter FLAVIUS.

Flav. O you gods!
 Is yon despis'd and ruinous man my lord?
 Full of decay and failing? O monument
 And wonder of good deeds evilly bestow'd!
 What an alteration of honour has Desperate want made!
 What viler thing upon the earth, than friends,
 Who can bring noblest minds to basest ends:

* Limited—legalized.

<sup>b</sup> Protest. The ordinary reading is profess. There appears no necessity for the change, for either word may be used in the sense of to declare openly.

<sup>c</sup> That is, the laws, being powerful, have their theft unchecked.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was wish'd to love his enemies:
Grant, I may ever love, and rather woo
Those that would mischief me, than those that do!
He has caught me in his eye: I will present
My honest grief unto him; and, as my lord,
Still serve him with my life.—My dearest master!

TIMON comes forward from his cave.

Tim. Away! what art thou?

Flav. Have you forgot me, sir?

Tim. Why dost ask that? I have forgot all men;
Then, if thou grant'st thou 'rt a man, I have forgot thee.

Flav. An honest poor servant of yours.

Tim. Then I know thee not.

I ne'er had honest man about me; ay, all
I kept were knaves to serve in meat to villains.

Flav. The gods are witness,

Ne'er did poor steward wear a truer grief
For his undone lord, than mine eyes for you.

Tim. What, dost thou weep?—Come nearer:—then I love thee,

Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st
Flinty mankind; whose eyes do never give,
But thorough lust and laughter. Pity's sleeping:
Strange times, that weep with laughing, not with weeping!

Flav. I beg of you to know me, good my lord,
To accept my grief, and, whilst this poor wealth lasts,
To entertain me as your steward still.

Tim. Had I a steward

So true, so just, and now so comfortable?
It almost turns my dangerous nature wild.
Let me behold thy face.—Surely, this man
Was born of woman.—

Forgive my general and exceptless rashness,
You perpetual-sober gods! I do proclaim
One honest man,—mistake me not,—but one;—
No more, I pray,—and he's a steward.—
How fain would I have hated all mankind,

And thou redeem'st thyself: But all, sure thee,
I fell with curses.
Methinks, thou art more honest now than was;
For by oppressing and betraying me,
Thou mightst have sooner got another service:
For many so arrive at second masters,
Upon their first lord's neck. But tell me true,
(For I must ever doubt, though ne'er so sure,
Is not thy kindness subtle, covetous,
If not a usuring kindness; and as rich men deal gifts, Expecting in return twenty for one?)

Flav. No, my most worthy master, in whose breast Doubt and suspect, alas, are plac'd too late;
You should have fear'd false times, when you did feat:
Suspect still comes where an estate is least.
That which I show, heaven knows, is merely love,
Duty and zeal to your unmatched mind,
Care of your food and living: and, believe it,
My most honour'd lord,
For any benefit that points to me,
Either in hope, or present, I 'd exchange
For this one wish, That you had power and wealth
To requite me, by making rich yourself.

Tim. Look thee, 't is so!—Thou singly honest man, Here, take:—the gods out of my misery
Have sent thee treasure. Go, live rich, and happy:
But thus condition'd: Thou shalt build from men;
Hate all, curse all: show charity to none:
But let the famish'd flesh slide from the bone,
Ere thou relieve the beggar: give to dogs
What thou deny'st to men; let prisons swallow them, Debts wither them to nothing: Be men like blasted woods,

And may diseases lick up their false bloods!
And so, farewell, and thrive.

Flav. O, let me stay, and comfort you my master.

Tim. If thou hat'st curses,
Stay not: fly, whilst thou art bless'd and free;
Ne'er see thou man, and let me ne'er see thee.

[Exeunt severally.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before Timon's Cave.

Enter Poet and Painter; TIMON behind, unseen.

Pain. As I took note of the place, it cannot be far where he abides.

Poet. What's to be thought of him? Does the rumour hold for true, that he's so full of gold?

Pain. Certain: Alcibiades reports it; Phrynia and Timandra had gold of him: he likewise enriched poor straggling soldiers with great quantity: 'T is said he gave unto his steward a mighty sum.

Poet. Then this breaking of his has been but a try for his friends.

Pain. Nothing else: you shall see him a palm in Athens again, and flourish with the highest. Therefore,
't is not amiss we tender our loves to him, in this supposed distress of his: it will show honestly in us; and is very likely to load our purposes with what they travel for, if it be a just and true report that goes of his having.

Poet. What have you now to present unto him?

Pain. Nothing at this time but my visitation: only
I will promise him an excellent piece.

Poet. I must serve him so too; tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Pain. Good as the best.
Promising is the very air o' the time;
It opens the eyes of expectation:

Performance is ever the duller for his act;
And, but in the plainer and simpler kind of people,
The deed of saying is quite out of use.
To promise is most courtly and fashionable:
Performance is a kind of will, or testament,
Which argues a great sickness in his judgment
That makes it.

Tim. Excellent workman! Thou canst not paint man so bad as is thyself.

Poet. I am thinking
What I shall say I have provided for him:
It must be a personating of himself:
A satire against the softness of prosperity;
With a discovery of the infinite flatteries
That follow youth and opulency.

Tim. Must thou needs stand for a villain in these own work? Wilt thou whip thine own faults in other men? Do so, I have gold for thee.

Poet. Nay, let's seek him:
Then do we sin against our own estate,
When we may profit meet, and come too late.

Pain. True;
When the day serves, before black-corner'd night,
Find what thou want'st by free and offer'd light.
Come.

Tim. I'll meet you at the turn. What a god
gold,
That he is worshipp'd in a baser temple,

ine feed!
 rigg'st the bark, and plough'st the foam;
 d reverence in a slave:
 ship! and thy saints for aye
 th plagues, that thee alone obey!
 m. [Advancing.
 worthy Timon!
 Our late noble master.
 I once liv'd to see two honest men?

if your open bounty tasted,
 ere retir'd, your friends fall'n off,
 es natures—O abhorred spirits!
 ips of heaven are large enough—
 nobleness gave life and influence being! I'm rapt, and cannot cover bulk of this ingratitude of words.
 go naked, men may see 't the better:
 onest, by being what you are,
 it seen, and known.

He, and myself,
 in the great shower of your gifts,
 it it.

Ay, you are honest men.
 re hither come to offer you our service.
 honest men! Why, how shall I requite ots, and drink cold water? no.

 we can do, we'll do, to do you service.
 re honest men: You have heard that I
 gold;
 have: speak truth: you're honest men.
 is said, my noble lord: but therefore friend, nor I.
 onest men:—Thou draw'st a counterfeit ens: thou art, indeed, the best;
 it'st most lively.

So, so, my lord.
 o, sir, as I say:—And, for thy fiction,
 [To the Poet.

swells with stuff so fine and smooth ven natural in thine art.— s, my honest-natur'd friends,
 y you have a little fault:
 monstrous in you; neither wish I pains to mend.

Beseech your honour,
 own to us.

You'll take it ill.
 thankfully, my lord.

Will you, indeed?
 it not, worthy lord.
 's never a one of you but trusts a knave,
 deceives you.

Do we, my lord?
 al you hear him cog, see him dissemble, patchery, love him, feed him
 osom: yet remain assur'd,
 ide-up villain.
 e none such, my lord.

Nor I.
 ou, I love you well; I'll give you gold,
 llains from your companies:
 stab them, drown them in a draught,
 by some course, and come to me,
 old enough.

then, my lord, let's know them.
 hat way, and you this,—but two in my:—

t, all single and alone,
 lain keeps him company.
 t, two villains shall not be, [To the Pain.

Come not near him.—If thou wouldst in t reside
 [To the Poet.
 But where one villain is, then him alandon.—
 Hence! pack! there's gold, ye came for gold, ye slaves:
 You have work for me, there's payment: Hence!
 You are an alchymist, make gold of that:—
 Out, rascal dogs! [Exit, beating and driving them out.

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter FLAVIUS and Two Senators.

Flav. It is vain that you would speak with Timon
 For he is set so only to himself,
 That nothing but himself, which looks like man,
 Is friendly with him.

1 Sen. Bring us to his cave:
 It is our part, and promise to the Athenians,
 To speak with Timon.

2 Sen. At all times alike
 Men are not still the same: 'T was time, and griefs,
 That fram'd him thus: time, with his fairer hand,
 Offering the fortunes of his former days,
 The former man may make him: Bring us to him,
 And chance it as it may.

Flav. Here is his cave.—
 Peace and content be here! Lord Timon! Timon!
 Look out, and speak to friends: The Athenians,
 By two of their most reverend senate, greet thee:
 Speak to them, noble Timon.

Enter TIMON.

Tim. Thou sun, that comfort'st, burn!—Speak, and be hang'd:

For each true word, a blister! and each false
 Be as a caut'rising to the root o' the tongue,
 Consuming it with speaking!

1 Sen. Worthy Timon,—
 Tim. Of none but such as you, and you of Timon.

2 Sen. The senators of Athens greet thee, Timon.
 Tim. I thank them; and would send them back the plague,

Could I but catch it for them.

1 Sen. O, forget
 What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.
 The senators, with one consent of love,
 Entreat thee back to Athens; who have thought
 On special dignities, which vacant lie
 For thy best use and wearing.

2 Sen. They confess,
 Toward thee forgetfulness too general, gross:
 Which now the public body,—which doth seldom Play the recanter,—feeling in itself
 A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
 Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon;
 And send forth us, to make their sorrow'd render,
 Together with a recompense more fruitful
 Than their offence can weigh down by the dram;
 Ay, even such heaps and sums of love and wealth,
 As shall to thee blot out what wrongs were theirs,
 And write in thee the figures of their love,
 Ever to read them thine.

Tim. You witch me in it;
 Surprise me to the very brink of tears:
 Lend me a fool's heart, and a woman's eyes,
 And I'll bewep these comforts, worthy senators.

1 Sen. Therefore, so please thee to return with us,
 And of our Athens (thine, and ours) to take
 The captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks,
 Allow'd with absolute power, and thy good name
 Live with authority:—so soon we shall drive back
 Of Alcibiades the approaches wild;
 Who, like a boar too savage, doth root up
 His country's peace.

2 Sen. And shakes his threat'ning sword Against the walls of Athens.

1 Sen. Therefore, Timon,—

Tim. Well, sir, I will; therefore, I will, sir—
Thus,—

If Alcibiades kill my countrymen,
Let Alcibiades know this of Timon,
That Timon cares not. But if he sack fair Athens,
And take our goodly aged men by the beards,
Giving our holy virgins to the stain
Of contumelious, beastly, mad-brain'd war;
Then, let him know,—and tell him, Timon speaks it,
In pity of our aged, and our youth,
I cannot choose but tell him, that I care not,
And let him take 't at worst; for their knives care not,
While you have throats to answer: for myself,
There's not a whittle in the unruly camp,
But I do prize it at my love, before
The reverend'st throat in Athens. So I leave you
To the protection of the prosperous gods,
As thieves to keepers.

Flac. Stay not, all's in vain.

Tim. Why, I was writing of my epitaph;
It will be seen to-morrow: my long sickness
Of health, and living, now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go, live still;
Be Alcibiades your plague, you his,
And last so long enough!

1 Sen. We speak in vain.

Tim. But yet I love my country, and am not
One that rejoices in the common wrack,
As common bruit doth put it.

1 Sen. That's well spoke.

Tim. Commend me to my loving countrymen,—

1 Sen. These words become your lips as they pass through them.

2 Sen. And enter in our ears like great triumphers
In their applauding gates.

Tim. Commend me to them;
And tell them, that, to ease them of their griefs,
Their fears of hostile strokes, their aches, losses,
Their pangs of love, with other incident throes
That nature's fragile vessel doth sustain
In life's uncertain voyage, I will some kindness do them:

I'll teach them to prevent wild Alcibiades' wrath.

2 Sen. I like this well, he will return again.

Tim. I have a tree, which grows here in my close,
That mine own use invites me to cut down,
And shortly must I fell it: Tell my friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,
From high to low throughout, that whoso please
To stop affliction, let him take his haste,
Come hither, ere my tree hath felt the axe,
And hang himself:—I pray you, do my greeting.

Flac. Trouble him no further, thus you still shall find him.

Tim. Come not to me again: but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the beached verge of the salt flood;
Whom once a day with his embossed froth
The turbulent surge shall cover; thither come,
And let my grave-stone be your oracle.—
Lips, let sour words go by, and language end:
What is amiss, plague and infection mend!
Graves only be men's works; and death their gain!
Sun, hide thy beams! Timon hath done his reign.

[Exit TIMON.]

1 Sen. His discontents are unremoveably Coupled to nature.

2 Sen. Our hope in him is dead: let us return,
And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril.

1 Sen. It requires swift foot. [Exeunt.]

SCENE

Enter

1 Sen. The
As full as the Mess.

Besides, his e
Present appr

2 Sen. W
Tim

Mess. I m Whom, thou
Yet our old
And made u
From Alcibi
With letters
His fellowsh
In part for h

1 Sen.

3 Sen. N
The enemies
Doth choke t
Ours is the f

SCENE I

Enter

Sold. By Who's here!
Timon is de
Some beast r
Dead, sure;
I cannot rea
Our captain
An ag'd inte
Before proud Whose fall t

SCENE

Trumpets
Alcib. So
Our terrible

Till now yo
With all lic
The scope of
As slept with
Have waude
Our sufferan
When crouc
Cries, of itse Shall sit and
And pury in
With fear, a

1 Sen.
When thy fi
Ere thou had
We sent to t
To wipe out Above their

2 Sen.
Transformed
By humble
We were not
The common

1 Sen.
Were not ere
You have res
That these g
For private t

Nor are they living motives that you first went out;
 they wanted cunning, in excess,
 their hearts. March, noble lord,
 with thy banners spread:
 n, and a tithed death,
 res hunger for that food,
 e loathes,) take thou the destin'd tenth;
 azard of the spotted die,
 rotted.

All have not offended;
 were, it is not square to take,
 are, revenges: crimes, like lands,
 ited. Then, dear countryman, ranks, but leave without thy rage:
 senian cradle, and those kin
 : bluster of thy wrath, must fall at have offended: like a shepherd, fold, and cull the infected forth,
 ltogether.

What thou wilt,
 halt enforce it with thy smile,
 t with thy sword.

Set but thy foot
 ampir'd gates, and they shall ope;
 send thy gentle heart before,
 It enter friendly.

Throw thy glove;
 of thine honour else,
 it use the wars as thy redress,
 it confusion, all thy powers their harbour in our town, till we by full desire.

Then there's my glove;

this line is not used in an evil sense, but with stop of knowledge, wisdom;—Excessive shame wanted wisdom has broken their hearts.

Descend, and open your uncharged ports;
 Those enemies of Timon's, and mine owl,
 Whom you yourselves shall set out for reproof,
 Fall, and no more: and,—to atone your fears
 With my more noble meaning,—not a man
 Shall pass his quarter, or offend the stream
 Of regular justice in your city's bounds,
 But shall be remedied, to your public laws,
 At heaviest answer.

Both. 'Tis most nobly spoken.

Alcib. Descend, and keep your words.

[The Senators descend, and open the gates.]

Enter a Soldier.

Sol. My noble general, Timon is dead;
 Entomb'd upon the very hem o' the sea:
 And on his grave-stone this insculpture, which
 With wax I brought away, whose soft impression Interprets for my poor ignorance.

Alcib. [Rends.] Here lies a wretched corse, of wretched soul bereft:

Seek not my name: A plague consume you wicked cut-throats left!
 Here lie I Timon; who, alive, all living men did hate:
 Pass by, and curse thy fill; but pass and stay not here thy gait.

These will express in thee thy latter spirits:
 Though thou abhor'dst in us our human griefs, Scorn'dst our brain's flow, and those our droplets
 which

From niggard nature fall, yet rich conceit
 Taught thee to make vast Neptune weep for aye
 On thy low grave, on faults forgiven. Dead
 Is noble Timon; of whose memory
 Hereafter more.—Bring me into your city,
 And I will use the olive with my sword:
 Make war breed peace; make peace stint war; make each

Prescribe to other, as each other's leech.

Let our drums strike.

[Exeunt.]

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

THE original quarto edition of 'Troilus and Cressida' was printed in 1609. No other edition of the play was published until it appeared in the folio collection of 1623.

"The original story," says Dryden, "was written by one Lollius, a Lombard, in Latin verse, and translated by Chaucer into English; intended, I suppose, a satire on the inconstancy of women. I find nothing of it among the ancients, not so much as the name Cressida once mentioned. Shakspeare (as I hinted), in the apprenticeship of his writing, modelled it into that play which is now called by the name of 'Troilus and Cressida.' " Without entering into the question who Lollius was, we at once receive the 'Troilus and Creseide' of Chaucer as the foundation of Shakspeare's play. Of his perfect acquaintance with that poem there can be no doubt. Chaucer, of all English writers, was the one who would have the greatest charm for Shakspeare. Mr. Godwin has justly observed that the Shaksperian commentators have done injustice to Chaucer in not more distinctly associating his poem with this remarkable play. But although the main incidents in the adventures of the Greek lover and his faithless mistress, as given by Chaucer, are followed with little deviation, yet, independent of the wonderful difference in the characterisation, the whole story under the treatment of Shakspeare becomes thoroughly original. In no play does he appear to us to have a more complete mastery over his materials, or to mould them into more plastic shapes by the force of his most surpassing imagination. The great Homeric poem, the rude romance of the destruction of Troy, the beautiful elaboration of that romance by Chaucer, are all subjected to his wondrous alchemy; and new forms and combinations are called forth so lifelike, that all the representations which have preceded them look cold and rigid statues, not warm and breathing men and women. Coleridge's theory of the principle upon which this was effected is, we have no doubt, essentially true:—

"I am half inclined to believe that Shakspeare's main object (or shall I rather say his ruling impulse?) was to translate the poetic heroes of Paganism into the not less rude, but more intellectually vigorous, and more featurely, warriors of Christian chivalry, and to substantiate the distinct and graceful profiles or outlines of the Homeric epic into the flesh and blood of the romantic drama,—in short, to give a grand history-piece in the robust style of Albert Dürer." *

Dryden, we have seen, speaks of Shakspeare's 'Troilus and Cressida' as a work of his apprenticeship. Dryden himself aspired to reform it with his own master-hand. The notion of Dryden was to convert the 'Troilus and Cressida' into a regular tragedy. He complains that "the chief persons who give name to the tragedy are left alive: Cressida is false, and is not punished." The excitement of pity and terror, we are told, is the only ground of tragedy. Tragedy, too, must have "a moral that directs the whole action of the play to one centre." To this standard, then, is Shakspeare's 'Troilus and Cressida' to be reduced. The chief persons who give name to the tragedy are not to be left alive. Cressida is not to be false; but she is to die; and so terror and pity are to be produced. And then comes the moral:—

"Then, since from home-bred factions ruin springs, Let subjects learn obedience to their kings."

The management by which Dryden has accomplished this metamorphosis is one of the most remarkable examples of perverted ingenuity. He had a licentious age to please. He could not spare a line, or a word, of what may be considered the objectionable scenes between Pandarus, Troilus, and Cressida. They found no part of the "rubbish" he desired to remove. He has heightened them wherever possible; and what in Shakspeare was a sly allusion becomes with him a positive grossness. Now let us consider for a moment what Shakspeare intended by these scenes. Cressida is the exception to Shakspeare's general idea of the female character. She is beautiful, witty, accomplished,—but she is impure. In her, love is not a sentiment, or a passion,—it is an impulse. Temperament is stronger than will. Her love has nothing ideal, spiritual, in its composition. It is not constant, because it is not discriminate. Setting apart her inconstancy, how altogether different is Cressida from Juliet, or Viola, or Helena, or Perdita. There is nothing in her which could be called love: no depth, no concentration of feeling,—nothing that can bear the name of devotion. Shakspeare would not permit a mistake to be made on the subject; and he has therefore given to Ulysses to describe her, as he conceived her. Considering what his intentions were, and what really is the high morality of the characterisation, we can scarcely say that he has made the representation too prominent. When he drew Cressida, we think he had the feeling strong on his mind which gave birth to the 129th Sonnet. A French writer, in a notice of this play, says, "Les deux amants se voient, s'entendent, et sont heureux." Shakspeare has described such happiness:—

"A bliss in proof,—and prov'd, a very woe;
Before, a joy propos'd; behind, a dream:
All this the world well knows; yet none know how To stunn the heaven that leads men to this hell."

It was this morality that Shakspeare meant to lose when he painted this one exception to the general part of his female characters.

* Literary Remains, vol. ii. p. 183.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

- PRIAM, King of Troy.
Appears, Act II. sc. 2. Act V. sc. 3.
- HECTOR, son to Priam.
Act II. sc. 2. Act IV. sc. 5. Act V. sc. 3; sc. 4; sc. 6; sc. 9.
- ROILUS, son to Priam.
Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 2. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 4; sc. 5. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 4.
- PARIS, son to Priam.
Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 3; sc. 4; sc. 8.
- IPHOBUS, son to Priam.
Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 3; sc. 4.
- ELENUS, son to Priam.
Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2.
- AS, a Trojan commander.
Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5. Act V. sc. 2; sc. 11.
- ANDROPHAGUS, a Trojan commander.
Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 3; sc. 4.
- PHILOTHOUS, a priest, taking part with the Greeks.
Appears, Act III. sc. 3.
- NESTOR, uncle to Cressida.
Act III. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act IV. sc. 4. Act V. sc. 3; sc. 11.
- DEIPHOBUS, a bastard son to Priam.
Appears, Act V. sc. 8.
- NESTOR, the Grecian general.
Act II. sc. 3. Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 5; sc. 10.
- NESTOR, brother to Agamemnon.
Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 5. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 8; sc. 10.
- NESTOR, a Grecian commander.
Act I. sc. 3. Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 2. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 5; sc. 6; sc. 7; sc. 9.
- AJAX, a Grecian commander.
Appears, Act II. sc. 1; sc. 3. Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 5. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 5; sc. 6; sc. 10.
- ULYSSES, a Grecian commander.
Appears, Act I. sc. 3. Act II. sc. 3. Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 5. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 5.
- NESTOR, a Grecian commander.
Appears, Act I. sc. 3. Act II. sc. 3. Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 5. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 5; sc. 10.
- DIOMEDES, a Grecian commander.
Appears, Act II. sc. 3. Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 3; sc. 4; sc. 5. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 4; sc. 5; sc. 6; sc. 10.
- PATROCLUS, a Grecian commander.
Appears, Act II. sc. 1; sc. 3. Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 5. Act V. sc. 1.
- THERSITES, a deformed and scurrilous Grecian.
Appears, Act II. sc. 1; sc. 3. Act III. sc. 3. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 4; sc. 8.
- ALEXANDER, servant to Cressida.
Appears, Act I. sc. 2.
- Servant to Troilus.
Appears, Act I. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 2.
- Servant to Paris.
Appears, Act III. sc. 1.
- Servant to Diomedes.
Appears, Act V. sc. 5.
- HELEN, wife to Menelaus.
Appears, Act III. sc. 1.
- ANDROMACHE, wife to Hector.
Appears, Act V. sc. 5.
- CASSANDRA, daughter to Priam; a prophetess.
Appears, Act II. sc. 2. Act V. sc. 5.
- CRESSIDA, daughter to Calchas.
Appears, Act I. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 2. Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 4; sc. 5. Act V. sc. 2.
- Trojan and Greek Soldiers, and Attendants.*

SCENE.—TROY, AND THE GRECIAN CAMP BEFORE IT.

PROLOGUE.

the scene. From isles of Greece their high blood chaf'd,
 of Athens sent their ships, ministers and instruments
 forty and nine that wore gal, from the Athenian bay Phrygia: and their vow is made within whose strong immures
 en, Menelaus' queen,
 she sleeps,—and that's the quarrel
 come;
 wing barks do there disgorge
 sightage: Now on Dardan plains unbruised Greeks do pitch
 ions: Priam's six-gated city,
 mbria, Ilias, Chetas, Trojan, with massy staples,
 and fulfilling bolts,

1—the French orgueilleux.
 verb fulfil is here used in the original sense

Sperr up<sup>a</sup> the sons of Troy.
 Now expectation, tickling skittish spirits,
 On one and other side, Trojan and Greek,
 Sets all on hazard:—And hither am I come
 A prologue arm'd,<sup>b</sup>—but not in confidence
 Of author's pen, or actor's voice; but suited
 In like conditions as our argument,—
 To tell you, fair beholders, that our play
 Leaps o'er the vaunt<sup>c</sup> and firstlings of those broils,
 Beginning in the middle; starting thence away
 To what may be digested in a play.
 Like, or find fault; do as your pleasures are;
 Now good, or bad, 't is but the chance of war.

<sup>a</sup> Sperr up. The original has stirr up, but we prefer the alteration. The relative positions of each force are contrasted. The Greeks pitch their pavilions on Dardan plains: the Trojans are shut up in their six-gated city. Sperr is used in the sense of to fasten, by Spenser and earlier writers.

<sup>b</sup> Arm'd. Johnson has pointed out that the Prologue was spoken by one of the characters in armour. This was noticed, because in general the speaker of the Prologue wore a black cloak.

<sup>c</sup> Vaunt—the van.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Troy. Before Priam's Palace.

Enter TROIILUS armed, and PANDARUS.

Tro. Call here my varlet,<sup>a</sup> I'll unarm again :
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within ?
Each Trojan that is master of his heart,
Let him to field ; Troilus, alas ! hath none.

Pan. Will this gear ne'er be mended ?

Tro. The Greeks are stroug, and skilful to their strength, Fierce to their skill, and to their fierceness valiant ;
But I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance,
Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
And skill-less as unpractis'd infancy.

Pan. Well, I have told you enough of this : for my part I'll not meddle nor make no farther. He that will have a cake out of the wheat must needs tarry the grinding.

Tro. Have I not tarried ?

Pan. Ay, the grinding : but you must tarry the bolting.

Tro. Have I not tarried ?

Pan. Ay, the bolting : but you must tarry the leavening.

Tro. Still have I tarried.

Pan. Ay, to the leavening : but here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cake, the heating of the oven, and the baking ; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burn your lips.

Tro. Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be,
Doth lesser blench at sufferance than I do.

At Priam's royal table do I sit ;
And when fair Cressid comes into my thoughts,—
So, traitor ! when she comes !—When is she thence ?

Pan. Well, she looked yesternight fairer than ever I saw her look, or any woman else.

Tro. I was about to tell thee,—When my heart,
As wedged with a sigh would rive in twain ;
Lest Hector or my father should perceive me,
I have (as when the sun doth light a storm)
Buried this sigh in wrinkle of a smile :
But sorrow that is couch'd in seeming gladness
Is like that mirth fate turns to sudden sadness.

Pan. An her hair were not somewhat darker than Helen's (well, go to), there were no more comparison between the women. But, for my part, she is my kinswoman ; I would not, as they term it, praise her,—But I would somebody had heard her talk yesterday, as I did. I will not dis-praise your sister Cassandra's wit ; but—

Tro. O, Pandarus ! I tell thee, Pandarus,—
When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drown'd, Reply not in how many fathoms deep
They lie indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressid's love : Thou answer'st, she is fair ;
Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice ;
Handlest in thy discourse, O, that her hand,
In whose comparison all whites are ink,
Writing their own reproach ;<sup>b</sup> to whose soft seizure
The cygnet's down is harsh, and spirit of sense<sup>c</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Varlet—a servant. Tooke considers that varlet and valet are the same ; and that, as well as varlet, they mean hireling.

<sup>b</sup> We do not receive this passage as an interjection beginning "O ! that her hand ;" for what does Troilus desire ?—the wish is incomplete. The meaning we conceive to be rather,—in thy discourse thou handlest that hand of hers, in whose comparison, &c.

<sup>c</sup> Johnson explains spirit of sense as the most exquisite sensibility of touch.

Hard as the palm of ploughman ;—this thou
As true thou tell'st me, when I say I love her
But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm, Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath got
The knife that made it.

Pan. I speak no more than truth.

Tro. Thou dost not speak so much.

Pan. Faith, I'll not meddle in't. Let she is : if she be fair 't is the better for her not she has the mends in her own hands.

Tro. Good Pandarus ! How now, Pandarus ?

Pan. I have had my labour for my thought on of her, and ill-thought on of you tween and between, but small thanks for my

Tro. What, art thou angry, Pandarus ?

Pan. Because she is kin to me, therefore so fair as Helen : an she were not kin to me be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday, care I ? I care not an she were a black-all one to me.

Tro. Say I she is not fair ?

Pan. I do not care whether you do or fool to stay behind her father ; let her to and so I'll tell her the next time I see her part, I'll meddle nor make no more in the

Tro. Pandarus,—

Pan. Not I.

Tro. Sweet Pandarus,—

Pan. Pray you, speak no more to me ;
all as I found it, and there an end.

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Tro. Peace, you ungracious clamorous sounds !

Fools on both sides ! Helen must needs be
When with your blood you daily paint her
I cannot fight upon this argument ;
It is too starv'd a subject for my sword.
But Pandarus—O gods, how do you plague
I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandarus ;
And he's as tetchy to be woo'd to woo,
As she is stubborn, chaste, against all suit.
Tell me, Apollo, for thy Daphne's love,
What Cressid is, what Pandarus, and what
Her bed is India ; there she lies, a pearl :
Between our Ilium and where she resides,
Let it be call'd the wild and wandering sea,
Ourselves, the merchant ; and this sailing sea
Our doubtful hope, our convoy, and our bliss.

Alarum. Enter ÆNEAS.

Æne. How now, prince Troilus ? wherefore
Tro. Because not there : This woman's a
For womanish it is to be from thence.

What news, Æneas, from the field to-day ?

Æne. That Paris is returned home, and

Tro. By whom, Æneas ?

Æne. Troilus, by Menelaus.

Tro. Let Paris bleed : 't is but a scar to Paris is gor'd with Menelaus' horn.

Æne. Hark ! what good sport is out of the Tro. Better at home, if " would I might

" may."

But to the sport abroad :—Are you bound to

Æne. In all swift haste.

Tro. Come, go we then together.

SCENE II.—The same. A Street.

Enter CRESSIDA and ALEXANDER.

Cres. Who were those went by ?

Queen Hecuba, and Helen.
 either go they?

Up to the eastern tower,
 commands as subject all the vale,

Hector, whose patience
 e'd, to-day was mov'd :
 sache, and struck his armourer ;
 e were husbandry in war,
 se he was harness'd light, goes he ; where every flower
 t, weep what it foresaw
 h.

What was his cause of anger ?
 ise goes, this : There is among the blood, nephew to Hector ;

 jax.

Good ; and what of him ?
 y he is a very man per se, e.

 all men ; unless they are drunk, sick,

an, lady, hath robbed many beasts of additions ; he is as valiant as the lion, ear, slow as the elephant : a man into th so crowded humours, that his valour folly, his folly sauced with discretion :
 hath a virtue that he hath not : a glimpse an attainment but he carries some stain scholy without cause, and merry against th the joints of everything ; but everyoint, that he is a gouty Briareus, many e ; or purblind Argus, all eyes and w should this man, that makes me ctor angry ?

ay he yesterday coped Hector in the ck him down ; the disdain and shame ever since kept Hector fasting and

Enter PANDARUS.

ome here ?

s, your uncle Pandarus.

's a gallant man.

y be in the world, lady.

t that ? what 's that ?

narrow, uncle Pandarus.

narrow, cousin Cressid : What do you morrow, Alexander.—How do you, were you at Ilium ?

orning, uncle.

were you talking of when I came ?
 oed, and gone, ere ye came to Ilium ?
 p, was she ?

was gone ; but Helen was not up.

; Hector was stirring early.

ere we talking of, and of his anger.

: angry ?

ays here.

e was so ; I know the cause too ; he 'll
 o-day, I can tell them that : and there 's come far behind him ; let them take

 ; I can tell them that too.

is he angry too ?

Troilus ? Troilus is the better man of iter ! there 's no comparison.

not between Troilus and Hector ? Do

: if you see him ?

I ever saw him before, and knew him.

say Troilus is Troilus.

ou say as I say ; for I am sure he is not

Pan. No, nor Hector is not Troilus, in some degrees

Cres. 'T is just to each of them ; he is himself.

Pan. Himself ? Alas, poor Troilus ! I would he were.

Cres. So he is.

Pan. 'Condition, I had gone barefoot to India.

Cres. He is not Hector.

Pan. Himself ? no, he 's not himself.—'Would 'a were himself ! Well, the gods are above. Time must friend, or end : Well, Troilus, well,—I would my heart were in her body !—No, Hector is not a better man than Troilus.

Cres. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cres. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. The other 's not come to 't ; you shall tell me another tale when the other 's come to 't. Hector shall not have his wit this year.

Cres. He shall not need it, if he have his own.

Pan. Nor his qualities ;—

Cres. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beauty.

Cres. 'T would not become him, his own 's better.

Pan. You have no judgment, niece : Helen herself swore the other day, that Troilus, for a brown favour,
 (for so 't is, I must confess.)—Not brown neither.

Cres. No, but brown.

Pan. Faith, to say truth, brown and not brown.

Cres. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion above Paris.

Cres. Why, Paris hath colour enough.

Pan. So he has.

Cres. Then Troilus should have too much : if she praised him above, his complexion is higher than his ;
 he having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion. I had as lief Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nose.

Pan. I swear to you, I think Helen loves him better than Paris.

Cres. Then she 's a merry Greek, indeed.

Pan. Nay, I am sure she does. She came to him the other day into the compassed window,*—and, you know, he has not past three or four hairs on his chin.

Cres. Indeed, a tapster's arithmetic may soon bring his particulars therein to a total.

Pan. Why, he is very young : and yet will he,
 within three pound, lift as much as his brother Hector.

Cres. Is he so young a man, and so old a lifter ?<sup>b</sup>

Pan. But, to prove to you that Helen loves him ;—
 she came, and puts me her white hand to his cloven chin,—

Cres. Juno have mercy !—How came it cloven ?

Pan. Why, you know, 't is dimpled : I think his smiling becomes him better than any man in all Phrygia.

Cres. O, he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does he not ?

Cres. O yes, an 't were a cloud in autumn.

Pan. Why, go to then.—But to prove to you that Helen loves Troilus,—

Cres. Troilus will stand to the proof, if you 'll prove it so.

Pan. Troilus ? why, he esteems her no more than I esteem an addle egg.

Cres. If you love an addle egg as well as you love an idle head, you would eat chickens i' the shell.

Pan. I cannot choose but laugh, to think how she tickled his chin !—Indeed, she has a marvellous white hand, I must needs confess.

Cres. Without the rack.

Pan. And she takes upon her to spy a white hair on his chin.

* Compassed window—a bow-window.

<sup>b</sup> Lifter—thief. We still say a trooper

Cres. Alas, poor chin! many a wart is richer.
Pan. But there was such laughing;—Queen Hecuba laughed, that her eyes ran o'er.
Cres. With mill-stones.
Pan. And Cassandra laughed.
Cres. But there was more temperate fire under the pot of her eyes:—Did her eyes run o'er too?
Pan. And Hector laughed.
Cres. At what was all this laughing?
Pan. Marry, at the white hair that Helen spied on Troilus' chin.
Cres. An't had been a green hair, I should have laughed too.
Pan. They laughed not so much at the hair, as at his pretty answer.
Cres. What was his answer?
Pan. Quoth she, "Here's but two and fifty hairs on your chin, and one of them is white."
Cres. This is her question.
Pan. That's true; make no question of that. "Two and fifty hairs," quoth he, "and one white: That white hair is my father, and all the rest are his sons."—"Jupiter!" quoth she, "which of these hairs is Paris my husband?"—"The forked one," quoth he, "pluck it out, and give it him." But, there was such laughing! and Helen so blushed, and Paris so chafed, and all the rest so laughed, that it passed.<sup>a</sup>
Cres. So let it now; for it has been a great while going by.
Pan. Well, cousin, I told you a thing yesterday; think on't.
Cres. So I do.
Pan. I'll be sworn't is true; he will weep you, an't were a man born in April.
Cres. And I'll spring up in his tears, an't were a nettle against May.

[A retreat sounded.]
Pan. Hark, they are coming from the field: Shall we stand up here, and see them, as they pass toward Ilium? good niece, do; sweet niece Cressida.
Cres. At your pleasure.

Pan. Here, here, here's an excellent place; here we may see most bravely: I'll tell you them all by their names, as they pass by; but mark Troilus above the rest.

ÆNEAS passes over the Stage.
Cres. Speak not so loud.
Pan. That's Æneas: Is not that a brave man? he's one of the flowers of Troy, I can tell you. But mark Troilus; you shall see anon.
Cres. Who's that?

ANTENOR passes over.
Pan. That's Antenor; he has a shrewd wit, I can tell you; and he's a man good enough: he's one o' the soundest judgment in Troy, whosoever, and a proper man of person:—When comes Troilus?—I'll show you Troilus anon; if he see me, you shall see him nod at me.
Cres. Will he give you the nod?
Pan. You shall see.
Cres. If he do, the rich shall have more.

HECTOR passes over.
Pan. That's Hector, that, that, look you, that: there's a fellow;—Go thy way, Hector!—There's a brave man, niece.—O brave Hector!—Look, how he looks! there's a countenance! Is't not a brave man?
Cres. O, a brave man!
Pan. Is't a not? It does a man's heart good—Look you what hacks are on his helmet! look you yonder, do you see? look you there! there's no jesting: there's laying on; take't off who will, as they say: there be hacks!
Cres. Be those with swords?

<sup>a</sup> Used—was excessive. The retort of Cressida accepts the word in its common signification

PARIS passes over.

Pan. Swords? anything, he cares not: come to him, it's all one: By god's lid, heart good:—Yonder comes Paris, yonder look ye yonder, niece. Is't not a gallant't not?—Why, this is brave now.—Who hurt home to-day? he's not hurt: why, Helen's heart good now. Ha! would I could see Troilus now!—you shall see Troilus anon.
Cres. Who's that?

HELENUS passes over.

Pan. That's Helenus,—I marvel where that's Helenus;—I think he went not far.—That's Helenus.
Cres. Can Helenus fight, uncle?
Pan. Helenus? no;—yes, he'll fight well:—I marvel where Troilus is!—Hark; hear the people cry, Troilus?—Helenus is a Cres. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

TROILUS passes over.

Pan. Where? yonder? that's Deiphobus! Troilus! there's a man, niece!—Hem!—Troilus! the prince of chivalry.
Cres. Peace, for shame, peace!
Pan. Mark him; note him:—O leave me to look well upon him, niece; look you, how he looks, and how he goes!—O youth! he ne'er saw three-and-twenty. Go Troilus, go thy way; had I a sister were a daughter a goddess, he should take his admiring man! Paris?—Paris is dirt to his warrant, Helen, to change, would give money

Forces pass over the stage.

Cres. Here come more.
Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all
Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles
Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a Cres. Well, well.
Pan. Well, well?—Why, have you any
Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be
Pan. You are such another woman! one
Cres. Upon my back to defend my belly;
Pan. Wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy,
Cres. Mine honesty; my mask, to defend my Pan. You, to defend all these: and at all these
Cres. At a thousand watches.
Pan. Say one of your watches.
Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and
Pan. Of the chiefest of them too; if I cannot Cres. Would not have hit, I can watch you for
Pan. Took the blow; unless it swell just hiding,
Cres. It's past watching.
Pan. You are such another!

Enter TROILUS' Boy.

Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.
Pan. Where?
Boy. At your own house; there he waits.
Pan. Good boy, tell him I come!
Cres. I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good ones.

Forces pass over the stage.

Cres. Here come more.
Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all
Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles
Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a Cres. Well, well.
Pan. Well, well?—Why, have you any
Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be
Pan. You are such another woman! one
Cres. Upon my back to defend my belly;
Pan. Wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy,
Cres. Mine honesty; my mask, to defend my
Pan. You, to defend all these: and at all these
Cres. At a thousand watches.
Pan. Say one of your watches.
Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and
Pan. Of the chiefest of them too; if I cannot
Cres. Would not have hit, I can watch you for
Pan. Took the blow; unless it swell just hiding,
Cres. It's past watching.
Pan. You are such another!

Enter TROILUS' Boy.
Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.
Pan. Where?
Boy. At your own house; there he waits.
Pan. Good boy, tell him I come!
Cres. I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good ones.

Forces pass over the stage.

Cres. Here come more.
Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all
Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles
Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a Cres. Well, well.
Pan. Well, well?—Why, have you any
Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be
Pan. You are such another woman! one
Cres. Upon my back to defend my belly;
Pan. Wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy,
Cres. Mine honesty; my mask, to defend my
Pan. You, to defend all these: and at all these
Cres. At a thousand watches.
Pan. Say one of your watches.
Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and
Pan. Of the chiefest of them too; if I cannot
Cres. Would not have hit, I can watch you for
Pan. Took the blow; unless it swell just hiding,
Cres. It's past watching.
Pan. You are such another!

Enter TROILUS' Boy.
Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.
Pan. Where?
Boy. At your own house; there he waits.
Pan. Good boy, tell him I come!
Cres. I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good ones.

Forces pass over the stage.

Cres. Here come more.
Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all
Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles
Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a Cres. Well, well.
Pan. Well, well?—Why, have you any
Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be
Pan. You are such another woman! one
Cres. Upon my back to defend my belly;
Pan. Wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy,
Cres. Mine honesty; my mask, to defend my
Pan. You, to defend all these: and at all these
Cres. At a thousand watches.
Pan. Say one of your watches.
Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and
Pan. Of the chiefest of them too; if I cannot
Cres. Would not have hit, I can watch you for
Pan. Took the blow; unless it swell just hiding,
Cres. It's past watching.
Pan. You are such another!

Enter TROILUS' Boy.
Boy. Sir, my lord would instantly speak with you.
Pan. Where?
Boy. At your own house; there he waits.
Pan. Good boy, tell him I come!
Cres. I doubt he be hurt.—Fare ye well, good ones.

Forces pass over the stage.

Cres. Here come more.
Pan. Asses, fools, dolts! chaff and bran, bran! porridge after meat! I could live and die of Troilus. Ne'er look, ne'er look; the eagles crows and daws, crows and daws! I had rather a man as Troilus, than Agamemnon and all
Cres. There is among the Greeks, Achilles
Pan. Achilles? a drayman, a porter, a Cres. Well, well.
Pan. Well, well?—Why, have you any
Cres. Ay, a minced man: and then to be
Pan. You are such another woman! one
Cres. Upon my back to defend my belly;
Pan. Wit, to defend my wiles; upon my secrecy,
Cres. Mine honesty; my mask, to defend my
Pan. You, to defend all these: and at all these
Cres. At a thousand watches.
Pan. Say one of your watches.
Cres. Nay, I'll watch you for that; and
Pan. Of the chiefest of them too; if I cannot
Cres. Would not have hit, I can watch you for
Pan. Took the blow; unless it swell just hiding,
Cres. It's past watching.
Pan. You are such another!

en, uncle.
 be with you, niece, by and by.
 ring, uncle,—
 a token from Troilus,
 the same token—you are a bawd.
 [Exit PANDARUS.
 , gifts, tears, and love's full sacrifice,
 mother's enterprise :
 Troilus thousand-fold I see glass of Pandar's praise may be ;
 E Women are angels, wooing :
 are done, joy's soul lies in the doing ;
 w'd knows nought that knows not this,— e thing ungain'd more than it is :
 never yet that ever knew sweet, as when desire did sue :
 s maxim out of love I teach,— is command ; ungain'd, beseech :
 my heart's content firm love doth bear,
 at shall from my eyes appear. [Exit.

L.—The Grecian Camp. Before Agamemnon's Tent.

nter AGAMEMNON, NESTOR, ULYSSES, MENELAUS, and others.
 inces,
 ath set the jaundice on your cheeks ?
 oposition that hope makes
 s begun on earth below,
 romis'd largeness : checks and disasters reins of actions highest rear'd ;
 the conflux of meeting sap,
 and pine, and divert his grain
 errant from his course of growth.
 is it matter new to us, e short of our suppose so far,
 ven years' siege, yet Troy walls stand :
 tion that hath gone before,
 ave record, trial did draw
 art, not answering the aim, odied figure of the thought surmised shape. Why then, you princes, cheeks abash'd behold our works ;
 em shames, which are, indeed, nought else active trials of great Jove, stive constancy in men ?
 of which metal is not found
 ove : for then, the bold and coward,
 l fool, the artist and unread,
 l soft, seem all affin'd and kin :
 ind and tempest of her frown,
 with a broad and powerful fan,
 l, winnows the light away ;
 th mass, or matter, by itself virtue, and unmingled.
 h due observance of thy godlike seat,
 emnon, Nestor shall apply
 rds. In the reproof of chance proof of men : the sea being smooth, hallow bauble boats dare sail ent breast, making their way nobler bulk !
 offian Boreas once enrage
 hetis, and anon, behold
 bb'd bark through liquid mountains cut,
 tween the two moist elements,
 l horse : Where 's then the saucy boat, untimber'd sides but even now reatness ? either to harbour fled, ast for Neptune. Even so
 s show, and valour's worth, divide, fortune : For, in her ray and brightness,
 h more annoyance by the brize *

* Brize—the wind-fly.

Than by the tiger ; but when the splitting wind
 Makes flexible the knees of knotted oaks,
 And flies fled under shade, why, then, the thing of courage,

As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,
 And, with an accent tun'd in self-same key,
 Returns to chiding fortune.

Ulyss. Agamemnon,—
 Thou great commander, nerve and bone of Greece
 Heart of our numbers, soul and only spirit,
 In whom the tempers and the minds of all
 Should be shut up,—hear what Ulysses speaks
 Besides the applause and approbation
 The which,—most mighty for thy place and sway,—

[To AGAMEMNON.
 And thou most reverend for thy stretch'd-out life,

[To NESTOR.
 I give to both your speeches,—which were such As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
 Should hold up high in brass ; and such again
 As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
 Should with a bond of air, strong as the axletree
 On which the heavens ride, knit all Greeks' ears
 To his experienc'd tongue,—yet let it please both,— Thou great,—and wise,—to hear Ulysses speak.

Agam. Speak, prince of Ithaca ; and be 't of less expect
 That matter needless, of importless burden,
 Divide thy lips, than we are confident,
 When rank Thersites opes his mastick * jaws,
 We shall hear music, wit, and oracle.

Ulyss. Troy, yet upon his basis, had been down,
 And the great Hector's sword had lack'd a master,
 But for these instances.

The specialty of rule hath been neglected :
 And, look, how many Grecian tents do stand
 Hollow upon this plain, so many hollow factions.
 When that the general is not like the hive,
 To whom the foragers shall all repair,
 What honey is expected ? Degree being vizarded,
 The unworthing shows as fairly in the mask.
 The heavens themselves, the planets and this centre,
 Observe degree, priority, and place,
 Insisture, course, proportion, season, form,
 Office, and custom, in all line of order :
 And therefore is the glorious planet, Sol,
 In noble eminence enthron'd and spher'd
 Amidst the other ; whose medicinal eye
 Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil,
 And posts, like the commandment of a king,
 Sans check, to good and bad ; But when the planets,
 In evil mixture, to disorder wander,
 What plagues, and what portents ! what mutiny !
 What raging of the sea ! shaking of earth !
 Commotion in the winds ! frights, changes, horrors,
 Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
 The unity and married calm of states
 Quite from their fixture ! O, when degree is shak'd,
 Which is the ladder to all high designs,
 The enterprise is sick ! How could communities,
 Degrees in schools, and brotherhoods in cities,
 Peaceful commerce from dividable shores,
 The primogenitive and due of birth,
 Prerogative of age, crowns, sceptres, laurels,

* Mastick. We retain the word of the original. Masticks is there printed with a capital initial, as marking something emphatic. In all modern editions the word is rendered maskeer. We are inclined to think that mastick is not a typographical mistake. Every one has heard of Prynne's celebrated book, 'Historic-Mastix: The Player's Scourge !' but it is not so generally known that this title was borrowed by the great controversy-scholar from a play first printed in 1610, but supposed to be written earlier, which is a satire upon actors and dramatic writers from first to last. It appears to us by no means improbable that an epithet should be applied to the "rank Thersites" which should pretty clearly point at one who had done enough to make him self obnoxious to the poet's fraternity.

But by degree, stand in authentic place?
 Take but degree away, untune that string,
 And, hark, what discord follows! each thing meets
 In mere oppugnancy: The bounded waters
 Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
 And make a sop of all this solid globe:
 Strength should be lord of imbecility,
 And the rude son should strike his father dead:
 Force should be right; or, rather, right and wrong
 (Between whose endless jar justice resides)
 Should lose their names, and so should justice too.
 Then everything includes itself in power,
 Power into will, will into appetite;
 And appetite an universal wolf,
 So doubly seconded with will and power,
 Must make, perforce, an universal prey,
 And, last, eat up himself. Great Agamemnon,
 This chaos, when degree is suffocate,
 Follows the choking.
 And this neglect of degree is it,
 That by a pace goes backward, in a purpose
 It hath to climb. The general 's disdain'd
 By him one step below; he, by the next;
 That next, by him beneath: so every step,
 Exemplified by the first pace that is sick
 Of his superior, grows to an envious fever
 Of pale and bloodless emulation:
 And 't is this fever that keeps Troy on foot,
 Not her own sinews. To end a tale of length,
 Troy in our weakness lives, not in her strength.
Nest. Most wisely hath Ulysses here discover'd
 The fever whereof all our power is sick.
Agam. The nature of the sickness found, Ulysses,
 What is the remedy?
Ulyss. The great Achilles, whom opinion crowns
 The sinew and the forehead of our host,
 Having his ear full of his airy fame,
 Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
 Lies mocking our designs: With him, Patroclus, Upon a lazy bed, the livelong day
 Breaks scurril jests;
 And with ridiculous and awkward action
 (Which, slanderer, he imitation calls)
 He pageants us. Sometime, great Agamemnon, Thy topless deputation he puts on;
 And like a strutting player, whose conceit
 Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich
 To hear the wooden dialogue and sound
 Twix his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage,
 Such to-be-pitied and o'er-wrested seeming
 He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks,
 'T is like a chime a mending; with terms unsquar'd,
 Which from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropp'd
 Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty stuff,
 The large Achilles, on his press'd bed lolling,
 From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
 Cries—"Excellent!—'T is Agamemnon just.—
 Now play me Nestor;—hem, and stroke thy beard,
 As he, being 'dress'd to some oration."
 That 's done;—as near as the extremest ends
 Of parallels,—as like as Vulcan and his wife:
 Yet god Achilles still cries, "Excellent;
 'T is Nestor right! Now play him me, Patroclus, Arming to answer in a night alarm."
 And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
 Must be the scene of mirth; to cough, and spit,
 And with a palsy, fumbling on his gorget,
 Shake in and out the rivet;—and at this sport,
 Sir Valour dies; cries, "O!—enough, Patroclus;
 Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all
 In pleasure of my spleen." And in this fashion,
 All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
 Severals and generals of grace exact,
 Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,

Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
 Success, or loss, what is, or is not, serves
 As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twain (Whom, as Ulysses says, opinion crowns
 With an imperial voice,) many are infect.
 Ajax is grown self-will'd; and bears his head
 In such a rein, in full as proud a place
 As broad Achilles; keeps his tent like him;
 Makes factious feasts; rails on our state of war
 Bold as an oracle; and sets Thersites
 (A slave whose gall coins slanders like a mint)
 To match us in comparisons with dirt;
 To weaken and discredit our exposure,
 How rank soever rounded in with danger.

Ulyss. They tax our policy, and call it cowardice
 Count wisdom as no member of the war;
 Forestall prescience, and esteem no act
 But that of hand: the still and mental parts,—
 That do contrive how many hands shall strike,
 When fitness calls them on; and know, by measure
 Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight,—
 Why, this hath not a finger's dignity:
 They call this bed-work, mappery, closet-war:
 So that the ram that batters down the wall,
 For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,
 They place before his hand that made the engine;
 Or those that with the fineness of their souls
 By reason guide his execution.

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles' horse Makes many Thetis' sons. [Trucket sound]
Agam. What trumpet? look, Menelaus.

Enter ÆNEAS.

Men. From Troy.
Agam. What would you fore our tent?
Æne.

Great Agamemnon's tent, I pray you?
Agam. Even this.
Æne. May one that is a herald, and a prince,
 Do a fair message to his kingly ears?
Agam. With surety stronger than Achilles' arm Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voice
 Call Agamemnon head and general.

Æne. Fair leave, and large security. How may
 A stranger to those most imperial looks
 Know them from eyes of other mortals?

Agam. How!
Æne. Ay;

I ask, that I might waken reverence,
 And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
 Modest as morning when she coldly eyes
 The youthful Phoebus:
 Which is that god in office, guiding men?
 Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Agam. This Trojan scorns us; or the men of Troy
 Are ceremonious courtiers.

Æne. Courtiers as free, as debonair, unarm'd,
 As bending angels; that 's their fame in peace;
 But when they would seem soldiers, they have good
 Good arms, strong joints, true swords; and, Jove's arm'd
 Nothing so full of heart. But peace, Æneas,
 Peace, Trojan; lay thy finger on thy lip!
 The worthiness of praise distains his work.
 If that the prais'd himself bring the praise forth;
 But what the repining enemy comments,
 That breath fame blows; that praise, sale pure, transcends

Agam. Sir, you of Troy, call you yourself Æneas?
Æne. Ay, Greek, that is my name.

Agam. What 's your affair, I pray?

Æne. Sir, pardon: 't is for Agamemnon's sake.

Agam. He hears nought privately that comes To Troy.

Æne. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper

pet to awake his ear;
 e on the attentive bent,
 eak.
 Speak frankly as the wind;
 emnon's sleeping hour;
 t know, Trojan, he is awake,
 o himself.
 Trumpet, blow loud,
 voice through all these lazy tents;
 ek of mettle, let him know,
 ans fairly shall be spoke aloud.
 [Trumpet sounds
 t Agamemnon, here in Troy
 l Hector, (Priam is his father,)
 all and long-continued truce
 ; he bade me take a trumpet, pose speak. Kings, princes, lords!
 among the fair'st of Greece,
 honour higher than his ease;
 praise more than he fears his peril;
 s valour, and knows not his fear,
 mistress more than in confession, ows to her own lips he loves,)
 r her beauty and her worth, than hers—to him this challenge.
 e of Trojans and of Greeks,
 good, or do his best to do it,
 r, wiser, fairer, truer,
 ek did compass in his arms;
 orrow with his trumpet call,
 een your tents and walls of Troy,
 ecian that is true in love:
 ector shall honour him;
 ay in Troy when he retires,
 ames are sunburnt, and not worth a lance. Even so much,
 shall be told our lovers, lord Æneas;
 a have soul in such a kind,
 all at home: But we are soldiers;
 soldier a mere recreant prove,
 t, hath not, or is not in love!
 or hath, or means to be,
 e Hector; if none else, I 'll be he.
 im of Nestor, one that was a man
 grand sire suck'd: he is old now;
 e not in our Grecian mould
 a, that hath one spark of fire his love, tell him from me,— silver beard in a gold beaver,
 ntrace put this wither'd brawn;
 im, will tell him, that my lady a his grandame, and as chaste
 the world; his youth in flood,
 truth with my three drops of blood.
 heavens forbid such scarcity of youth!
 n.
 lord Æneas, let me touch your hand;
 o shall I lead you first.
 have word of this intent;
 ord of Greece, from tent to tent:
 feast with us before you go,
 welcome of a noble foe.
 [Exeunt all but ULYSSES and NESTOR.
 or!
 says Ulysses?
 e a young conception in my brain,
 e to bring it to some shape.
 is 't?
 't is:
 ive hard knots: The seeded pride is maturity blown up
 es, must or now be cropp'd, seed a nursery of like evil, s all.

Nest. Well, and how?
 Ulyss. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,
 However it is spread in general name,
 Relates in purpose only to Achilles.
 Nest. The purpose is perspicuous even as substance,
 Whose grossness little characters sum up.
 And, in the publication, make no strain,
 But that Achilles, were his brain as barren
 As banks of Libya,—though, Apollo knows,
 'T is dry enough,—will, with great speed of judgment,
 Ay, with celerity, find Hector's purpose
 Pointing on him.
 Ulyss. And wake him to the answer, think you?
 Nest. Yes.
 It is most meet; Whom may you else suppose,
 That can from Hector bring his honour off,
 If not Achilles? Though 't be a sportful combat,
 Yet in this trial much opinion dwells;
 For here the Trojans taste our dear'st repute
 With their fin'st palate: And trust to me, Ulysses,
 Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
 In this wild action: for the success,
 Although particular, shall give a scantling
 Of good or bad unto the general;
 And in such indexes, although small pricks
 To their subsequent volumes, there is seen
 The baby figure of the giant mass
 Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd,
 He that meets Hector issues from our choice:
 And choice, being mutual act of all our souls,
 Makes merit her election; and doth boil,
 As 't were from forth us all, a man distill'd
 Out of our virtues; who, miscarrying,
 What heart from hence receives the conquering part,
 To steel a strong opinion to themselves?
 Which entertain'd, limbs are his instruments,
 In no less working, than are swords and bows
 Directive by the limbs.
 Ulyss. Give pardon to my speech:—
 Therefore 't is meet, Achilles meet not Hector.
 Let us like merchants show our foulest wares,
 And think, perchance, they 'll sell; if not,
 The lustre of the better yet to show
 Shall show the better. Do not consent
 That ever Hector and Achilles meet;
 For both our honour and our shame, in this,
 Are dogg'd with two strange followers.
 Nest. I see them not with my old eyes; what are they?
 Ulyss. What glory our Achilles shares from Hector,
 Were he not proud, we all should wear with him:
 But he already is too insolent;
 And we were better parch in Afric sun,
 Than in the pride and salt scorn of his eyes,
 Should he 'scape Hector fair: If he were foil'd,
 Why, then we did our main opinion crush
 In taint of our best man. No, make a lottery;
 And, by device, let blockish Ajax draw
 The sort to fight with Hector: Among ourselves
 Give him allowance as the worthier man,
 For that will physic the great Myrmidon,
 Who broils in loud applause; and make him fall
 His crest, that prouder than blue Iris bends.
 If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
 We 'll dress him up in voices: If he fall,
 Yet go we under our opinion still
 That we have better men. But, hit or miss,
 Our project's life this shape of sense assumes,— Ajax, employ'd, plucks down Achilles' plumes.
 Nest. Now, Ulysses, I begin to relish thy advice,
 And I will give a taste of it forthwith
 To Agamemnon: go we to him straight.
 Two curs shall tame each other: Pride alone
 Must tarr the mastiffs on, as 't were their bone. [Exe.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Another part of the Grecian Camp.Enter AJAX and THERSITES.

Ajax. Thersites,—
Ther. Agamemnon—how if he had boils? full, all over, generally?
Ajax. Thersites,—
Ther. And those boils did run?—Say so,—did not the general run? were not that a botchy core?
Ajax. Dog,—
Ther. Then would come some matter from him; I see none now.
Ajax. Thou bitch-wolf's son, canst thou not hear? Feel them. [Strikes him.]
Ther. The plague of Greece upon thee, thou mongrel beef-witted lord!
Ajax. Speak then, thou vine<sup>a</sup>'dest<sup>a</sup> leaven, speak: I will beat thee into handsomeness.
Ther. I shall sooner rail thee into wit and holiness: but I think thy horse will sooner con an oration, than thou learn a prayer without book. Thou canst strike, canst thou? a red murrain o' thy jade's tricks!
Ajax. Toadstool, learn me the proclamation.
Ther. Dost thou think I have no sense, thou strik'st me thus?

Ajax. The proclamation—
Ther. Thou art proclaimed a fool, I think.
Ajax. Do not, porcupine, do not; my fingers itch.
Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee: I would make thee the loathsomest scab in Greece. When thou art forth in the incursions, thou strik'st as slow as another.
Ajax. I say, the proclamation,—
Ther. Thou grumblest and rail'st every hour on Achilles; and thou art as full of envy at his greatness, as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty, ay, that thou bark'st at him.
Ajax. Mistress Thersites!
Ther. Thou shouldst strike him.
Ajax. Cobloaf!
Ther. He would pun<sup>b</sup> thee into shivers with his fist, as a sailor breaks a biscuit.
Ajax. You whoreson cur! [Beating him.]
Ther. Do, do.
Ajax. Thou stool for a witch!
Ther. Ay, do, do; thou sodden-witted lord! thou hast no more brain than I have in mine elbows; an assinego<sup>c</sup> may tutor thee: Thou scurvy valiant ass! thou art here but to thrash Trojans; and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit, like a Barbarian slave. If thou use to beat me, I will begin at thy heel, and tell what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels, thou!
Ajax. You dog!
Ther. You scurvy lord!
Ajax. You cur! [Beating him.]
Ther. Mars his idiot! do, rudeness; do, camel; do, do.

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

Achil. Why, how now, Ajax? wherefore do you this? How now, Thersites? what's the matter, man?
Ther. You see him there, do you?
Achil. Ay; what's the matter?
Ther. Nay, look upon him.
Achil. So I do; what's the matter?

<sup>a</sup> dest—vinewed—vinny—signifies decayed, mouldy; in the text is the superlative of vinewed. In the translation of the Bible we have "vinewed trad-

<sup>b</sup> pun—pound.

<sup>c</sup> Assinego—an ass.

Ther. Nay, but regard him well.
Achil. Well, why I do so.
Ther. But yet you look not well upon whosoever you take him to be, he is Ajax.
Achil. I know that, fool.
Ther. Ay, but that fool knows not himself.
Ajax. Therefore I beat thee.
Ther. Lo, lo, lo, lo, what modicums of wit his evasions have ears thus long. I have brain more than he has beat my bones: I will sparrows for a penny, and his pie mater is the ninth part of a sparrow. This lord, Achilles who wears his wit in his belly, and his guts is—I'll tell you what I say of him.
Achil. What?
Ther. I say, this Ajax—
Achil. Nay, good Ajax.

[AJAX offers to strike him, and interposes.]

Ther. Has not so much wit—
Achil. Nay, I must hold you.
Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's whom he comes to fight.
Achil. Peace, fool!
Ther. I would have peace and quietness fool will not: he there; that he; look you the Ajax. O thou damned cur! I shall—
Achil. Will you set your wit to a fool's?
Ther. No, I warrant you; for a fool's will Patr. Good words, Thersites.
Achil. What's the quarrel?
Ajax. I bade the vile owl go learn me the proclamation, and he rails upon me.
Ther. I serve thee not.
Ajax. Well, go to, go to.
Ther. I serve here voluntary.
Achil. Your last service was sufferance, voluntary; no man is beaten voluntary; Ajax the voluntary, and you as under an impress.
Ther. E'en so;—a great deal of your wit is your sinews, or else there he liars. Hector's great catch if he knock out either of your were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.
Achil. What, with me too, Thersites?
Ther. There's Ulysses and old Nestor,—was mouldy ere your grandsires had nails on—yoke you like draught oxen, and make you the war.

Achil. What, what?
Ther. Yes, good sooth. To, Achilles! to!
Ajax. I shall cut out your tongue.
Ther. 'T is no matter; I shall speak as thou, afterwards.
Patr. No more words, Thersites; peace.
Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles bids me, shall I?
Achil. There's for you, Patroclus.
Ther. I will see you banged, like clapp'd come any more to your tents; I will keep wit is wit stirring, and leave the faction of fools.
Patr. A good riddance.
Achil. Marry, this, sir, is proclaim'd through host:
 That Hector, by the fifth<sup>d</sup> hour of the sun,

<sup>d</sup> Fifth. So the folio; the quarto has first. The chivalry did not encounter at the first hour of the fifth of a summer's morning the lines would be on ladies in their seats. The usages of chivalry are here plain.

pet, 'twixt our tents and Troy,
 I'll call some knight to arms,
 I'll charge; and such a one that dare not what; 't is trash: Farewell.

Who shall answer him?
 Not, it is put to lottery; otherwise,

Go you:—I'll go learn more of it.
 [Exeunt.]

roy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

HECTOR, TROILUS, PARIS, and HELENUS.

Many hours, lives, speeches spent,
 As Nestor from the Greeks:
 And all damage else—
 Time, travel, expense,
 And what else dear that is consum'd
 In this cormorant war,—
 Hec'tor, what say you to 't?
 No man lesser fears the Greeks than I,
 My particular, yet, dread Priam,
 For more softer bowels,
 Check in the sense of fear,
 Out—"Who knows what follows?"
 The wound of peace is surety,
 The modest doubt is call'd
 Wise, the tent that searches
 Is the worst. Let Helen go:
 Her mind was drawn about this question,
 Amongst many thousand dimes,<sup>a</sup>
 As Helen; I mean of ours
 Many tenths of ours,
 Not ours; nor worth to us,
 The value of one ten;
 What reason which denies
 Her up?

Fie, fie, my brother!
 The worth and honour of a king
 And sad father, in a scale
 As 't will you with counters sum
 The worth of his infinite?
 The vast most fathomless
 Riches so diminutive
 As 't fie, for godly shame!
 I'll, though you bite so sharp at reasons,
 Of them. Should not our father
 The weight of his affairs with reasons,
 Each hath none, that tells him so?
 In dreams and slumbers, brother priest,
 Reasones with reason. Here are your reasons:
 My intent intends you harm;
 I employ'd is perilous,
 The object of all harm:
 When Helenus beholds
 His sword, if he do set
 Reason to his heels;
 When Mercury from Jove,
 He's orb'd?—Nay, if we talk of reason,
 Reason, and sleep: Manhood and honour
 In our hearts, would they but fat their Reason; reason and respect
 And lusthood deject.
 She is not worth what she doth cost

't is aught but as 't is valued?
 He dwells not in particular will;
 He ate and dignity
 't is precious of itself
 't is mad idolatry
 Hee is greater than the god;
<sup>a</sup> Dimes—tenths.

And the will dotes that is inclinable
 To what infectiously itself affects,
 Without some image of the affected merit.

Tro. I take to-day a wife, and my election
 Is led on in the conduct of my will;
 My will enkindled by mine eyes and ears,
 Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
 Of will and judgment: How may I avoid,
 Although my will distaste what it elected,
 The wife I chose? there can be no evasion
 To blench from this, and to stand firm by honour:
 We turn not back the silks upon the merchant,
 When we have spoil'd them: nor the remainder viands
 We do not throw in unrespective same,<sup>a</sup>
 Because we now are full. It was thought meet,
 Paris should do some vengeance on the Greeks:
 Your breath of full consent bellied his sails;
 The seas and winds (old wranglers) took a truce,
 And did him service: he touch'd the ports desir'd;
 And, for an old aunt, whom the Greeks held captive,
 He brought a Grecian queen, whose youth and freshness Wrinkles Apollo's, and makes stale the morning.
 Why keep we her? the Grecians keep our aunt:
 Is she worth keeping? why, she is a pearl,
 Whose price hath launch'd above a thousand ships,
 And turn'd crown'd kings to merchants.
 If you 'll avouch 't was wisdom Paris went,
 (As you must needs, for you all cried—"Go, go,")
 If you 'll confess he brought home noble prize,
 (As you must needs, for you all clapp'd your hands,
 And cried—"Inestimable!") why do you now
 The issue of your proper wisdoms rate;
 And do a deed that fortune never did,
 Beggar the estimation which you priz'd Richer than sea and land? O theft most base
 That we have stolen what we do fear to keep!
 But thieves, unworthy of a thing so stolen,
 That in their country did them that disgrace,
 We fear to warrant in our native place!
 Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans, cry!
 Pri. What noise? what shriek is this?
 Tro. 'T is our mad sister, I do know her voice.
 Cas. [Within.] Cry, Trojans!
 Hect. It is Cassandra.

Enter CASSANDRA, raving.

Cas. Cry, Trojans, cry! lend me ten thousand eyes,
 And I will fill them with prophetic tears.

Hect. Peace, sister, peace.

Cas. Virgins and boys, mid age, and wrinkled old,
 Soft infancy, that nothing canst but cry,
 Add to my clamours! let us pay betimes
 A moiety of that mass of moan to come.
 Cry, Trojans, cry! practise your eyes with tears
 Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilium stand;
 Our firebrand brother, Paris, burns us all.
 Cry, Trojans, cry! a Helen, and a woe
 Cry, cry! Troy burns, or else let Helen go. [Exit.]

Hect. Now, youthful Troilus, do not these high strains
 Of divination in our sister work
 Some touches of remorse? or is your blood
 So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,
 Nor fear of bad success in a bad cause,
 Can qualify 'he same?

Tro. Why, brother Hector,
 We may not think the justness of each act
 Such and no other than event doth form it;
 Nor once deject the courage of our minds
 Because Cassandra's mad; her brain-sick raptures
 Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel
 Which hath our several honours all engag'd

<sup>a</sup> Some is used as a noun in the sense of a heap, or mass, collected in one place, in the first acceptance with the noun derivation.

To make it gracious. For my private part,
I am no more touch'd than all Priam's sons:
And Jove forbid, there should be done amongst us
Such things as might offend the weakest spleen
To fight for and maintain!

Par. Else might the world convince of levity
As well my undertakings as your counsels:
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gave wings to my propension, and cut off
All fears attending on so dire a project.
For what, alas, can these my single arms?
What propugnation is in one man's valour,
To stand the push and enmity of those
This quarrel would excite? Yet, I protest,
Were I alone to pass the difficulties,
And had as ample power as I have will,
Paris should ne'er retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuit.

Pri. Paris, you speak
Like one besotted on your sweet delights:
You have the honey still, but these the gall;
So to be valiant is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not merely to myself
The pleasures such a beauty brings with it;
But I would have the soil of her fair rape
Wip'd off, in honourable keeping her.
What treason were it to the ransack'd queen,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliver her possession up,
On terms of base compulsion! Can it be
That so degenerate a strain as this Should once set footing in your generous bosoms?
There's not the meanest spirit on our party,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended; nor none so noble,
Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death unfam'd,
Where Helen is the subject: then, I say,
Well may we fight for her, whom, we know well,
The world's large spaces cannot parallel.

Hect. Paris, and Troilus, you have both said well;
And on the cause and question now in hand
Have glaz'd,—but superficially; not much Unlike young men, whom Aristotle thought Unfit to hear moral philosophy:
The reasons you allege do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemper'd blood,
Than to make up a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong; for pleasure, and revenge,
Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision. Nature craves
All dues be render'd to their owners: Now
What nearer debt in all humanity
Than wife is to the husband? if this law
Of nature be corrupted through affection,
And that great minds, of partial indulgence
To their benumbed wills, resist the same,
There is a law in each well-order'd nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory.
If Helen then be wife to Sparta's king,—
As it is known she is,—these moral laws
Of nature, and of nations, speak aloud
To have her back return'd: Thus to persist
In doing wrong extenuates not wrong, it much more heavy. Hector's opinion of truth: yet, ne'ertheless, methren, I propend to you to keep Helen still;

use that hath no mean dependence and several dignities.
there you touch'd the life of our design:
dory that we more affected
ornance of our heaving spleens, ish a drop of Trojan blood

Spent more in her defence. But, worth
She is a theme of honour and renown;
A spur to valiant and magnanimous deeds
Whose present courage may beat down
And fame, in time to come, canonize us.
For, I presume, leave Hector would not
So rich advantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles upon the forehead of this act
For the wide world's revenge.

Hect. I am your
You valiant offspring of great Priamus.
I have a roisting challenge sent amongst
The dull and factious nobles of the Grecs
Will strike amazement to their dazowy eyes
I was advertis'd their great general slept,
Whilst emulation in the army crept;
This, I presume, will wake him.

SCENE III.—The Grecian Camp. Before Tent.

Enter THESSITES.

Ther. How now, Thersites? what, last rith of thy fury? Shall the elephant thus? he beats me, and I rail at him; O faction! would it were otherwise; that I whilst he railed at me: 'Sfoot, I'll learn raise devils, but I'll see some issue of execrations. Then there's Achilles,—a If Troy be not taken till these two under walls will stand till they fall of themselves great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget Jove the king of gods; and, Mercury, let pentine craft of thy Caduceus; if yet take little less-than-little wit from them that which short-armed ignorance itself know dant scarce, it will not in circumvention from a spider, without drawing the mass cutting the web. After this, the vengeance whole camp! or rather, the bone-ache! I thinks, is the curse dependant on those placket. I have said my prayers; and say Amen. What, ho! my lord Achilles!

Enter PATROCLUS.

Patr. Who's there? Thersites? guard come in and rail.

Ther. If I could have remembered a gift thou wouldst not have slipped out of my tion: but it is no matter: Thyself upon common curse of mankind, folly and thine in great revenue! heaven bless thee!
and discipline come not near thee! Let thy direction till thy death! then if she out says thou art a fair corpse, I'll be sworn upon't, she never shrouded any but Where's Achilles?

Patr. What, art thou devout? was that?

Ther. Ay: the heavens hear me!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Thersites, my lord.

Achil. Where, where?—Art thou come?
cheese, my digestion, why hast thou not in to my table so many meals?—Come, no memnon!

Ther. Thy commander, Achilles.—Then Patroclus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy lord, Thersites: Then tell thee, what's thyself?

Ther. Thy knower, Patroclus: Then tell troilus, what art thou?

Patr. Thou mayst tell that knowest.

to tell.
 decline the whole question. Agamemnon Achilles; Achilles is my lord; I am Pa-and Patroclus is a fool.

fool; I have not done.
 a privileged man.—Proceed, Thersites.
 Agamemnon is a fool; Achilles is a fool;
 and, as aforesaid, Patroclus is a fool.
 this; come.

Agamemnon is a fool to offer to command
 Achilles is a fool to be commanded of Aga-Thersites is a fool to serve such a fool; and and so positive.

Am I a fool?
 that demand of the prover.—It suffices look you, who comes here?

AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, DIOMEDES, and AJAX.

Patroclus, I'll speak with nobody:—Come Thersites. [Exit.

is such patchery, such juggling, and all the argument is, a cuckold and a quarrel, to draw emulous factions, and you. Now the dry serpigo on the suband lechery, confound all! [Exit.

is Achilles?
 his tent; but ill-disposed, my lord.
 he known to him that we are here.—
 messengers, and we lay by ents, visiting of him:
 so; lest, perchance, he think ve the question of our place,
 at we are.

I shall so say to him. [Exit.
 w him at the opening of his tent;

on-sick, sick of proud heart: you may ody, if you will favour the man; but,
 s pride: But why, why? let him show
 A word, my lord. [Takes AGAM. aside.
 moves Ajax thus to bay at him?
 les hath inveigled his fool from him.
 Thersites?

Will Ajax lack matter, if he have lost you see, he is his argument that has his illes.

 better; their fraction is more our wish on: But it was a strong counsel a fool imity that wisdom knits not, folly may ere comes Patroclus.

Re-enter PATROCLUS.

hilles with him.
 ephant hath joints, but none for courtesy:
 for necessity, not for flexure.
 s bids me say—he is much sorry
 e than your sport and pleasure greatness, and this noble state,
 m; he hopes it is no other,
 alth and your digestion sake,
 s breath.

Hear you, Patroclus;—
 acquainted with these answers:
 wing'd thus swift with scorn,
 or apprehensions.
 he bath; and much the reason it to him: yet all his virtues,
 f his own part beheld,

* Revert—rebelled.

Do, in our eyes, begin to lose their gloss;
 Yea, like fair fruit in an unwholesome dish,
 Are like to rot unfasted. Go and tell him
 We come to speak with him: And you shall not sin,
 If you do say—we think him over-proud,
 And under-honest; in self-assumption greater Than in the note of judgment; and worthier than himself

Here tend the savage strangeness he puts on;
 Disguise the holy strength of their command,
 And underwrite in an observing kind
 His humorous predominance; yea, watch
 His pettish lines, his ebbs, his flows, as if
 The passage and whole carriage of this action
 Rode on his tide. Go, tell him this; and add.
 That, if he overhold his price so much,
 We'll none of him; but let him, like an engine
 Not portable, lie under this report—
 Bring action hither, this cannot go to war:
 A stirring dwarf we do allowance give
 Before a sleeping giant:—Tell him so.

Patr. I shall; and bring his answer presently. [Exit.
 Agam. In second voice we'll not be satisfied,
 We come to speak with him.—Ulysses, enter you.

[Exit ULYSSES.

Ajax. What is he more than another?
 Agam. No more than what he thinks he is.
 Ajax. Is he so much? Do you not think he thinks himself a better man than I am?

Agam. No question.
 Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say he is?
 Agam. No, noble Ajax; you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no less noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what pride is.
 Agam. Your mind's the clearer, Ajax, and your virtues the fairer. He that is proud eats up himself:
 pride is his own glass, his own trumpet, his own chronicle; and whatever praises itself but in the deed, devours the deed in the praise.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engendering of toads.

Nest. Yet he loves himself: Is't not strange? [Aside.

Re-enter ULYSSES.

Ulyss. Achilles will not to the field to-morrow.
 Agam. What's his excuse?
 Ulyss. He doth rely on none;

But carries on the stream of his dispose,
 Without observance or respect of any,
 In will peculiar and in self-admission.

Agam. Why, will he not, upon our fair request,
 Untent his person, and share the air with us?

Ulyss. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only,
 He makes important: Possess'd he is with greatness.
 And speaks not to himself, but with a pride
 That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth
 Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse,
 That, 'twixt his mental and his active parts,
 Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,
 And batters 'gainst itself. What should I say?
 He is so plaguy proud, that the death-tokens of it Cry—"No recovery."

Agam. Let Ajax go to him.—
 Dear lord, go you and greet him in his tent:
 'T is said, he holds you well; and will be led,
 At your request, a little from himself.

Ulyss. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!
 We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes
 When they go from Achilles: Shall the proud lord
 That bastes his arrogance with his own seam,
 And never suffers matter of the world
 Enter his thoughts,—save such as do revolve

And ruminat himself,—shall he be worshipp'd
Of that we hold an idol more than he?
No, this thrice worthy and right valiant lord
Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquir'd;
Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is,
By going to Achilles;
That were to enlard his fat-already pride;
And add more coals to Cancer, when he burns
With entertaining great Hyperion.
This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid;
And say in thunder—"Achilles go to him."

Nest. O, this is well; he rubs the vein of him. [Aside.]

Dio. And how his silence drinks up this applause!

Ajax. If I go to him, with my arm'd fist I'll pash him Over the face.

Agam. O, no, you shall not go.

Ajax. An a be proud with me, I'll pheeze his pride:
Let me go to him.

Ulyss. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.

Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow!

Nest. How he describes himself! [Aside.]

Ajax. Can he not be sociable?

Ulyss. The raven chides blackness. [Aside.]

Ajax. I'll let his humours blood.

Agam. He will be the physician, that should be the patient. [Aside.]

Ajax. An all men were o' my mind!

Ulyss. Wit would be out of fashion. [Aside.]

Ajax. A should not bear it so, a should eat swords first: Shall pride carry it?

Nest. An't would, you'd carry half. [Aside.]

Ulyss. He would have ten shares. [Aside.]

Ajax. I will knead him, I'll make him supple.

Nest. He's not yet through warm: force him with praises: Pour in, pour in; his ambition is dry. [Aside.]

Ulyss. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike.

[To AGAM.]

Nest. Our noble general, do not do so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles.

Ulyss. Why, 'tis this naming of him does him harm.

Here is a man—But 'tis before his face;
I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you say
He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulyss. Know the whole world, he is as Ajax. A whoreson dog, that shall pash us! Would he were a Trojan!

Nest. What a vice were it in Ajax now

Ulyss. If he were proud—

Dio. Or covetous

Ulyss. Ay, or surly borne—

Dio. Or strange, or

Ulyss. Thank the heavens, lord, thou composure;

Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee

Fam'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature

Thrice-fam'd, beyond all erudition:

But he that disciplin'd thy arms to fight,

Let Mars divide eternity in twain,

And give him half: and, for thy vigour,

Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield

To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wit

Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confineth

Thy spacious and dilated parts: Here's Nestor

Instructed by the antiquary times,

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise:—

But pardon, father Nestor, were your days

As green as Ajax, and your brain so temper'd

You should not have the eminence of him;

But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Ulyss. Ay, my good son.

Dio. Be rul'd by him

Ulyss. There is no tarrying here; the hawk

Keeps thicket. Please it our general

To call together all his state of war;

Fresh kings are come to Troy: To-morrow,

We must with all our main of power stand

And here's a lord,—come knights from east

And cull their flower, Ajax shall cope the best

Agam. Go we to council. Let Achilles

Light boats may sail swift, though greater deep.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Troy. A Room in Priam's Palace.

Enter PANDARUS and a Servant.

Pan. Friend! you! pray you, a word: Do not you follow the young lord Paris?

Serv. Ay, sir, when he goes before me.

Pan. You depend upon him, I mean.

Serv. Sir, I do depend upon the lord.

Pan. You depend upon a noble gentleman; I must needs praise him.

Serv. The lord be praised!

Pan. You know me, do you not?

Serv. Faith, sir, superficially.

Pan. Friend, know me better; I am the lord
Pandarus.

Serv. I hope I shall know your honour better.

Pan. I do desire it.

Serv. You are in the state of grace. [Music within.]

Pan. Grace! not so, friend; honour and lordship are my titles:—What music is this?

Serv. I do but partly know, sir; it is music in parts.

Do you the musicians?

Yes, sir.

Do they to?

Nearest, sir.

Pan. At whose pleasure, friend?

Serv. At mine, sir, and theirs that love me.

Pan. Command, I mean, friend.

Serv. Who shall I command, sir?

Pan. Friend, we understand not one another too courtly, and thou art too cunning: At what do these men play?

Serv. That's to't, indeed, sir: Marry, request of Paris my lord, who's there in person him, the mortal Venus, the heart-blood of her invisible soul,—

Pan. Who, my cousin Cressida?

Serv. No, sir, Helen; could you not be pleas'd by her attributes?

Pan. It should seem, fellow, that thou hast the lady Cressida. I come to speak with Paris prince Troilus: I will make a compliment upon him, for my business sees'th.

Serv. Sodd'n business! there's a sterv'd piece!

Enter PARIS and HELEN, attended.

Pan. Fair be to you, my lord, and to all

* In Shakspeare's time it was the highest compliment man whose wit or learning was reversed, and he had thus his wits.

desires, in all fair measure, fairly guide to you, fair queen! fair thoughts be ard, you are full of fair words.

ak your fair pleasure, sweet queen.
is good broken music.

he broke it, cousin: and, by my life,
t whole again; you shall piece it out our performance:—Nell, he is full of ady, no.

sooth; in good sooth, very rude.
d, my lord! well, you say so in fits.
usiness to my lord, dear queen:—My uchsafe me a word?

his shall not hedge us out: we'll hear
y.

reet queen, you are pleasant with me.
y, my lord,—My dear lord, and most your brother Troilus—

nd Pandarus; honey-sweet lord,— sweet queen; go to:—commends him-partely to you.

all not bob us out of our melody: If incholy upon your head!

queen, sweet queen; that's a sweet to make a sweet lady sad is a sour at shall not serve your turn; that shall

a. Nay, I care not for such words:

ny lord, he desires you, that if the king upper you will make his excuse.

rd Pandarus,— ays my sweet queen,—my very very xploit's in hand? where sups he to-

but my lord,— ays my sweet queen?—My cousin will

o. You must not know where he sups.
my life, with my disposer Cressida.

no such matter, you are wide; come,
sick.

'll make excuse.
od my lord. Why should you say our poor disposer's sick.

y! what do you spy?—Come, give me
—Now, sweet queen.

this is kindly done.
ce is horribly in love with a thing you
n.

hall have it, my lord, if it be not my

, she'll none of him; they two are twain.
g in, after falling out, may make them

some, I'll hear no more of this; I'll now.

y, prithee now. By my troth, sweet!
fine forehead.

a may, you may.
y song be love: this love will undo us
Cupid, Cupid!

ay, that it shall, i' faith.
d now, love, love, nothing but love.

I troth, it begins so:

ow, nothing but love, still more!
for, oh, love's bow
shoots back and doe:

The shaft confounds,
Set that it wounds,
Does still the sore.

These lovers cry—Oh! oh! they die!
Yet that which seems the wound to kill,
Doth turn oh! oh! to ha! ha! he!
So dying love lives still:
Oh! oh! a while, but ha! ha! ha!
Oh! oh! groans out for ha! ha! ha!

Hey ho!

Helen. In love, i' faith, to the very tip of the nose.

Par. He eats nothing but doves, love; and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deeds, and hot deeds is love.

Pan. Is this the generation of love? hot blood, ho thoughts, and hot deeds?—Why, they are vipers: is love a generation of vipers? Sweet lord, who's afield to-day?

Par. Hector, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the gallantry of Troy: I would fain have arm'd to-day, but my Nell would not have it so. How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Helen. He hangs the lip at something; you know all,
lord Pandarus.

Pan. Not I, honey-sweet queen.—I long to hear how they sped to-day.—You'll remember your brother's excuse?

Par. To a hair.

Pan. Farewell, sweet queen.

Helen. Commend me to your niece.

Pan. I will, sweet queen.

[Exit.

[A retreat sounded.

Par. They are come from field: let us to Priam's hall,

To greet the warriors. Sweet Helen, I must woo you
To help unarm our Hector: his stubborn buckles,
With these your white enchanting fingers touch'd,
Shall more obey, than to the edge of steel,
Or force of Greekish sinews; you shall do more Than all the island kings, disarm great Hector.

Helen. 'T will make us proud to be his servant,
Paris:

Yea, what he shall receive of us in duty
Gives us more palm in beauty than we have;
Yea, overshines ourself.

Par. Sweet, above thought I love thee. [Exit

SCENE II.—Troy. Pandarus' Orchard.

Enter PANDARUS and a Servant, meeting.

Pan. How now? where's thy master? at my cousin Cressida's?

Serv. No, sir; he stays for you to conduct him thither.

Enter TROILUS.

Pan. O, here he comes—How now, how now?

Tro. Sirrah, walk off. [Exit Servant.

Pan. Have you seen my cousin?

Tro. No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door,
Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks
Staying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon,
And give me swift transpittance to those fields
Where I may wallow in the lily beds
Propos'd for the deserfer! O gentle Pandarus,
From Cupid's shoulder pluck his painted wings,
And fly with me to Cressid!

Pan. Walk here i' the orchard, I'll bring her straight.
[Exit PANDARUS.

Tro. I am giddy: expectation whirls me round.

The imaginary relish is so sweet
That it enchants my sense. What will it be,
When that the wat'ry palate tastes indeed
Love's thrice-reputed nectar? death, I fear me;
Swooning destruction; or some joy too fine,
Too subtle-potent, and too sharp in sweetness,
For the capacity of my ruder powers:
I fear it much; and I do fear besides.

That I shall lose distinction in my joys;
As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying.

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. She's making her ready, she'll come straight: you must be witty now. She does so blush, and fetches her wind so short, as if she were frayed with a sprite: I'll fetch her. It is the prettiest villain:—she fetches her breath so short as a new-ta'en sparrow.

[Exit PANDARUS.]

Tro. Even such a passion doth embrace my bosom:
My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse;
And all my powers do their bestowing lose,
Like vassalage at unawares encount'ring
The eye of majesty.

Enter PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

Pan. Come, come, what need you blush? shame's a baby.—Here she is now: swear the oaths now to her that you have sworn to me.—What, are you gone again? you must be watched ere you be made tame, must you? Come your ways, come your ways; an you draw backward, we'll put you i' the fills.<sup>a</sup> Why do you not speak to her?—Come, draw this curtain, and let's see your picture. Alas the day, how loth you are to offend daylight! an't were dark you'd close sooner. So, so; rub on, and kiss the mistress.
How now, a kiss in fee-farm! build there, carpenter;
the air is sweet. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The falcon as the tercel, for all the ducks i' the river: go to, go to.

Tro. You have bereft me of all words, lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts, give her deeds: but she'll bereave you of the deeds too, if she call your activity in question. What, billing again? Here's—<sup>a</sup> In witness whereof the parties interchangeably—Come in, come in: I'll go get a fire. [Exit PAN.]

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Tro. O Cressida, how often have I wish'd me thus!

Cres. Wish'd, my lord?—The gods grant!—
O my lord!

Tro. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruptness? What too curious dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?

Cres. More dregs than water, if my fears have eyes.

Tro. Fears make devils cherubins; they never see truly.

Cres. Blind fear, that seeing reason leads, finds safer footing than blind reason stumbling without fear:
To fear the worst oft cures the worse.

Tro. O, let my lady apprehend no fear: in all Cupid's pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Nor nothing monstrous neither?

Tro. Nothing, but our undertakings; when we vow to weep seas, live in fire, eat rocks, tame tigers; thinking it harder for our mistress to devise imposition enough, than for us to undergo any difficulty imposed. This is the monstrosity in love, lady,—that the will is infinite, and the execution confined; that the desire is boundless,
and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say, all lovers swear more performance than they are able, and yet reserve an ability that they never perform; vowing more than the perfection of ten, and discharging less than the tenth part of one. They that have the voice of lions, and the act of hares, are they not monsters?

Tro. Are there such? such are not we: Praise us as we are tasted, allow us as we prove; our head shall go bare till merit crown it: no perfection in reversion shall have a praise in present: we will not name desert before his birth; and, being born, his addition shall be humble. Few words to fair faith: Troilus shall be such to Cressida, as what envy can say worst shall be a mock

<sup>a</sup> Fills—fills, shafts.

for his truth; and what truth can speak true than Troilus.

Cres. Will you walk in, my lord?

Re-enter PANDARUS.

Pan. What, blushing still? have you talking yet?

Cres. Well, uncle, what folly I commit to you.

Pan. I thank you for that; if my lad you, you'll give him me: Be true to my flinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages; y word, and my firm faith.

Pan. Nay, I'll give my word for her to dred, though they be long ere they are won constant, being won: they are huns, I can they'll stick where they are thrown.

Cres. Boldness comes to me now, and bring Prince Troilus, I have lov'd you night and d
For many weary months.

Tro. Why was my Cressid then so hard to

Cres. Hard to seem won; but I was won
With the first glance that ever—Pardon me:
If I confess much, you will play the tyrant.
I love you now; but not, till now, so much.
But I might master it:—in faith, I lie;
My thoughts were like unbridled children,
Too headstrung for their mother: See, we Why have I blabb'd? who shall be true to
When we are so unsecret to ourselves?

But, though I lov'd you well, I wou'd you
And yet, good faith, I wish'd myself a man
Or that we women had men's privilege Of speaking first. Sweet, bid me hold my
For, in this rapture, I shall surely speak
The thing I shall repent. See, see, your Cunning in dumbness, from my weakness d
My soul of counsel from me: Stop my

Tro. And shall, albeit sweet music issue

Pan. Pretty, i' faith.

Cres. My lord, I do beseech you, pardon
'T was not my purpose thus to beg a kiss:
I am asham'd;—O heavens! what have I
For this time will I take my leave, my lord

Tro. Your leave, sweet Cressid?

Pan. Leave! an you take leave till moraing,—

Cres. Pray you, content you.

Tro. What offends

Cres. Sir, mine own company.

Tro. You can Yourself.

Cres. Let me go and try:

I have a kind of self resides with you:
But an unkind self, that itself will leave,
To be another's fool. Where is my wit!

I would be gone:—I speak I know not what

Tro. Well know they what they speak it wisely.

Cres. Perchance, my lord, I show more
love:

And fell so roundly to a large confession,
To angle for your thoughts: But you see Or else you love not: For to be wise, and Exceeds man's might; that dwells with god

Tro. O, that I thought it could be in a
(As, if it can, I will presume in you.)

To feed for aye her lamp and flames of love;
To keep her constancy in plight and youth.

Outliving beauty's outward, with a mind
That doth renew swifter than blood decays!

Or, that persuasion could but thus content
That my integrity and truth to you

anted with the match and weight nowed purity in love;
 en uplifted! but, alas,
 s truth's simplicity,
 ban the infancy of truth.
 at I'll war with you.

O virtuous fight,
 th right wars who shall be most right!
 i love shall, in the world to come,
 truths by Troilus: when their rhymes
 of oath, and big compare, truth tir'd with iteration,— l, as plantage to the moon,
 as turtle to her mate,
 mant, as earth to the centre,— comparisons of truth,
 entic author to be cited,
 ilus shall crown up the verse,
 be numbers.

Propbet may you be!
 r swerve a hair from truth,
 old and hath forgot itself,
 ops have worn the stones of Troy.
 ivion swallow'd cities up,
 ates characterless are grated
 ing; yet let memory
 false, among false maids in love, dsehood! when they have said, as false
 r, as wind, as sandy earth,
 s, as wolf to heifer's calf,
 nd, or stepdame to her son;
 ay, to stick the heart of falsehood,
 esid.

a bargain made: seal it, seal it; I'll e.—Here I hold your hand: here, my ver you prove false one to another, since uch pains to bring you together, let all tween be called to the world's end after ll them all—Pandars; let all constant uses, all false women Cressids, and all Pandars! say, amen.

Whereupon I will show you a cham because it shall not speak of your pretty ss it to death: away.
 grant all tongue-tied maidens here,
 er, and Pandar to provide this geer!
 [Exeunt.]

ACT III.—The Grecian Camp.

HENON, ULYSSES, DIOMEDES, NESTOR,
 X, MENELAUS, and CALCHAS.

princes, for the service I have done you,
 of the time prompts me aloud
 ompense. Appear it to your mind, the sight I bear in things to love,
 a'd Troy, left my possession,
 tor's name; expos'd myself,
 nd possess'd conveniences,
 rtunes; sequest'ring from me all uaintance, custom, and condition,
 d most familiar to my nature;
 o you service, am become
 e world, strange, unacquainted:
 ou, as in way of taste,
 w a little benefit,
 any register'd in promise,
 y live to come in my behalf.
 at wouldst thou of us, Trojan? make deg appears to us sufficiently clear—through my owing what things I should love.

Cal. You have a Trojan prisoner, call'd Antenor,
 Yesterday took: Troy holds him very dear.
 Oft have you (often have you thanks therefore)
 Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange,
 Whom Troy hath still denied: But this Antenor,
 I know, is such a wrest in their affairs,
 That their negotiations all must slack,
 Wanting his manage; and they will almost
 Give us a prince of blood, a son of Priam,
 In change of him: let him be sent, great princes,
 And he shall buy my daughter; and her presence
 Shall quite strike off all service I have done,
 In most accepted pain.

Agam. Let Diomedes bear him,
 And bring us Cressid hither; Calchas shall have What he requests of us.—Good Diomed,
 Furnish you fairly for this interchange:
 Withal, bring word, if Hector will to-morrow
 Be answer'd in his challenge: Ajax is ready.

Dio. This shall I undertake; and 't is a burthen
 Which I am proud to bear. [Exeunt DIOM. and CAL.]

Enter ACHILLES and PATROCLUS, before their Tent

Ulyss. Achilles stands i' the entrance of his tent:—
 Please it our general to pass strangely by him,
 As if he were forgot; and, princes all,
 Lay negligent and loose regard upon him:
 I will come last: 'T is like, he'll question me,
 Why such unplausible eyes are bent, why turn'd on
 him:

If so, I have derision medicinable,
 To use between your strangeness and his pride,
 Which his own will shall have desire to drink;
 It may do good: pride hath no other glass
 To show itself, but pride; for supple knees
 Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.

Agam. We'll execute your purpose, and put on A form of strangeness as we pass along;—
 So do each lord; and either greet him not,
 Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more Than if not look'd on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What, comes the general to speak with me?
 You know my mind, I'll fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Agam. What says Achilles? would he aught with us?
 Nest. Would you, my lord, aught with the general?
 Achil. No.

Nest. Nothing, my lord.

Agam. The better. [Exeunt AGAM. and NEST.]

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How do you? how do you? [Exit MEN.]

Achil. What, does the cuckold scorn me?

Ajax. How now, Patroclus?

Achil. Good morrow, Ajax.

Ajax. Ha?

Achil. Good morrow.

Ajax. Ay, and good next day too. [Exit AJAX.]

Achil. What mean these fellows? Know they not Achilles?

Patr. They pass by strangely: they were us'd to bow,
 To send their smiles before them to Achilles;
 To come as humbly as they us'd to creep
 To holy altars.

Achil. What, am I poor of late?

'T is certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune, Must fall out with men too: What the declin'd is,
 He shall as soon read in the eyes of others,
 As feel in his own fall: for men, like butterflies,
 Show not their mealy wings but to the summer;
 And not a man, for being simply man,
 Hath any honour; but honour for those honours
 That are without him, as place, riches, and favour,
 Prizes of accident as oft as merit:
 Which, when they fall, as being slippery standers,
 The love that lean'd on them as slippery too.

Do one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall. But 't is not so with me:
Fortune and I are friends; I do enjoy
At ample point all that I did possess,
Save these men's looks: who do, methinks, find out Something not worth in me such rich beholding
As they have often given. Here is Ulysses;
I'll interrupt his reading.—
How now, Ulysses?

Ulyss. Now, great Thetis' son!

Achil. What are you reading?

Ulyss. A strange fellow here
Writes me, that man, how dearly ever parted,
How much in having, or without, or in,
Cannot make boast to have that which he hath,
Nor feels not what he owes but by reflection;
As when his virtues shining upon others
Heat them, and they retort that heat again
To the first giver.

Achil. This is not strange. Ulysses.

The beauty that is borne here in the face
The bearer knows not, but commends itself
To others' eyes: nor doth the eye itself,
(That most pure spirit of sense) behold itself,
Not going from itself; but eye to eye oppos'd
Salutes each other with each other's form.
For speculation turns not to itself.

Till it hath travell'd, and is married there
Where it may see itself: this is not strange at all.

Ulyss. I do not strain at the position,
It is familiar; but at the author's drift:
Who, in his circumstance, expressly proves,
That no man is the lord of anything,
(Though in end of him there is much consisting.)
Till he communicate his parts to others:
Nor doth he of himself know them for aught
Till he behold them form'd in the applause
Where they are extended; which, like an arch, reverberates

The voice again; or, like a gate of steel
Fronting the sun, receives and renders back
His figure and his heat. I was much rapt in this;
And apprehended here immediately
The unknown Ajax.

Heavens, what a man is there! a very horse;
That has he knows not what. Nature, what things there are,

Most abject in regard, and dear in use!
What things again most dear in the esteem,
And poor in worth! Now shall we see to-morrow,
An act that very chance doth throw upon him,
Ajax renown'd. O heavens, what some men do,
While some men leave to do!

How some men creep in skittish fortune's hall,
While others play the idiots in her eyes!
How one man eats into another's pride,
While pride is feasting in his wantonness!
To see these Grecian lords!—why, even already
They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder;
As if his foot were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking.

Achil. I do believe it: for they pass'd by me
As misers do by beggars; neither gave to me
Good word nor look: What, are my deeds forgot?

Ulyss. Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts alms for oblivion,
A great-sized monster of ingratitude:
Those scraps are good deeds past: which are devour'd
As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done: Perseverance, dear my lord, Keeps honour bright: To have done, is to hang Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail
In monumental mockery. Take the instant way;
Your honour travels in a strait so narrow,

Where o
For emu
That on
Or hedg
Like to
And lea
Or, like Lie the O'errun
Though
For time
That sli
And wit
Grasps-i
And fare
Remune
For beau
High bir
Love, fr
To envid
One tou
That all
Though
And giv
More las
The pres
Then ma
That all
Since th
Than w
And stil
If thou v
And cas
Whose g
Made en
And dra
Achil.

I have st

Ulyss.

The reas

'T is kno

With ou

Achil.

Ulyss.

The prov

Knows a

Finds bo

Keeps pl

Does tho

There is

Durst ne

Which h

Than bre

All the c

As perfec

And bett

To thro

But it m

When fa

And all

"Great l

But our

Farewell

The fool

Patr.

A womar

Is not m

In time

They thi

And you

Sweet, ro

Shall fro

And, lik

We shock

shall Ajax fight with Hector?
 They receive much honour by him.
 His station is at stake;
 or'd.

O, then beware;
 that men do give themselves:
 necessary
 a blank of danger;
 rue, subtly taints
 idly in the sun.
 sites hither, sweet Patroclus:
 jax, and desire him
 rds after the combat,
 : I have a woman's longing,
 sick withal,
 his weeds of peace:
 to behold his visage,
 w. A labour sav'd!

Thersites.

and down the field, asking for singly to-morrow with Hector;

 y proud of an heroic cudgelying nothing.

t be?
 is up and down like a peacock, ruminates, like an hostess that her brain to set down her reckon-a politic regard, as who should his head, and 't would out: and is coldly in him as fire in a flint, without knocking. The man's if Hector break not his neck tak it himself in vainglory. He "Good-morrow, Ajax;" and he tmemnon." What think you of
 : for the general? He is grown ageless, a monster. A plague y wear it on both sides, like a my ambassador to him, Thersites.

Ther. Who, I? why, ne'll answer nobody; he professes not answering; speaking is for beggars: he wears his tongue in his arms. I will put on his presence;
 let Patroclus make his demands to me, you shall see the pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him, Patroclus: Tell him, I humbly desire the valiant Ajax to invite the most valorous Hector to come unarmed to my tent; and to procure safe conduct for his person, of the magnanimous, and most illustrious, six-or-seven-times honoured captain-general of the Grecian army, Agamemnon, &c. Do this.

Patr. Jove bless great Ajax.

Ther. Humph!

Patr. I come from the worthy Achilles,—

Ther. Ha!

Patr. Who most humbly desires you to invite Hector to his tent,—

Ther. Humph!

Patr. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patr. Ay, my lord.

Ther. Ha!

Patr. What say you to 't?

Ther. God be wi' you, with all my heart.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. If to-morrow be a fair day, by eleven o'clock it will go one way or other; bowsoever, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patr. Your answer, sir.

Ther. Fare you well, with all my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out o' tune thus. What music will be in him when Hector has knocked out his brains,
 I know not: But, I am sure, none: unless the fiddler
 Apollo gets his sinews to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt bear a letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me carry another to his horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My mind is troubled, like a fountain stirr'd:
 And I myself see not the bottom of it.

[Exeunt ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.]

Ther. Would the fountain of your mind were clear again, that I might water an ass at it! I had rather be a tick in a sheep, than such a valiant ignorance.

[Exit.]

ACT IV.

—Troy. A Street.

Æneas, and Servant with a torch;
DELPHOBUS, ANTEHOR, DIO-
with torches.

As that there?

'T is the lord Æneas.
 there in person?
 a to lie long,
 othing but heavenly business
 te of my company,
 and too.—Good morrow, lord

Æneas; take his hand:
 your speech, wherein
 in a whole week by days, held.

Health to you, valiant sir,
 the gentle truce:*
 rm'd, as black defiance,

requires explanation: Æneas wishes there is no question, argument, bes out of the truce

As heart can think or courage execute.

Dio. The one and other Diomed embraces.

Our bloods are now in calm; and, so long, health:

But, when contention and occasion meet,

By Jove, I'll play the hunter for thy life,

With all my force, pursuit, and policy.

Æne. And thou shalt hunt a lion, that will fly

With his face backward.—In humane gentleness.

Welcome to Troy! now, by Anchises' life,

Welcome, indeed! By Venus' hand I swear,

No man alive can love, in such a sort,

The thing he means to kill, more excellently.

Dio. We sympathize:—Jove, let Æneas live,

If to my sword his fate be not the glory,

A thousand complete courses of the sun!

But, in mine emulous honour, let him die,

With every joint a wound; and that to-morrow!

Æne. We know each other well.

Dio. We do; and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most despitefull'st gentle greeting

The noblest hateful love, that e'er I heard of.—

What business, lord, so early?

* This is the common construction of the age of Shakespeare.

hem: and, my lord Æneas
 see; you did not find me here.
 good, my lord; the secrets of nature gift in taciturnity.

[Exeunt TROIUS and ÆNEAS.
 issible? no sooner got but lost? The or! the young prince will go mad. A Antenor! I would they had broke's

Enter CRESSIDA.

ow? what's the matter? Who was igh you so profoundly? where's my one?

uncle, what's the matter?
 I were as deep under the earth as I am

ods!—what's the matter?
 get thee in. 'Would thou hadst ne'er ew thou wouldst be his death:—O poor plague upon Antenor!

uncle, I beseech you on my knees,
 what's the matter?

must be gone, wench, thou must be changed for Antenor; thou must to thy one from Troilus; 't will be his death;
 ne; he cannot bear it.

immortal gods!—I will not go.
 must.

not, uncle: I have forgot my father;
 is of consanguinity;

no blood, no soul so near me,
 Troilus.—O you gods divine!

name the very crown of falsehood
 e Troilus! Time, force, and death, what extremity you can;

 base and building of my love

entre of the earth,
 ngs to it.—I will go in, and weep;—

ay bright hair, and scratch my praised
 *;

voice with sobs, and break my heart
 Troilus. I will not go from Troy.

[Exeunt.

—The same. Before Pandarus' House.

TROIUS, ÆNEAS, DEIPHOBUS, AN-TENOR, and DIOMEDES.

eat morning; and the hour prefix'd to this valiant Greek

n.—Good my brother Troilus, uty what she is to do,

to the purpose.
 Walk in to her house;

to the Grecian presently:
 d when I deliver her,

ar; and thy brother Troilus offering to it his own heart. [Exit.

what 't is to love;
 I shall pity, I could help!—

k in, my lords. [Exeunt.

—The same. A Room in Pandarus' House.

PANDARUS and CRESSIDA.

oderate, be moderate.
 tell you me of moderation?

o, full, perfect, that I taste,
 a sense as strong as that

Which causeth it: How can I moderate it?

If I could temporize with my affection,
 Or brew it to a weak and colder palate,
 The like allayment could I give my grief:
 My love admits no qualifying cross:
 No more my grief, in such a precious loss.

Enter TROIUS.

Pan. Here, here, here he comes, a sweet duck!

Cres. O Troilus! Troilus!

Pan. What a pair of spectacles is here! Let me embrace too: O heart,—as the goodly saying is,—

O heart, heavy heart.

Why sigh'st thou without breaking?

where he answers again,

Because thou canst not ease thy smart,

By friendship, nor by speaking.

There was never a truer rhyme. Let us cast away nothing, for we may live to have need of such a verse
 we see it, we see it.—How now, lambs!

Tro. Cressid, I love thee in so strain'd a purity,
 That the blest gods—as angry with my fancy,
 More bright in zeal than the devotion which Cold lips blow to their deities—take thee from me.

Cres. Have the gods envy?

Pan. Ay, ay, ay, ay; 't is too plain a case.

Cres. And is it true that I must go from Troy?

Tro. A hateful truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Tro. From Troy, and Troilus.

Cres. Is 't possible?

Tro. And suddenly: where injury of chance

Puts back leave-taking, justles roughly by
 All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips

Of all rejoindure, forcibly prevents

Our lock'd embrasures, strangles our dear vows

Even in the birth of our own labouring breath:

We two, that with so many thousand sighs

Did buy each other, must poorly sell ourselves

With the rude brevity and discharge of one.

Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,

Crams his rich thievery up, he knows not how:

As many farewells as be stars in heaven,

With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to them,

He fumbles up into a loose adieu;

And scants us with a single famish'd kiss,

Distasting with the salt of broken tears.

Æne. [Within.] My lord! is the lady ready?

Tro. Hark! you are call'd: Some say, the Genius

<sup>80</sup>
 Cries, "Come!" to him that instantly must die.—

Bid them have patience; she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my tears? rain, to lay this wind, or my heart will be blown up by the root. [Exit PAN.

Cres. I must then to the Grecians?

Tro. No remedy.

Cres. A woeful Cressid 'mongst the merry Greeks!

When shall we see again?

Tro. Hear me, my love: Be thou but true of heart,—

Cres. I true! how now? what wicked deem is this?

Tro. Nay, we must use expostulation kindly,

For it is parting from us:

I speak not, "be thou true," as fearing thee;

For I will throw my glove to Death himself,

That there's no maculation in thy heart:

But "be thou true," say I, to fashion in My sequent protestation; be thou true,

And I will see thee.

Cres. O, you shall be expos'd, my lord, to dangers

As infinite as imminent! but, I'll be true.

Tro. And I'll grow friend with danger. Wear this sleeve.

Cres. And you this glove. When shall I see you?

3 11

Tro. I will corrupt the Grecian sentinels,
To give thee nightly visitation.
But yet, be true.

Cres. O heavens!—be true, again?
Tro. Hear why I speak it, love;
The Grecian youths are full of quality;
Their loving well compos'd with gift of nature,
Flowing and swelling o'er with arts and exercise;
How novelties may move, and parts with person,
Alas, a kind of godly jealousy
(Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin,)
Makes me afraid.

Cres. O heavens! you love me not.
Tro. Die I a villain then!
In this I do not call your faith in question,
So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing,
Nor heel the high lavolt, nor sweeten talk,
Nor play at subtle games; fair virtues all,
To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant:

But I can tell, that in each grace of these
There lurks a still and dumb-discoursive devil,
That tempts most cunningly: but be not tempted.

Cres. Do you think I will?

Tro. No.
But something may be done that we will not:
And sometimes we are devils to ourselves,
When we will tempt the frailty of our powers,
Presuming on their changeful potency.

Æne. [Within.] Nay, good my lord,—

Tro. Come, kiss, and let us part.

Par. [Within.] Brother Troilus!

Tro. Good brother, come you hither;
And bring Æneas and the Grecian with you.

Cres. My lord, will you be true?

Tro. Who, I? alas, it is my vice, my fault;
While others fish with craft for great opinion,
I with great truth catch mere simplicity;
Whilst some with cunning gild their copper crowns,
With truth and plainness I do wear mine bare.
Fear not my truth; the moral of my wit
Is—plain, and true,—there 's all the reach of it.

Enter ÆNEAS, PARIS, ANTEHOR, DEIPHOBUS, and DIOMEDES.

Welcome, sir Diomed! here is the lady,
Which for Antenor we deliver you:
At the port, lord, I 'll give her to thy hand;
And, by the way, possess thee what she is.
Entreat her fair; and, by my soul, fair Greek,
If e'er thou stand at mercy of my sword,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Priam is in Ilium.

Dio. Fair lady Cressid,
So please you, save the thanks this prince expects:
The lustre in your eye, heaven in your cheek,
Pleas'd your fair usage; and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Tro. Grecian, thou dost not use me courteously,
To shame the seal of my petition to thee,
In praising her: I tell thee, lord of Greece,
She is as far high-soaring o'er thy praises,
As thou unworthy to be call'd her servant.
I charge thee, use her well, even for my charge;
For, by the dreadful Pluto, if thou dost not,
Though the great bulk Achilles be thy guard,
I 'll cut thy throat.

Dio. O, be not mov'd, prince Troilus:
Let me be privileg'd by my place and message,
To be a speaker free; when I am hence,
I 'll answer to my lust: And know you, lord,
I 'll nothing do on charge: To her own worth
She shall be priz'd; but that you say—he 't so,
I 'll speak it in my spirit and behaviour,—no.

Tro. C
This brave
Lady, giv
To our ow

Par. E
Æne.
The princ
That swor
Par. ]

Dei. L
Æne. ]
Let us ad
The glory
On his fai

SCENE

Enter A
clus, ]

Agam.
Anticipati
Give with Thou drea
May pierc
And hale

Ajaz.
Now crac
Blow, vill

Out-swel
Come, str

Thou blou
Ulyss.

Achil.
Agam.

Ulyss.
He rises o
In aspirat

Agam.
Dio.
Agam.

Nest. (

Ulyss.
'T were b

Nest. ]
So much

Achil. ]
Achilles b

Men. I
Patr. I

For thus p
And parte

Ulyss.
For which

Patr. ]
Patroclus

Men.
Patr. I

Men. I
Cres. I

Patr. I
Cres.

The kiss y
Therefore

Men. I
Cres. ]

Men. A Cres. ]
That you
Men. ]

No, I'll be sworn.
were no match, your nail against his horn.—
lady, beg a kiss of you?
may.

I do desire it.
Why, beg then.
by then, for Venus' sake, give me a kiss,
is a maid again, and his.
in your debtor, claim it when 't is due.
ever 's my day, and then a kiss of you.
y, a word;—I'll bring you to your father.

[DIOMEDES leads out CRESSIDA. woman of quick sense.

Fie, fie upon her!
engage in her eye, her cheek, her lip,
it speaks; her wanton spirits look out out and motive of her body.
counterers, so glib of tongue,
coasting welcome ere it comes,
oclap the tables of their thoughts king reader! set them down spoils of opportunity,
ers of the game. [Trumpet within.
Trojans' trumpet.

Yonder comes the troop.
HOR, armed; ÆNEAS, TROILUS, and other Trojans, with Attendants.

ail, all you state of Greece! what shall be
me
victory commands? Or do you purpose, ll be known? will you, the knights edge of all extremity other, or shall be divided se or order of the field?
ask.

Which way would Hector have it?
cares not, he'll obey conditions.
is done like Hector; but securely done, ully, and great deal disprizing
oppos'd.

If not Achilles, sir,
ir name?
If not Achilles, nothing.
herefore Achilles: But, whate'er, know is;—
nity of great and little,
pride excel themselves in Hector;
most as infinite as all,
rank as nothing. Weigh him well, rich looks like pride is courtesy.
s half made of Hector's blood:
roof half Hector stays at home;
half hand, half Hector comes to seek d knight, half Trojan and half Greek. maiden battle then?—O, I perceive you.

Re-enter DIOMEDES.
ere is sir Diomed:—Go, gentle knight,
r Ajax: as you and lord Æneas
in the order of their fight,
ther to the uttermost,
eath: the combatants being kin,
their strife before their strokes begin.

[AJAX and HECTOR enter the lists.
hey are oppos'd already.
What Trojan is that same that looks so avy?
he youngest son of Priam; a true knight;
ture, yet matchless: firm of word;
deeds, and deedless in his tongue;
provok'd, nor, being provok'd, soon calm'd:
ed hand both open, and both free;
has he gives; what thinks he shows;

Yet gives he not till judgment guides his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impair thought with breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
To tender objects; but he, in heat of action,
Is more vindicative than jealous love:
They call him Troilus; and on him erect
A second hope, as fairly built as Hector.
Thus says Æneas; one that knows the youth
Even to his inches, and, with private soul,
Did in great Ilium thus translate him to me.

[Alarum. HECTOR and AJAX fight.
Agam. They are in action.

Nest. Now, Ajax, hold thine own!
Tro. Hector, thou sleep'st;
Awake thee!

Agam. His blows are well dispos'd:—there, Ajax!
Dio. You must no more. [Trumpets cease.

Æne. Princes, enough, so please you.

Ajax. I am not warm yet, let us fight again.

Dio. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why then, will I no more:—

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
A cousin-german to great Priam's seed;
The obligation of our blood forbids

A gory emulation 'twixt us twain:
Were thy commixtion Greek and Trojan so
That thou couldst say—"This hand is Grecian all,

And this is Trojan; the sinews of this leg
All Greek, and this all Troy; my mother's blood Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister

Bounds in my father's;" by Jove multipotent, Thou shouldst not bear from me a Greekish member Wherein my sword had not impressure made

Of our rank feud: But the just gods gainsay,
That any drop thou borrow'dst from thy mother,
My sacred aunt, should by my mortal sword

Be drain'd: Let me embrace thee, Ajax:
By him that thunders, thou hast lusty arms;
Hector would have them fall upon him thus:

Cousin, all honour to thee!

Ajax. I thank thee, Hector:
Thou art too gentle, and too free a man:
I came to kill thee, cousin, and bear hence

A great addition earned in thy death.
Hect. Not Neoptolemus so mirable
(On whose bright crest Fame with her loud'st O yes Cries, "This is he,") could promise to himself

A thought of added honour torn from Hector.

Æne. There is expectance here from both the sides,
What further you will do.

Hect. We'll answer it;
The issue is embracement:—Ajax, farewell.
Ajax. If I might in entreaties find success,
(As seld' I have the chance,) I would desire

My famous cousin to our Grecian tents.
Dio. 'T is Agamemnon's wish, and great Achilles
Doth long to see unarm'd the valiant Hector.

Hect. Æneas, call my brother Troilus to me:
And signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part;
Desire them home.—Give me thy hand, my cousin;

I will go eat with thee, and see your knights.
Ajax. Great Agamemnon comes to meet us here.
Hect. The worthiest of them tell me name by name;
But for Achilles, mine own searching eyes

Shall find him by his large and portly size.
Agam. Worthy of arms! as welcome as to one
That would be rid of such an enemy;

But that 's no welcome: Understand more clear
What 's past, and what 's to come, is strew'd with lustre
And formless ruin of oblivion;

But in this extant moment, faith and truth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias-drawing.

Bids thee, with most divine integrity,
From heart of very heart, great Hector, welcome.
Hect. I thank thee, most imperious Agamemnon.
Agam. My well-fam'd lord of Troy, no less to you.
[To TROILUS.]
Men. Let me confirm my princely brother's greeting;—
You brace of warlike brothers, welcome hither.
Hect. Whom must we answer?
Ane. The noble Menelaus.
Hect. O you, my lord? by Mars his gauntlet, thanks!
Mock not, that I affect the untraded* oath;
Your quondam wife swears still by Venus' glove:
She's well, but bade me not commend her to you.
Men. Name her not now, sir; she's a deadly theme.
Hect. O, pardon; I offend.
Nest. I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft.
Labouring for destiny, make cruel way
Through ranks of Greekish youth: and I have seen thee,
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
And seen thee scoring forfeits and subduements,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword i' the air,
Not letting it decline on the declin'd;
That I have said unto my standers-by,
"Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!"
And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling: This have I seen;
But this thy countenance, still lock'd in steel,
I never saw till now. I knew thy grandsire,
And once fought with him: he was a soldier good;
But, by great Mars, the captain of us all,
Never like thee: Let an old man embrace thee;
And, worthy warrior, welcome to our tents.
Ane. 'Tis the old Nestor.
Hect. Let me embrace thee, good old chronicle,
That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time:—
Most reverend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee.
Nest. I would my arms could match thee in contention,
As they contend with thee in courtesy.
Hect. I would they could.
Nest. Ha!
By this white beard, I'd fight with thee to-morrow.
Well, welcome, welcome! I have seen the time.
Ulyss. I wonder now how yonder city stands,
When we have here her base and pillar by us.
Hect. I know your favour, lord Ulysses, well.
Ah, sir, there's many a Greek and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw yourself and Diomed
In Ilion, on your Greekish embassy.
Ulyss. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue:
My prophecy is but half his journey yet;
For yonder walls, that pertly front your town,
Yon towers, whose wanton tops do buss the clouds,
Must kiss their own feet.
Hect. I must not believe you:
There they stand yet; and modestly I think,
The fall of every Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood: The end crowns all;
And that old common arbitrator, time,
Will one day end it.
Ulyss. So to him we leave it.
Most gentle, and most valiant Hector, welcome:
After the general, I beseech you next
To feast with me, and set me at my tent.
Achil. I shall forestall thee, lord Ulysses, thou!—
Now, Hector, I have fed mine eyes on thee:
I have with exact view perus'd thee, Hector,
And quoted joint by joint.

* Untraded—unused, uncommon.

Hect.
Achil.
Hect.
Achil.
Hect.
Achil.
As I wo
Hect.
But ther
Why do
Achil.
Shall I r
That I r
And ma
Hector's
Hect.
To ans Think at
As to pr
Where t
Achil.
Hect.
I'd not
For I'll
But, by I'll kill
You wis
His uso
But I'll
Or may
Ajar.
And you
Till acci
You may
If you h
Can scar
Hect.
We have
The Gre
Achil.
To-morr
To-night
Hect.
Agam
There in
As Hect
Concur t
Beat lou
That thi
Tro. I
In what
Ulyss.
There Di
Who nei
But give
On the fi
Tro. §
After we
To bring
Ulyss.
As gentl
This Cre
That wai
Tro. C
A mock
She was But, still

ACT V.

Grecian Camp. Before Achilles' Tent.

ACHILLES and PATROCLUS.

his blood with Greekish wine to nitar I'll cool to-morrow.—
st him to the height.
s Thersites.

Enter THERSITES.

How now, thou core of envy?
f nature, what's the news?
i picture of what thou seemest, and pers, here's a letter for thee.
nce, fragment?
full dish of fool, from Troy.
the tent now?
n's box, or the patient's wound.
Adversity! and what need these ilent, boy; I profit not by thy talk:

e Achilles' male varlet.
t, you rogue! what's that?
nasculine whore. Now the rotten
h, guts-gripping, ruptures, catarrhs, back, lethargies, cold palsies, raw rs, wheezing lungs, bladders full of as, lime-kilns i' the palm, incurable velled fee-simple i' the pelt, take i preposterous discoveries!
damnable box of envy, thou, what se thus?
thee?
you ruinous butt; you whoreson
r, no.

art thou then exasperate, thou idle sley'd silk, thou green sarcenet flap
t tassel of a prodigal's purse, thou?
rld is pestered with such water-flies;
re!

Patroclus, I am thwarted quite ose in to-morrow's battle.
i queen Hecuba;
nghter, my fair love;
I gaging me to keep sworn. I will not break it:
fame; honour, or go, or stay:
ere, this I'll obey.
tes, help to trim my tent;
eting must all be spent.

Exit ACHILLES and PATROCLUS. much blood and too little brain,
mad; but if with too much brain
hey do, I'll be a curer of madmen.
s,—an honest fellow enough, and s; but he has not so much brain as goodly transformation of Jupiter he bull,—the primitive statue and f cuckolds; a thrifty shoeing-horn at his brother's leg,—to what form, uld wit larded with malice, and sit, turn him to? To an ass were ass and ox: to an ox were nothing;
ass. To be a dog, a mule, a cat, a ard, an owl, a puttock, or a herring
dd not care: but to be Menelaus,

I would conspire against destiny. Ask me not what I would be if I were not Thersites; for I care not to be the louse of a lazar, so I were not Menelaus.—Heyday! spirits and fires!

Enter HECTOR, TROILUS, AJAX, AGAMEMNON, ULYSSES, NESTOR, MENELAUS, and DIOMED, with lights.

Agam. We go wrong, we go wrong.

Ajax. No, yonder 't is;
There, where we see the lights.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Ulyss. Here comes himself to guide you.

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Welcome, brave Hector; welcome, princes all.

Agam. So now, fair prince of Troy, I bid good night
Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks, and good night, to the Greeks' genera!

Men. Good night, my lord.

Hect. Good night, sweet lord Menelaus

Ther. Sweet draught: Sweet, quoth 'a! sweet sin, sweet sewer.

Achil. Good night, and welcome, both at once, to those

Ther. go, or tarry.

Agam. Good night.

[Exit AGAMEMNON and MENELAUS.]

Achil. Old Nestor tattles; and you too, Diomed, Keep Hector company an hour or two.

Dio. I cannot, lord; I have important business,
The tide whereof is now.—Good night, great Hector.

Hect. Give me your hand.

Ulyss. Follow his torch, he goes
To Calchas' tent; I'll keep you company.

[Aside to TROILUS.]

Tro. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hect. And so good night.

[Exit DIOMED; ULYSSES, and TRO. following.]

Achil. Come, come, enter my tent.

[Exit ACHILLES, HECTOR, AJAX, and NESTOR.]

Ther. That same Diomed's a false-hearted rogue, a most unjust knave; I will no more trust him when he leers, than I will a serpent when he hisses: He will spend his mouth, and promise, like Brabler the hound;
but when he performs, astronomers foretell it that it is prodigious, there will come some change; the sun borrows of the moon when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leave to see Hector than not to dog him: they say he keeps a Trojan drab, and uses the traitor Cal-chas' tent; I'll after.—Nothing but lechery! all incontinent varlets! [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same. Before CALCHAS' Tent.

Enter DIOMEDES.

Dio. What, are you up here, ho? speak.

Cal. [Within.] Who calls?

Dio. Diomed.—Calchas, I think.—Where 's your daughter?

Cal. [Within.] She comes to you.

Enter TROILUS and ULYSSES, at a distance; after them THERSITES.

Ulyss. Stand where the torch may not discover us

Enter CRESSIDA.

Tro. Cressid comes forth to him.

Dio. How now, my charge ?
Cres. Now, my sweet guardian!—Hark! a word with you. [Whispers.]
Tro. Yea, so familiar!
Ulyss. She will sing any man at first sight.
Ther. And any man may sing her, if he can take her cliff; she's noted.
Dio. Will you remember?
Cres. Remember? yes.
Dio. Nay, but do then;
 And let your mind be coupled with your words.
Tro. What should she remember?
Ulyss. List!
Cres. Sweet honey Greek, tempt me no more to folly.
Ther. Roguery!
Dio. Nay, then,—
Cres. I'll tell you what:
Dio. Pho! pho! come, tell a pin: You are a fore-sworn—
Cres. In faith, I cannot: What would you have me do?
Ther. A juggling trick, to be secretly open.
Dio. What did you swear you would bestow on me?
Cres. I prithee, do not hold me to mine oath;
 Bid me do anything but that, sweet Greek.
Dio. Good night.
Tro. Hold, patience!
Ulyss. How now, Trojan?
Cres. Diomed,—
Dio. No, no, good night: I'll be your fool no more.
Tro. Thy better must.
Cres. Hark! one word in your ear.
Tro. O plague and madness!
Ulyss. You are mov'd, prince, let us depart, I pray you,
 Lest your displeasure should enlarge itself
 To wrathful terms; this place is dangerous;
 The time right deadly; I beseech you, go.
Tro. Behold, I pray you!
Ulyss. Nay, good my lord, go off:
 You flow to great destruction; come, my lord.
Tro. I pray thee, stay.
Ulyss. You have not patience; come.
Tro. I pray you, stay; by hell, and hell torments,
 I will not speak a word.
Dio. And so, good night.
Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.
Tro. Doth that grieve thee?
 O wither'd truth!
Ulyss. Why, how now, lord?
Tro. By Jove,
 I will be patient.
Cres. Guardian!—why, Greek!
Dio. Pho, pho! adieu; you palter.
Cres. In faith, I do not; come hither once again
Ulyss. You shake, my lord, at something; will you go?
 You will break out.
Tro. She strokes his cheek!
Ulyss. Come, come.
Tro. Nay, stay; by Jove, I will not speak a word:
 There is between my will and all offences
 A guard of patience:—stay a little while.
Ther. How the devil luxury, with his fat rump, and potato finger, tickles these together! Fry, lechery, fry!
Dio. But will you then?
Cres. In faith, I will, la: never trust me else.
Dio. Give me some token for the surety of it.
Cres. I'll fetch you one. [Exit.]
Ulyss. You have sworn patience.
Tro. Fear me not, sweet lord;
 I'll not be myself, nor have cognition
 What I feel; I am all patience.

Ther. M
Cres. H
Tro. O
Ulyss.
Tro. I
Cres. Y
 He lov'd r
Dio. W
Cres.
 I will not
 I prithee, I
Ther. M
Dio. I
Cres.
Dio.
Cres. O
 Thy maste
 Of thee, ar
 And gives
 As I kiss t
 He that ta
Dio. I
Tro. I
Cres. Y
 I'll give y
Dio. I
Cres.
Dio. C
Cres. T
 But, now;
Dio.
Cres. H
 And by he
Dio. T
 And griev
Tro. W
 It should
Cres. Y
 I will not
Dio.
 Thou neve
Cres. Y
 But it stra
Dio.
Ther. M pleases me
Dio. W
Cres.
 Do come:
Dio.
Cres. G
 Troilus, fa
 But with r
 Ah! poor
 The error
 What erro
 Minds swa
Ther. A Unless she Ulyss.
Tro.
Ulyss.
Tro. T
 Of every
 But, if I te
 Shall I not Sith yet th
 An esperan
 That doth

ns had deceptive functions, calumniate.
re?

I cannot conjure, Trojan.
not sure.

Most sure she was.
ny negation hath no taste of madness.
mine, my lord: Cressid was here but ot be believ'd for womanhood!

mothers; do not give advantage ties, apt, without a theme,
, to square the general sex
e: rather think this not Cressid.
hath she done, prince, that can soil our rs?

at all, unless that this were she.
ie swagger himself out on 's own eyes?
e? no, this is Diomed's Cressida:
a soul, this is not she;
ows, if vows be sanctimony,
e the gods' delight,
in unity itself,

O madness of discourse,
up with and against thyself!
y! where reason can revolt
on, and loss assume all reason
; this is, and is not, Cressid!
l there doth conduce a fight
ature, that a thing inseparate
ider than the sky and earth;
cious breadth of this division
e for a point, as subtle roken woof, to enter
tance! strong as Pluto's gates;
tied with the bonds of heaven
tance! strong as heaven itself;
aven are slipp'd, dissolv'd, and loos'd;
er knot, five-finger tied,
her faith, orts of her love,
scraps, the bits, and greasy reliques
a faith, are bound to Diomed.
worthy Troilus be half attach'd
h here his passion doth express?
ek; and that shall be divulged well
: red as Mars his heart
enus: never did young man fancy and so fix'd a soul.

As much as I do Cressida love,
ight hate I her Diomed:
ine that he 'll bear in his helm;
e compos'd by Vulcan's skill,
d bite it: not the dreadful spout
do the hurricano call,
nass by the almighty sun,
more clamour Neptune's ear han shall my prompted sword ned.
tickle it for his concupy.
id! O false Cressid! false, false, false!
stand by thy stained name,
m glorious.

O, contain yourself;
aws ears hither.

Enter ÆNEAS.

been seeking you this hour, my lord:
is arming him in Troy;
d, stays to conduct you home.
with you, prince:—My courteous lord,
—
ed fair!—and Diomed,
wear a castle on thy head!
ring you to the gates

Tro. Accept distracted thanks.

[Exeunt TROIUS, ÆNEAS, and ULYSSES.]

Ther. 'Would I could meet that rogue Diomed! I would croak like a raven; I would bode, I would bode.
Patroclus will give me anything for the intelligence of this whore: the parrot will not do more for an almond than he for a commodious drab. Lechery, lechery; still, wars and lechery; nothing else holds fashion: A burning devil take them! [Exit.]

SCENE III.—Troy. Before Priam's Palace.

Enter HECTOR and ANDROMACHE.

And. When was my lord so much ungently temper'd,
To stop his ears against admonishment?
Unarm, unarm, and do not fight to-day.

Hect. You train me to offend you; get you gone:
By the everlasting gods, I'll go.

And. My dreams will, sure, prove ominous to the day.

Hect. No more, I say.

Enter CASSANDRA.

Cas. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here, sister; arm'd, and bloody in intent.
Consort with me in loud and dear petition,
Pursue we him on knees; for I have dream'd
Of bloody turbulence, and this whole night
Hath nothing been but shapes and forms of slaughter.

Cas. O, it is true.

Hect. Ho! bid my trumpet sound!

Cas. No notes of sally, for the heavens, sweet brother.

Hect. Begone, I say: the gods have heard me swear.

Cas. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows;
They are polluted offerings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

And. O! be persuaded: Do not count it holy
To hurt by being just: it is as lawful,
For we would give much, to count violent thefts,
And rob in the behalf of charity.

Cas. It is the purpose that makes strong the vow
But vows to every purpose must not hold:
Unarm, sweet Hector.

Hect. Hold you still, I say;
Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate:
Life every man holds dear; but the dear man
Holds honour far more precious dear than life.—

Enter TROIUS.

How now, young man? mean'st thou to fight to-day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to persuade.

[Exit CASSANDRA.]

Hect. No, faith, young Troilus; doff thy harness, youth,

I am to-day i' the vein of chivalry:
Let grow thy sinews till their knots be strong,
And tempt not yet the brushes of the war.
Unarm thee, go; and doubt thou not, brave boy,
I'll stand to-day, for thee, and me, and Troy.

Tro. Brother, you have a vice of mercy in you,
Which better fits a lion than a man.

Hect. What vice is that, good Troilus? chide me for it.

Tro. When many times the captive Grecians fall,
Even in the fan and wind of your fair sword,
You bid them rise and live.

Hect. O, 't is fair play.

Tro. Fool's play, by heaven, Hector!

Hect. How now? how now?

Tro. For the love of all the gods,
Let 's leave the hermit pity with our mothers,
And when we have our armour buckled on,

The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords;
Spar them to ruthless work, rein them from ruth.

Hect. Fie, savage, fie!

Tro. Hector, then 't is wars.

Hect. Troilus, I would not have you fight to-day.

Tro. Who should withhold me?

Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars
Beckoning with fiery truncheon my retire;
Not Priamus, and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergalled with recourse of tears
Nor you, my brother, with your true sword drawn,
Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way,
But by my ruin.

Re-enter CASSANDRA, with PRIAM.

Cas. Lay hold upon him, Priam, hold him fast:
He is thy crutch; now if thou lose thy stay,
Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee,
Fall all together.

Pri. Come, Hector, come, go back:
Thy wife hath dream'd; thy mother hath had visions;
Cassandra doth foresee; and I myself
Am like a prophet suddenly enrapt,
To tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore, come back.

Hect. Æneas is a-field;
And I do stand engag'd to many Greeks,
Even in the faith of valour, to appear
This morning to them.

Pri. Ay, but thou shalt not go.

Hect. I must not break my faith.
You know me dutiful; therefore, dear sir,
Let me not shame respect; but give me leave
To take that course by your consent and voice,
Which you do here forbid me, royal Priam.

Cas. O Priam, yield not to him.

And. Do not, dear father.

Hect. Andromache, I am offended with you:
Upon the love you bear me, get you in. [Exit ANDRO.]

Tro. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girl Makes all these bodements.

Cas. O farewell, dear Hector.
Look, how thou diest! look, how thy eye turns pale!
Look, now thy wounds do bleed at many vents!
Hark, how Troy roars! how Hecuba cries out!
How poor Andromache shrills her dolour forth!
Behold destruction, frenzy, and amazement,
Like witless antics, one another meet,
And all cry—Hector! Hector's dead! O Hector!

Tro. Away!—Away!

Cas. Farewell.—Yet, soft.—Hector, I take my leave:
Thou dost thyself and all our Troy deceive. [Exit.]

Hect. You are amaz'd, my liege, at her exclaim:
Go in, and cheer the town; we'll forth and fight;
Do deeds worth praise, and tell you them at night.

Pri. Farewell: the gods with safety stand about
thee!

[Exeunt severally PRI. and HECT. Alarums.]

Tro. They are at it; hark! Proud Diomed, believe,
I come to lose my arm, or win my sleeve.

As TROIUS is going out, enter, from the other side,
PANDARUS.

Pan. Do you hear, my lord? do you hear?

Tro. What now?

Pan. Here's a letter from yon' poor girl.

Tro. Let me read.

Pan. A whoreson tisick, a whoreson rascally tisick so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girl; and what one thing, what another, that I shall leave you one o' these days: And I have a rheum in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones, that, unless a man were cursed, I cannot tell what to think on't.—What says she there?

Tro.

The effect
Go, win
My love
But edifi

Pan.

Tro.
Pursue t

SCENE

Alc.

Ther.

I'll go Diomed, knave's
see them loves the masterly sembling
the other
—that s that san blackber
cur, Aja and now and wil begin to ill opini

Tro.

I would

Dio.

I do not Withdre
Have at

Ther.

Trojan!

Hect.

Art thou
Ther.

knave; a

Hect.

Ther.

a plague become swallowe

racle. Y

them.

Dio.

Present t

Fellow, c

Tell her

And am

Serv.

Agam.

Hath bea

Hath Do

And stan

Upon the

Epistrop

and Thous, deadly hurt;
 or, or slain; and Palamedes bruin'd: the dreadful Sagittary umbers; haste we, Diomed,
 ent, or we perish all.

Enter NESTOR.

near Patroclus' body to Achilles;
 nail-pac'd Ajax arm for shame.
 usand Hectors in the field:
 lights on Galathea his horse,
 ks work; anon, he's there afoot,
 y fly, or die, like scaled sculls*
 ching whale; then is he yonder, strawy Greeks, ripe for his edge,
 fore him like the mower's swath:
 nd everywhere, he leaves and takes;
 beying appetite
 will he does; and does so much call'd impossibility.

Enter ULYSSES.

ourage, courage, princes! great Achilles
 eping, cursing, vowing vengeance;
 unds have rous'd his drowsy blood,
 his mangled Myrmidons,
 , handless, hack'd and chipp'd, come to ctor. Ajax hath lost a friend, mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it, roilus; who hath done to-day
 tastic execution;
 I redeeming of himself,
 careless force, and forceless care,
 k, in very spite of cunning,
 , all.

Enter AJAX.

ilus, thou coward Troilus! [Exit.
 Ay, there, there.
 o, we draw together.

Enter ACHILLES.

Where is this Hector?
 thou boy-queller, show thy face;
 is to meet Achilles angry.
 e's Hector? I will none but Hector.
 [Exit.

VI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter AJAX.

ilus, thou coward Troilus, show thy head!

Enter DIOMEDES.

us, I say! where's Troilus?
 What wouldst thou?
 dd correct him.
 e I the general, thou shouldst have my
 e.
 ction:—Troilus, I say! what, Troilus!

Enter TROILUS.

iter Diomed!—turn thy false face, thou
 tor,
 life thou ow'st me for my horse!
 art thou there?
 fight with him alone: stand, Diomed.
 my prize. I will not look upon.

als of fish. We have the word in Milton ('Para-vii.)—
 hat with their fins and shinning scales nder the green wave, in sculls that oft be mid sea."

Tro. Come both you cogging Greeks; have at you both. [Exit fighting.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Yea, Troilus? O well fought, my youngest brother!

Enter ACHILLES.

Achil. Now do I see thee:—Ha!—Have at thee, Hector.

Hect. Pause, if thou wilt.

Achil. I do disdain thy courtesy, proud Trojan.

Be happy that my arms are out of use:

My rest and negligence befriend thee now,

But thou anon shalt hear of me again;

Till when, go seek thy fortune. [Exit.

Hect. Fare thee well:—
 I would have been much more a fresher man
 Had I expected thee.—How now, my brother?

Re-enter TROILUS.

Tro. Ajax hath ta'en Æneas: Shall it be?

No, by the flame of yonder glorious heaven,

He shall not carry him; I'll be ta'en too,

Or bring him off:—Fate, hear me what I say!

I reck not though I end my life to-day. [Exit.

Enter one in sumptuous armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greek; thou art a goodly mark:—

No? wilt thou not?—I like thy armour well;

I'll frush* it, and unlock the rivets all,

But I'll be master of it:—Wilt thou not, beast, abide?

Why then, fly on, I'll hunt thee for thy hide. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—The same.

Enter ACHILLES, with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me, you my Myrmidons;

Mark what I say.—Attend me where I wheel:

Strike not a stroke, but keep yourselves in breath;

And when I have the bloody Hector found,

Empale him with your weapons round about;

In fellest manner execute your arms.

Follow me, sirs, and my proceedings eye:—

It is decreed Hector the great must die. [Exit.

SCENE VIII.—The same.

Enter MENELAUS and PARIS, fighting: then THER-SITES.

Ther. The cuckold and the cuckold-maker are at it: Now, bull! now, dog! 'Lo, Paris, 'loo! now my double-henned sparrow! 'loo, Paris, 'loo! The bull has the game:—ware horns, ho! [Ex. PAR. and MEN.

Enter MARGARELON.

Mar. Turn, slave, and fight.

Ther. What art thou?

Mar. A bastard son of Priam's.

Ther. I am a bastard too; I love bastards: I am a bastard begot, bastard instructed, bastard or'd, bastard in valour, in everything illegitimate. 'One bear will not bite another, and wherefore should one bastard?
 Take heed, the quarrel's most ominous to us: if the son of a whore fight for a whore, he tempts judgment:
 Farewell, bastard.

Mar. The devil take thee, coward! [Exit.

SCENE IX.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter HECTOR.

Hect. Most putrified core, so fair without,
 Thy goodly armour thus hath cost thy life.

* Frush—break to pieces.

Now is my day's work done : I'll take good breath :
Rest, sword : thou hast thy fill of blood and death !

[Puts off his helmet, and hangs his shield behind him.]

Enter ACHILLES and Myrmidons.

Achil. Look, Hector, how the sun begins to set ;
How ugly night comes breathing at his heels :
Even with the veil and darkening of the sun,
To close the day up, Hector's life is done.

Hect. I am unarm'd ; forego this vantage, Greek.

Achil. Strike, fellows, strike ; this is the man I seek.

[Hector falls.]

So, Ilion, fall thou ; now, Troy, sink down ;
Here lies thy heart, thy sinews, and thy bone.—
On, Myrmidons ; and cry you all amain,
" Achilles hath the mighty Hector slain."

[A retreat sounded.]

Hark ! a retreat upon our Grecian part.

Myr. The Trojan trumpets sound the like, my lord.

Achil. The dragon wing of night o'erspreads the earth,
And, stickler-like,* the armies separate.

My half-supp'd sword that frankly would have fed,
Pleas'd with this dainty bit, thus goes to bed.—

[Sheaths his sword.]

Come, tie his body to my horse's tail ;

Along the field I will the Trojan trail. [Exeunt.]

SCENE X.—The same.

Enter AGAMEMNON, AJAX, MENELAUS, NESTOR, DIO-MEDES, and others, marching. Shouts within.

Agam. Hark ! hark ! what shout is that ?

Nest. Peace, drums.

[Within.] Achilles!

Achilles ! Hector 's slain ! Achilles !

Dio. The bruit is Hector 's slain, and by Achilles.

Ajax. If it be so, yet bragless let it be ;

Great Hector was a man as good as he.

Agam. March patiently along :—Let one be sent

To pray Achilles see us at our tent.—

If in his death the gods have us befriended,

Great Troy is ours, and our sharp wars are ended.

[Exeunt, marching.]

SCENE XI.—Another Part of the Field.

Enter ÆNEAS and Trojans.

Æne. Stand, ho ! yet are we masters of the field :
Never go home ; here starve we out the night.

Enter TROIUS.

Tro. Hector is slain.

All. Hector ?—The gods forbid !

Tro. He 's dead ; and at the murderer's horse's tail,
In beastly sort, dragg'd through the shameful field.—

* Stickler-like. A stickler was an arbitrator, or sidesman ;
one who presided over the combats of quarter-staff and wrestling.

Frown on,

Sir, gods,

I say, at o

And linger

Æne. M

Tro. Y

I do not sp

But dare a

Address th

Who shall

Let him th

Go in to T

There is a

Make well

Cold statu

Scare Troy

Hector is o

Stay yet :-

Thus prom

Let Titan

I'll throug

c

No space o

I'll haunt

That moul

Strike a fre

Hope of re

As TROIUS

Pan. B

Tro. He

Pursue thy

Pan. A

O world !

spised ! O

set a' work

endeavour

what verse

Full me

Till he h

And beir

Sweet ho

Good trade

As many

Your eyes,

Or, if you

Though not

Brethren, a

Some two r

It should b

Some galley

Till then I

And, at th

PERICLES.

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS.

THE first edition of 'Pericles' appeared in 1609, under the following title:—"The late and much admired play, called Pericles, Prince of Tyre. With the true relation of the whole historie, adventures, and fortunes of the said prince: As also the no lesse strange and worthy accidents, in the birth and life of his daughter Mariana. As it hath been divers and sundry times acted [by] his Maiesties Seruants at the Globe on the Bank-side. By William Shakespeare. Imprinted at London for Henry Gosson, and are to be sold at the sign of the Sunne in Paternoster-row, &c. 1609." Other quarto editions appeared in 1611, in 1619, in 1630, and in 1635. The variations in these from the text of 1609 are very slight. In 1664 'Pericles' first appeared in the folio collection of Shakspeare's works, being introduced into the third edition, whose title-page states—"Unto this impression is added seven plays never before printed in folio."

We advocate the belief that 'Pyrocles,' or 'Pericles,' was a very early work of Shakspeare, in some form, however different from that which we possess. That it was an early work we are constrained to believe; not from the evidence of particular passages, which may be deficient in power or devoid of refinement, but from the entire construction of the dramatic action. The play is essentially one of movement, which is a great requisite for dramatic success; but that movement is not held in subjection to an unity of idea. But with this essential disadvantage we cannot doubt that, even with very imperfect dialogue, the action presented a succession of scenes of very absorbing interest. The introduction of Gower, however inartificial it may seem, was the result of very profound skill. The presence of Gower supplied the unity of idea which the desultory nature of the story wanted. Nevertheless, such a story we believe could not have been chosen by Shakspeare in the seventeenth century, when his art was fully developed in all its wondrous powers and combinations. With his perfect mastery of the faculty of representing, instead of recording, the treatment of a story which would have required perpetual explanation and connection would have been painful to him, if not impossible.

Dr. Drake has bestowed very considerable attention upon the endeavour to prove that 'Pericles' ought to be received as the indisputable work of Shakspeare. Yet his arguments, after all, amount only to the establishment of the following theory: "No play, in fact, more openly discloses the hand of Shakspeare than 'Pericles,' and fortunately his share in its composition appears to have been very considerable; he may be distinctly, though not frequently, traced, in the first and second acts; after which, feeling the incompetency of his fellow-labourer, he seems to have assumed almost the entire management of the remainder, nearly the whole of the third, fourth, and fifth acts bearing indisputable testimony to the genius and execution of the great master."* We have no faith whatever in this very easy mode of disposing of the authorship of a doubtful play—of leaving entirely out of view the most important part of every drama, its action, its characterization, looking at the whole merely as a collection of passages, of which the worst are to be assigned to some âme damnée, and the best triumphantly claimed for Shakspeare. There are some, however, who judge of such matters upon broader principles. Mr. Hallam says, "Pericles is generally reckoned to be in part, and only in part, the work of Shakspeare. From the poverty and bad management of the fable, the want of any effective or distinguishable character, for Marina is no more than the common form of female virtue, such as all the dramatists of that age could draw, and a general feebleness of the tragedy as a whole, I should not believe the structure to have been Shakspeare's. But many passages are far more in his manner than in that of any contemporary writer with whom I am acquainted."† Here "the poverty and bad management of the fable"—"the want of any effective or distinguishable character," are assigned for the belief that the structure could not have been Shakspeare's. But let us accept Dryden's opinion that with reference to the original structure of the play, and the difficulty vanishes. It was impossible that the character of the early drama should not have been impressed upon Shakspeare's earliest efforts. Do we therefore think that the drama, as it has come down to us, is presented in the form in which it was first written? By no means. We agree with Mr. Hallam that in parts the language seems rather that of Shakspeare's "second or third manner than of his first." But this belief is not inconsistent with the opinion that the original structure was Shakspeare's. No other poet that existed at the beginning of the seventeenth century—perhaps no poet that came after that period, whether Massinger, or Fletcher, or Webster—could have written the greater part of the fifth act. Coarse as the comic scenes are, there are touches in them unlike any other writer but Shakspeare. We are willing to believe that, even in the very height of his fame, Shakspeare would have bestowed any amount of labour for the improvement of an early production of his own, if the taste of his audiences had from time to time demanded its continuance upon the stage. It is for this reason that we think that the 'Pericles' which appears to have been in some respects a new play at the beginning of the seventeenth century was the revival of a play written by Shakspeare some twenty years earlier.

"Shakspeare's own muse his Pericles first bore,"

* 'Shakspeare and his Times,' vol. ii. p. 208.

† 'History of Literature,' vol. iii. p. 268.

P E R I C L E S.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

ANTIOCHUS, King of Antioch.
Appears, Act I. sc. 1.

PERICLES, Prince of Tyre.
Act I. sc. 2; sc. 4. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 1; sc. 3. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3.

LIGANUS, a lord of Tyre.
Act II. sc. 2; Act II. sc. 4. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3.

SCANES, a lord of Tyre.
Act I. sc. 3. Act II. sc. 4.

MIDES, King of Pentapolis.
Act II. sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5.

DION, Governor of Tharsus.
Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 4.

DIACHUS, Governor of Mitylene.
Act IV. sc. 6. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3.

HEMON, a lord of Ephesus.
Act III. sc. 2; sc. 4. Act V. sc. 3.

DIACHUS, servant to Antiochus.
Appears, Act I. sc. 1; sc. 3.

DIACHUS, servant to Dionysa.
Appears, Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 2.

Marshall.
Appears, Act II. sc. 3.

A Pander and his Wife.
Appears, Act IV. sc. 3; sc. 6.

BOULT, servant to the Pander.
Appears, Act IV. sc. 3; sc. 6.

GOWER, as Chorus.
Appears, Act I. Chorus. Act II. Chorus. Act III. Chorus. Act IV. Chorus, sc. 4. Act V. Chorus, sc. 2; sc. 3.

The Daughter of Antiochus.
Appears, Act I. sc. 1.

DIONYZA, wife to Cleon.
Appears, Act I. sc. 4. Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 4.

THAISA, daughter to Simonides.
Appears, Act II. sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5. Act III. sc. 2; sc. 3. Act V. sc. 3.

MARINA, daughter to Pericles and Thaisa.
Appears, Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 3; sc. 6. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3.

LYCHORIDA, nurse to Marina.
Appears, Act III. sc. 1; sc. 3.

DIANA.
Appears, Act V. sc. 2.

Lords, Knights, Sailors, Pirates, Fishermen, and Messengers.

SCENE,—DISPERSEDLY IN VARIOUS COUNTRIES.

ACT I.

Enter GOWER.

Before the Palace of Antioch.

A song of old was sung,
As ancient Gower is come;
Of man's infirmities,
Your ear, and please your eyes.
Been sung, at festivals,
At feasts, and holy-ales;
To men and ladies, in their lives
And for restoratives.
To use is to make men glorious;
As, quo antiquius, eo melius.
Common in these latter times,
It's more ripe, accept my rhymes,
To hear an old man sing,
Whose wishes pleasure bring,
To old and young, and that I might
For you, like taper-light.
Antioch then, Antiochus the Great
Of this city, for his chiefest seat;
Set in all Syria;
As what mine authors say;
To give unto him took a pheece,<sup>a</sup>
And left a female heir,
Whom, blythe, and full of face,
He had lent her all his grace:
From the father liking took,
To incest did provoke;

<sup>a</sup> As their lives—duris g their lives.
<sup>b</sup> As pheece, or fore, s a mate.

Bad child, worse father! to entice his own
To evil, should be done by none.
By custom, what they did begin
Was with long use account'd no sin.
The beauty of this sinful dame
Made many princes thither frame,
To seek her as a bedfellow,
In marriage-pleasures playfellow:
Which to prevent, he made a law,
(To keep her still, and men in awe,
That who so ask'd her for his wife,
His riddle told not, lost his life:
So for her many a wight did die,
As you grim looks do testify.
What ensues, to the judgment of your eye
I give, my cause who best can justify. [Exit]

SCENE I.—The Palace of Antioch.

Enter ANTIOCHUS, PERICLES, and Attendants.

Ant. Young prince of Tyre, you have at large received

The danger of the task you undertake.

Per. I have, Antiochus, and with a soul Embolden'd with the glory of her praise,
Think death no hazard, in this enterprise. [Music]

Ant. Bring in our daughter, clothed like a bride,
For the embracements, even of Jove himself;
At whose conception (till Lucina reign'd)
Nature this dowry gave, to glad her presence
The senate-house of planets all did sit,
To knit in her their best perfectiours.

Enter the Daughter of Antiochus.

Per. See where she comes, appareld like the spring,
Graces her subjects, and her thoughts the king
Of every virtue gives renown to men!
Her face the book of praises, where is read Nothing but curious pleasures, as from thence Sorrow were ever 'ras'd, and testy wrath
Could never be her mild companion.
Ye gods that made me man, and sway in love,
That have inflam'd desire in my breast
To taste the fruit of yon celestial tree,
Or die in the adventure, be my helps,
As I am son and servant to your will,
To compass such a boundless happiness!

Ant. Prince Pericles—

Per. That would be son to great Antiochus.

Ant. Before thee stands this fair Hesperides,
With golden fruit, but dangerous to be touch'd;
For death-like dragons here affright thee hard:
Her face, like heav'n, enticeth thee to view
Her countless glory, which desert must gain:
And which, without desert, because thine eye
Presumes to reach, all thy whole heap must die.
You sometime famous princes, like thyself,
Drawn by report, adventurous by desire,
Tell thee with speechless tongues, and semblance pale,
That, without covering save yon field of stars,
Here they stand martyrs, slain in Cupid's wars;
And with dead cheeks advise thee to desist
For going on Death's net, whom none resist.

Per. Antiochus, I thank thee, who hast taught
My frail mortality to know itself.

And by those fearful objects to prepare
This body, like to them, to what I must:
For death remember'd should be like a mirror,
Who tells us, life's but breath, to trust it error.
I'll make my will then; and, as sick men do
Who know the world, see heav'n, but feeling woe,
Gripe not at earthly joys, as erst they did;
So I bequeath a happy peace to you
And all good men, as every prince should do;
My riches to the earth from whence they came;
But my unspotted fire of love to you.

[To the Daughter of Antiochus.

Thus ready for the way of life or death,
I wait the sharpest blow.

Ant. Scorning advice; read the conclusion then;
Which read and not expounded, 't is decreed,
As these before, so thou thyself shalt bleed.

Daugh. Of all 'say'd yet, mayst thou prove prosperous!

Of all 'say'd yet, I wish thee happiness!

Per. Like a bold champion I assume the lists,
Nor ask advice of any other thought,
But faithfulness, and courage.

THE RIDDLE.

"I am no viper, yet I feed
On mother's flesh which did me breed:
I sought a husband, in which labour,
I found that kindness in a father.
He's father, son, and husband mild,
I mother, wife, and yet his child.
How they may be, and yet in two,
As you will live, resolve it you."

Sharp physic is the last: but O, ye powers!
That give heav'n countless eyes to view men's acts,
Why cloud they not their sights perpetually,
If this be true, which makes me pale to read it?
Fair glass of light, I lov'd you, and could still,

[Takes hold of the hand of the Princess.

not this glorious casket stor'd with ill:

Per. All 'say'd yet is the ancient reading; which Percy suggest—of all who have essay'd yet.

But I must tell
For he's no man
That, knowing
You're a fair vi
Who, finger'd to
Would draw he
But being play'
Hell only danc
Good sooth, I c

Ant. Prince
For that's an a
As dangerous as Either expound

Per. Great k
Few love to hea
'T would 'braid
Who hath a bo
He's more seci
For vice repeat
Blows dust in c
And yet the g
The breath is g
To stop the a casts Copp'd hills to

By man's oppr
Kings are earth
And if Jove st
It is enough y
What being m
All love the w
Then give my

Ant. Heave
meat

But I will glo
Tyre

Though by the
Your expositic
We might pro
Yet hope, succ
As your fair s
Forty days lo
If by which t
This mercy sh
And, until the
As doth befit c

[Ere

Per. How When what is The which is
If it be true t
Then were it
As with foul i
Where now y
By your unfin
(Which pleas
And she an ec
By the deflin
And both like
On sweetest fl
Antioch, farev Blush not in
Will shun no
One sin, I kn Murder's as Poison and t
Ay, and the t
Then, lest my
By flight I l

Ant. He b
me
To have his l ive to trumpet forth my infamy, old, Antiochus doth sin

 bed manner :
 instantly this prince must die ;
 my honour must keep high.
 is there ?

Enter THALIARD.

Doth your highness call ?
 ard, you're of our chamber, and our private actions to your secrecy ;
 faithfulness we will advance you.
 ld here 's poison, and here 's gold ;
 nce of Tyre, and thou must kill him ;
 to ask the reason why,
 I it. Say, is it done ?
 ord, 't is done.

Enter a Messenger.

Enough.
 h cool yourself, telling your haste.
 rd, prince Pericles is fled.

As thou after ; and like an arrow, shot perien'd archer, hits the mark
 vel at, so do thou ne'er return, /st, prince Pericles is dead.
 nd, if I can get him within my pistol's ke him sure enough : so farewell to your [Exit.
 rd, adieu ! till Pericles be dead,
 end no succour to my head. [Exit.

SCENE II. — Tyre.

PERICLES, HELICANUS, and other Lords.

ne disturb us : why should this charge
 oughts,— sion, dull-ey'd Melancholy, us'd a guest, as not an hour,
 rious walk, or peaceful night,
 e grief should sleep,) can breed me quiet ?
 ourt mine eyes, and mine eyes shun them,
 ich I feared, is at Antioch, ns far too short to hit me here ;
 sure's art can joy my spirits,
 er's distance comfort me ;
 ; the passions of the mind,
 first conception by mis-dread,
 ishment and life by care ;
 hat but fear what might be done,
 e, and cares it be not done.
 ;—the great Antiochus am too little to contend, eat, can make his will his act)
 peaking, though I swear to silence ;
 to say I honour him,
 say dishonour him :
 make him blush in being known,
 ource by which it might be known ;
 es he 'll o'erspread the land,
 nt of war will look so huge,
 I drive courage from the state ;
 quish'd, ere they do resist,
 ish'd, that ne'er thought offence :
 em, not pity of myself,
 re but as the tops of trees, roots they grow by, and defend them,) is the reading of all the copies, has here no eg to Malone. Orest is therefore adopted.

 said just before ?—

e course by which it might be known ?
 the stint of war. Stint is synonymous with cess.

Makes both my body pine, and soul to languish,
 And punish that before, that he would punish.

1 Lord. Joy and all comfort in your sacred breast !

2 Lord. And keep your mind, till you return to us,
 Peaceful and comfortable !

Hel. Peace, peace, and give experience tongue :
 They do abuse the king that flatter him,
 For flattery is the bellows blows up sin ;
 The thing that which is flatter'd, but a spark,
 To which that spark gives heat and stronger glowing ;
 Whereas reproof, obedient, and in order,
 Fits kings as they are men, for they may err.
 When signior Sooth here doth proclaim a peace,
 He flatters you, makes war upon your life :
 Prince, pardon me, or strike me if you please,
 I cannot be much lower than my knees.

Per. All leave us else ; but let your cares o'erlook
 What shipping, and what lading 's in our haven,
 And then return to us. Helicanus, thou Hast moved us : what seest thou in our looks ?

Hel. An angry brow, dread lord.

Per. If there be such a dar- in princes' frowns,
 How durst thy tongue move anger to our face ?

Hel. How dare the plants look up to heaven, from whence

They have their nourishment ?

Per. Thou know'st I have power to take thy life from thee.

Hel. I have ground the axe myself ; do but you strike the blow.

Per. Rise, prithee, rise : sit down, thou art no flatterer ;

I thank thee for it ; and heaven forbid,
 That kings should let their ears hear their faults hid !
 Fit counsellor, and servant for a prince,
 Who by thy wisdom mak'st a prince thy servant,
 What wouldst thou have me do ?

Hel. To bear with patience
 Such griefs as you yourself do lay upon yourself.

Per. Thou speak'st like a physician, Helicanus ;
 That minister'st a potion unto me,
 That thou wouldst tremble to receive thyself.
 Attend me then ; I went to Antioch,
 Whereas, thou know'st, against the face of death,
 I sought the purchase of a glorious beauty,
 From whence an issue I might propagate ;
 Are arms<sup>b</sup> to princes, and bring joys to subjects.
 Her face was to mine eye beyond all wonder ;
 The rest (hark in thine ear) as black as incest ;
 Which by my knowledge found, the sinful father, Seem'd not to strike, but smooth :<sup>c</sup> but thou know'st this,
 'T is time to fear, when tyrants seem to kiss.
 Which fear so grew in me, I hither fled,
 Under the covering of a careful night,
 Who seem'd my good protector : and, being here,
 Bethought me what was past, what might succeed ;
 I knew him tyrannous, and tyrants' fears
 Decrease not, but grow faster than the years :
 And should he doubt it, (as no doubt he doth,)
 That I should open to the listening air,
 How many worthy princes' bloods were shed,
 To keep his bed of blackness unmaid ope,—
 To lop that doubt, he 'll fill this land with arms,
 And make pretence of wrong that I have done him ;
 When all, for mine, if I may call 't offence,
 Must feel war's blow, who spares not innocence :
 Which love to all (of which thyself art one,
 Who now reprov'st me for it)——

Hel. Alas, sir !

Per. Drew sleep out of mine eyes, blood from my cheeks,

<sup>a</sup> Whereat, in the sense of where.

<sup>b</sup> Which are arms, &c., is here uncorrected.

<sup>c</sup> To smooth signifies to flatter.

Musings into my mind, with thousand doubts
How I might stop this tempest ere it came;
And finding little comfort to relieve them,
I thought it princely charity to grieve them.

Hel. Well, my lord, since you have given me leave to speak,

Freely will I speak. Antiochus you fear;
And justly too, I think; you fear the tyrant,
Who either by public war, or private treason,
Will take away your life.

Therefore, my lord, go travel for a while,
Till that his rage and anger be forgot;
Or till the Destinies do cut his thread of life:
Your rule direct to any; if to me,
Day serves not light more faithful than I'll be.

Per. I do not doubt thy faith;
But should he wrong my liberties in my absence—

Hel. We'll mingle our bloods together in the earth,
From whence we had our being and our birth.

Per. Tyre, I now look from thee then, and to Tharsus Intend my travel, where I'll hear from thee;
And by whose letters I'll dispose myself.
The care I had and have of subjects' good,
On thee I lay, whose wisdom's strength can bear it.
I'll take thy word for faith, not ask thine oath;
Who shuns not to break one, will sure crack both:
But in our orbs we'll live so round and safe,
That time of both this truth shall ne'er convince,* Thou show'st a subject's shine, I a true prince. [Eze.]

SCENE III.

Enter THALIARD.

Thal. So, this is Tyre, and this the court. Here must I kill king Pericles; and if I do it not, I am sure to be hanged at home: 't is dangerous.—Well, I perceive, he was a wise fellow, and had good discretion, that, being bid to ask what he would of the king, desired he might know none of his secrets. Now do I see he had some reason for it: for if a king bid a man be a villain, he is bound by the indenture of his oath to be one.

Hush, here come the lords of Tyre.

Enter HELICANUS, ESCANES, and other Lords of Tyre.

Hel. You shall not need, my fellow-peers of Tyre,
Further to question me of your king's departure.
His seal'd commission, left in trust with me,
Doth speak sufficiently, he's gone to travel.

Thal. How! the king gone! [Aside.]

Hel. If further yet you will be satisfied,
Why, as it were unlicens'd of your loves
He would depart, I'll give some light unto you.
Being at Antioch—

Thal. What from Antioch? [Aside.]

Hel. Royal Antiochus (on what cause I know not)
Took some displeasure at him, at least he judg'd so:
And doubting lest he had err'd or sinn'd,
To show his sorrow, he'd correct himself;
So puts himself unto the shipman's toil,
With whom each minute threatens life or death.

Thal. Well, I perceive
I shall not be hang'd now, although I would;
But since he's gone, the king sure must please
He 'scap'd the land, to perish at the sea.—
I'll present myself. Peace to the lords of Tyre.

Hel. Lord Thaliard from Antiochus is welcome.

Thal. From him I come
With message unto princely Pericles;
But since my landing I have understood,
Your lord hath betook himself to unknown travels;
My message must return from whence it came.

Hel. We have no reason to desire it,

* Convince, in the sense of overcome.

Commended to our master, not to us:
Yet ere you shall depart, this we desire,
As friends to Antioch, we may feast in Tyre.

SCENE IV.—Tharsus.

Enter CLEON, DIONYZA, and others.

Cle. My Dionyza, shall we rest us here
And, by relating tales of others' griefs,
See if 't will teach us to forget our own?

Dio. That were to blow at fire in hope
For who digs hills because they do aspire, Throws down one mountain to cast up a hill.
O my distressed lord, ev'n such our griefs
Here they're but felt, and seen* with mine
But like to groves, being topp'd, they high

Cle. O Dionyza,
Who wanteth food, and will not say he wants
Or can conceal his hunger, till he famish
Our tongues and sorrows do sound deep as
Into the air; our eyes do weep, till tongues Fetch breath that may proclaim them lost
If heaven slumber, while their creatures wake
They may awake their helpers to comfort.
I'll then discourse our woes felt several years
And, wanting breath to speak, help me at last.
Dio. I'll do my best, sir.

Cle. This Tharsus, over which I have
ment,

A city, on whom plenty held full hand,
For riches strew'd herself even in the street
Whose towers bore heads so high, they kiss
And strangers ne'er beheld, but wonder'd,
Whose men and dames so jetted and adorned Like one another's glass to trim them by:
Their tables were stor'd full, to glad the
And not so much to feed on, as delight;
All poverty was scorn'd, and pride so great
The name of help grew odious to repeat.

Dio. Oh, 't is too true.

Cle. But see what heaven can do!
change,

These mouths, whom but of late, earth, and
Were all too little to content and please,
Although they gave their creatures in abundance
As houses are defil'd for want of use,
They are now starv'd for want of exercise;
Those palates, who, not us'd to hunger's use,
Must have inventions to delight the taste,
Would now be glad of bread, and beg for Those mothers who, to nouze up their babes
Thought nought too curious, are ready now
To eat those little darlings whom they love
So sharp are hunger's teeth, that man and Draw lots who first shall die to lengthen life
Here stands a lord, and there a lady weeps
Here many sink, yet those which see them
Have scarce strength left to give them bread
Is not this true?

Dio. Our cheeks and hollow eyes do witness

Cle. O let these cities that of Plenty's
And her prosperities so largely taste,
With their superfluous riots, bear these
The misery of Tharsus may be theirs.

Enter a Lord.

Lord. Where's the lord governor?

Cle. Here.
Speak out thy sorrows which thou bring'st,
For comfort is too far for us to expect.

* Dionyza means to say that here their griefs are seen with mischief's eyes—eyes of discontent and if topp'd with other tales—that is, cut down by de-—like groves they will rise higher, be more abundant ve descried, upon our neighbouring ships make hitherward.

as much.
comes but brings an heir,
d as his inheritor ;
some neighbouring nation,
e of our misery,
e hollow vessels with their power,
the which are down already ;
quest of unhappy me,
's got to overcome.
the least fear ; for, by the semblance gs display'd, they bring us peace, us favourers, not as foes.
k't st like him 's untutor'd to repeat,
airest show, means most deceit.
hat they will, and what they can,
ar ?
lowest, and we are half way there :
ral, we attend him here,
t he comes, and whence he comes,
ves.
y lord.
is peace, if he on peace consist ; *
nable to resist.

Enter PERICLES, with Attendants.

Per. Lord governor, for so we hear you are,
Let not our ships, and number of our men,
Be, like a beacon fir'd, to amaze your eyes.
We have heard your miseries as far as Tyre,
And seen the desolation of your streets :
Nor come we to add sorrow to your tears,
But to relieve them of their heavy load ;
And these our ships (you happily may think
Are, like the Trojan horse, war-stuff'd within,
With bloody views expecting overthrow)
Are stor'd with corn to make your needy bread,
And give them life, whom hunger starv'd half dead.

Omnis. The gods of Greece protect you !
And we will pray for you.

Per. Arise, I pray you, rise ;
We do not look for reverence, but for love,
And harbourage for ourself, our ships, and men.

Cle. The which when any shall not gratify
Or pay you with unthankfulness in thought,
Be it our wives, our children, or ourselves,
The curse of heaven and men succeed their evils !
Till when (the which, I hope, shall ne'er be seen),
Your grace is welcome to our town and us.

Per. Which welcome we'll accept ; feast here a while,
Until our stars, that frown, lend us a smile. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Enter GOWER.

re have you seen a mighty king wis, to incest bring :
tee and benign lord,
ove awful both in deed and word.
n, as men should be,
past necessity.
su those in trouble's reign,
te, a mountain gain.
s conversation give my benizon)
barsus, where each man
s writ he spoken can :<sup>b</sup> ember what he does,
atue to make him glorious :
to the contrary to your eyes ; what need speak I ?

Dumb show.

Per PERICLES talking with CLEON ; all th them. Enter at another door a with a letter to PERICLES ; PERICLES ter to CLEON ; PERICLES gives the eward, and knights him.

ER. at one door, and CLE. at another.<sup>c</sup> ane hath stay'd at home,

oney, like a throne,
' labours ; for though he strive sil, keeps good alive ;
ll his prince's desire,
of all that haps in Tyre :
ard came full bent with sin,
tent to murder him ;
' Tharsus 't was not best hien to make his rest :
g so, put forth to seas,
o men bin, there 's seldom ease ;

on.
f this obscure line probably is—thinks all he y writ
omb show literally, as in the original.

For now the wind begins to blow ;
Thunder above, and deeps below,
Make such unquiet, that the ship
Should house him safe, is wrack'd and split,
And he, good prince, having all lost,
By waves from coast to coast is toss'd :
All perishen of man, of pelf,
Ne aught escapen'd but himself ;
Till fortune, tir'd with doing bad,
Threw him ashore to give him glad :
And here he comes ; what shall be next,
Pardon old Gower ; this 'longs the text.* [Exit.]

SCENE I.—Pentapolis.

Enter PERICLES, wet.

Per. Yet cease your ire, ye angry stars of heaven !
Wind, rain, and thunder, remember, earthly man
Is but a substance, that must yield to you ;
And I, as fits my nature, do obey you.
Alas, the sea hath cast me on the rocks,
Wash'd me from shore to shore, and left me breath,
Nothing to think on, but ensuing death :
Let it suffice the greatness of your powers,
To have heretofore a prince of all his fortunes ;
And having thrown him from your wat'ry grave,
Here to have death in peace, is all he'll crave.

Enter three Fishermen.

1 Fish. What, ho, Pilche !<sup>b</sup>
2 Fish. Ha, come, and bring away the nets.
1 Fish. What, Patch-breech, I say !
3 Fish. What say you, master ?
1 Fish. Look how thou stirrest now : come away, or I'll fetch thee with a wamion.
3 Fish. 'Faith, master, I am thinking of the poor men that were cast away before us, even now.

* Douce explains this clearly—'This 'longs the text' is, in Gower's elliptical construction, this belongs to the text ; I need not comment upon it ; you will see it.

<sup>b</sup> Pilche is most probably a name ; as we have afterwards
Patch-breech.

1 Fish. Alas, poor souls! it griev'd my heart to hear what pitiful cries they made to us, to help them, when, well-a-day, we could scarce help ourselves.

3 Fish. Nay, master, said not I as much, when I saw the porpus how he bounced and tumbled? they say, they are half fish, half flesh; a plague on them! they ne'er come but I look to be wash'd. Master, I marvel how the fishes live in the sea.

1 Fish. Why, as men do a-land; the great ones eat up the little ones: I can compare our rich misers to nothing so fitly as to a whale; 'a plays and tumbles, driving the poor fry before him, and at last devours them all at a mouthful. Such whales have I heard on a' the land, who never leave gaping, till they 've swallow'd the whole parish, church, steeple, bells and all.

Per. A pretty moral.

3 Fish. But, master, if I had been the sexton, I would have been that day in the belfry.

2 Fish. Why, man?

3 Fish. Because he should have swallow'd me too: and when I had been in his belly, I would have kept such a jangling of the bells, that he should never have left, till he cast bells, steeple, church, and parish, up again. But if the good king Simonides were of my mind—

Per. Simonides?

3 Fish. We would purge the land of these drones, that rob the bee of her honey.

Per. How from the finny subject<sup>a</sup> of the sea These fishers tell the infirmities of men; And from their watery empire recollect All that may men approve, or men detect! Peace be at your labour, honest fishermen.

2 Fish. Honest, good fellow, what's that? If it be a day fits you, search out of the calendar, and nobody look after it.<sup>b</sup>

Per. You may see, the sea hath cast me on your coast.

2 Fish. What a drunken knave was the sea, to cast thee in our way!

Per. A man whom both the waters and the wind, In that vast tennis-court, hath made the ball For them to play upon, entreats you pity him; He asks of you, that never us'd to beg.

1 Fish. No, friend, cannot you beg? here's them in our country of Greece gets more with begging than we can do with working.

2 Fish. Canst thou catch any fishes then?

Per. I never practis'd it.

2 Fish. Nay, then thou wilt starve sure; for here's nothing to be got now-a-days, unless thou canst fish for 't.

Per. What I have been, I have forgot to know; But what I am, want teaches me to think on; A man through'd up with cold; my veins are chill, And have no more of life than may suffice To give my tongue that heat to ask your help: Which if you shall refuse, when I am dead, For that I am a man, pray see me buried.

1 Fish. Die, quoth-a? Now gods forbid! I have a gown here; come, put it on, keep thee warm. Now, afore me, a handsome fellow! Come, thou shalt go home, and we'll have flesh for holidays, fish for fasting-days, and more'er puddings and flap-jacks; and thou shalt be welcome.

Per. I thank you, sir.

2 Fish. Hark you, my friend, you said you could not beg.

Per. I did but crave.

<sup>a</sup> Subject must be taken as a plural noun.

<sup>b</sup> This is the reading of the original, and has occasioned some discussion. Does it not mean that the fisherman, laughing at the rarity of being honest, remarks, if it be a day (i. e. a saint's or red-letter day) fits you, search out of (not in) the calendar, and nobody look after it (there, as it would be useless)?

2 Fish. But crave? then I'll turn e so I shall scape whipping.

Per. Why, are all your beggars whipp

2 Fish. O, not all, my friend, not your beggars were whipped, I would v office than to be a beadle. But, master, up the net. [Exeunt two of t

Per. How well this honest mirth becom

1 Fish. Hark you, sir, do you know w Per. Not well.

1 Fish. Why, I'll tell you; this is polis, and our king, the good Simonides.

Per. The good king Simonides, do yo

1 Fish. Ay, sir, and he deserves so to his peaceable reign, and good government

Per. He is a happy king, since he g subjects the name of good, by his gover far is his court distant from this shore?

1 Fish. Marry, sir, half a day's jourr tell you, he hath a fair daughter, and her birthday; and there are princes and from all parts of the world to just and t love.

Per. Were my fortunes equal to my d wish to make one there.

1 Fish. O, sir, things must be as th what a man cannot get, he may lawfully wife's soul.<sup>a</sup>

Re-enter the two Fishermen, drawing

2 Fish. Help, master, help; here's a the net, like a poor man's right in the hardly come out. Ha! bots on 't, 't is and 't is turn'd to a rusty armour.

Per. An armour, friends! I pray you, Thanks, Fortune, yet, that after all my ce Thou giv'st me somewhat to repair myself And, though it was mine own, part of mit Which my dead father did bequeath to w With this strict charge (even as he left hi "Keep it, my Pericles, it hath been a shi Twixt me and death (and pointed to thi For that it sav'd me, keep it; in like nec The which the gods protect thee from! t thee."

It kept where I kept, I so dearly lov'd it; Till the rough seas, that spare not any ma Took it in rage, though calm'd they've g I thank thee for it; my shipwrack now 's! Since I have here my father's gift in his w

1 Fish. What mean you, sir?

Per. To beg of you, kind friends, this e For it was some time target to a king; I know it by this mark; he lov'd me deat And for his sake, I wish the having of it; And that you'd guide me to your sovereig Where with it I may appear a gentleman; And if that ever my low fortune's better, I'll pay your bounties; till then, rest you

1 Fish. Why, wilt thou tourney for the Per. I'll show the virtue I have borne t

1 Fish. Why, d' ye take it, and the ge good on 't!

2 Fish. Ay, but hark you, my friend, t made up this garment through the rough t water: there are certain condolements. e I hope, sir, if you thrive, you'll remember t you had it.

Per. Believe it, I will;

By your furtherance I am cloth'd in steel; And spite of all the rapture of the sea, This jewel holds his hiding on my arm;

<sup>a</sup> We cannot attempt to explain this. There is in this play than that of Antiochus.

ne I will mount myself
er, whose delightful steps
he gazer joy to see him tread.—
end, I yet am unprovided
ases.<sup>a</sup>
e 'll sure provide: thou shalt have my make thee a pair; and I 'll bring thee to self.
honour be but a goal to my will,
I rise, or else add ill to ill. [Exeunt.]

—A public Way or Platform, leading to A Pavilion by the side of it for the rethe King and Princess.<sup>b</sup>

ONIDES, THAISA, Lords, and Attendants.
the knights ready to begin the triumph?
hey are, my liege;
ir coming, to present themselves.
rn them, we are ready; and our daughter,
whose birth these triumphs are,
beauty's child, whom Nature gat e, and seeing wonder at. [Exit a Lord.]
leaseth you, my royal father, to express lations great, whose merit 's less.
fit it should be so; for princes are ch heaven makes like to itself:
e their glory, if neglected,
sir renown, if not respected.
ir honour, daughter, to explain
f each knight, in his device.
ich, to preserve mine honour, I 'll perform.
r a Knight; he passes over the stage, and Squire presents his shield to the Princess.
is the first that doth prefer himself?
night of Sparta, my renowned father;
ce he bears upon his shield
thiop reaching at the sun;
ix tua vita mihi.

oves you well, that holds his life of you.
[The second Knight passes.]

cond that presents himself?
ince of Macedon, my royal father;
ce he bears upon his shield
night, that 's conquer'd by a lady:
us, in Spanish, Piu per dulcura que per ra. [The third Knight passes.]

what 's the third?
third of Antioch; and his device, chivalry: the word, Me pompa provexit
e. [The fourth Knight passes.]

t is the fourth?
urning torch that 's turned upside down;
od me alit, me extinguit.
b shows that beauty hath his power and will,
e well inflame, as it can kill.

[The fifth Knight passes.] fifth, an hand environed with clouds, gold, that 's by the touchstone tried:
is, Sic spectanda fides.

[The sixth Knight passes.]
what 's the sixth and last, the which the ght himself
graceful courtesy deliver'd?
seems to be a stranger; but his present branch, that 's only green at top;
s hac spe vivo.

stty moral;
cted state wherein he is,
ou his fortunes yet may flourish,
e had need mean better than his outward
y

<sup>a</sup> Armour for the legs.
is description of the scene is modern.

Can any way speak in his just commend:
For, by his rusty outside, he appears
To have practis'd more the whipstock than the lance.

2 Lord. He well may be a stranger, for he comes
To an honour'd triumph, strangely furnished.

3 Lord. And on set purpose let his armour rust
Until this day, to scour it in the dust.

Sim. Opinion 's but a fool, that makes us scan
The outward habit by the inward man.
But stay, the knights are coming; we 'll withdraw
Into the gallery. [Exeunt.]

[Great shouts, and all cry, The mean Knight.]

SCENE III.—A Hall of State. A Banquet prepared.

Enter SIMONIDES, THAISA, Lords, Attendants, and the Knights from tilting.

Sim. Knights,
To say you are welcome, were superfluous.
To place upon the volume of your deeds,
As in a title-page, your worth in arms,
Were more than you expect, or more than 's fit,
Since every worth in show commends itself.
Prepare for mirth, for mirth becomes a feast:
You are princes, and my guests.

Thai. But you, my knight and guest;
To whom this wreath of victory I give,
And crown you king of this day's happiness.

Per. 'T is more by fortune, lady, than by merit.

Sim. Call it by what you will, the day is yours;
And here, I hope, is none that envies it.

In framing an artist, art hath thus decreed,
To make some good, but others to exceed;
And you 're her labour'd scholar. Come, queen o' the feast,

(For, daughter, so you are,) here take your place:
Marshal the rest, as they deserve their grace.

Knights. We are honour'd much by good Simonides.

Sim. Your presence glads our days; honour we love,
For who hates honour, hates the gods above.

Marsh. Sir, yonder is your place.

Per. Some other is more fit.

1 Knight. Contend not, sir; for we are gentlemen,
That neither in our hearts, nor outward eyes,
Envy the great, nor do the low despise.

Per. You are right courteous knights.

Sim. Sit, sir, sit.

By Jove, I wonder, that is king of thoughts,
These cates resist me, he not thought upon.

Thai. By Juno, that is queen of marriage,
All viands that I eat do seem unsavoury,
Wishing him my meat: sure he 's a gallant gentleman.

Sim. He 's but a country gentleman; has done no more

Than other knights have done; has broken a staff,
Or so; so let it pass.

Thai. To me he seems like diamond to glass.

Per. You king 's to me, like to my father's picture,
Which tells me, in that glory once he was;
Had princes sit like stars about his throne,
And he the sun, for them to reverence.

None that beheld him, but, like lesser lights,
Did veil their crowns to his supremacy;
Where<sup>a</sup> now his son 's like a glow-worm in the night,
The which hath fire in darkness, none in light;
Whereby I see that Time 's the king of men,
For he 's their parent, and he is their grave,
And gives them what he will, not what they crave.

Sim. What, are you merry, knights?

1 Knight. Who can be other in this royal presence?

Sim. Here, with a cup that 's stor'd unto the brim
(As you do love, fill to your mistress' lips.)

We drink this health to you.

<sup>a</sup> Where—whereas.

Knights. We thank your grace.
Sim. Yet pause a while; you knight doth sit too melancholy,

As if the entertainment in our court
 Had not a show might countervail his worth.
 Note it not you, Thaisa?

Thai. What is 't to me, my father?

Sim. O, attend, my daughter;
 Princes, in this, should live like gods above,
 Who freely give to every one that comes
 To honour them:
 And princes, not doing so, are like to gnats,
 Which make a sound, but kill'd are wonder'd at.
 Therefore to make his entrance more sweet,
 Here say, we drink this standing bowl of wine to him.

Thai. Alas, my father, it befits not me
 Unto a stranger knight to be so bold;
 He may my proffer take for an offence,
 Since men take women's gifts for impudence.

Sim. How! do as I bid you, or you 'll move me else.

Thai. Now, by the gods, he could not please me better. [Aside.]

Sim. And further tell him, we desire to know of him,
 Of whence he is, his name and parentage.

Thai. The king my father, sir, hath drunk to you.

Per. I thank him.

Thai. Wishing it so much blood unto your life.

Per. I thank both him and you, and pledge him freely.

Thai. And further he desires to know of you,
 Of whence you are, your name and parentage.

Per. A gentleman of Tyre—(my name Pericles; My education has been in arts and arms;) [Aside.]
 Who, looking for adventures in the world,
 Was by the rough seas reft of ships and men,
 And, after shipwreck, driven upon this shore.

Thai. He thanks your grace; names himself Pericles,
 A gentleman of Tyre, who only by Misfortune of the sea has been bereft
 Of ships and men, and cast upon this shore.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I pity his misfortune,
 And will awake him from his melancholy.
 Come, gentlemen, we sit too long on trifles,
 And waste the time, which looks for other revels.
 Even in your armours, as you are address'd,
 Will very well become a soldier's dance:
 I will not have excuse, with saying, this Loud music is too harsh for ladies' heads;
 Since they love men in arms, as well as beds.

[The Knights dance.]

So, this was well ask'd; 't was so well perform'd.
 Come, sir; here is a lady that wants breathing too:
 And I have often heard, you knights of Tyre
 Are excellent in making ladies trip;
 And that their measures are as excellent.

Per. In those that practise them, they are, my lord.

Sim. Oh, that 's as much as you would be denied

[The Knights and Ladies dance.]

Of your fair courtesies.—Unclasp, unclasp;
 Thanks, gentlemen, to all; all have done well,
 But you the best. [To PERICLES.] Pages and lights,
 to conduct

These knights unto their several lodgings: Yours, sir,
 We have given order to be next our own.

Per. I am at your grace's pleasure.

Sim. Princes, it is too late to talk of love,
 For that 's the mark I know you level at:
 Therefore each one betake him to his rest;
 To-morrow, all for speeding do their best. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Tyre.

Enter HELICANUS and ESCANES.

Hel. No, Escanes, know this of me, * Stiochus from incest liv'd not free;

For which, the most high gods not minded
 To withhold the vengeance that they had
 Due to this heinous capital offence;
 Even in the height and pride of all his gl
 When he was seated in a chariot of An inestimable value, and his daughter
 With him, a fire from heaven came and Those bodies, even to loathing; for they
 That all those eyes ador'd them* ere their Scorn now their hand should give them b
Esca. 'T was very strange.

Hel. And yet but just
 This king were great, his greatness was no
 To bar heav'n's shaft, but sin had his rev
Esca. 'T is very true.

Enter three Lords.

1 Lord. See, not a man in private con
 Or council, hath respect with him but he.

2 Lord. It shall no longer grieve wid
 3 Lord. And curs'd be he that will not

1 Lord. Follow me then: lord Helican
Hel. With me? and welcome: happy d

1 Lord. Know that our griefs are risen
 And now at length they overflow their bas

Hel. Your griefs, for what? wrong not you love.

1 Lord. Wrong not yourself then, noble
 But if the prince do live, let us salute him,
 Or know what ground 's made happy by hi
 If in the world he live, we 'll seek him out
 If in his grave he rest, we 'll find him then
 And be resolv'd, he lives to govern us,
 Or dead, gives cause to mourn his funeral,
 And leaves us to our free election.

2 Lord. Whose death 's, indeed, the str censure: b

And knowing this kingdom is without a he (Like goodly buildings left without a roof Soon fall to ruin,) your noble self,
 That best know'st how to rule, and how to
 We thus submit unto,—our sovereign.

Omn. Live, noble Helicane.

Hel. Try honour's cause; forbear your
 If that you love prince Pericles, forbear.
 Take I your wish, I leap into the seas,
 Where 's hourly trouble, for a minute's eas
 A twelvemonth longer, let me entreat you
 To forbear the absence of your king;
 If in which time expir'd, he not return,
 I shall with aged patience bear your yoke.
 But if I cannot win you to this love,
 Go search like nobles, like noble subjects,
 And in your search spend your adventures

Whom if you find, and win unto return,
 You shall like diamonds sit about his crown

1 Lord. To wisdom he 's a fool that will
 And since lord Helicane enjoineth us,
 We with our travels will endeavour it.

Hel. Then you love us, we you, and hands;

When peers thus knit, a kingdom ever stands

SCENE V.—Pentapolis.

Enter SIMONIDES reading a Letter; the Knights attend him.

1 Knight. Good morrow to the good Simon
Sim. Knights, from my daughter this I let That for this twelvemonth she will not undergo A married life:

* An elliptical construction—all these eyes were them.
 b Censure—opinion.

o herself is only known,
herself by no means can I get.
May we not get access to her, my lord?
th, by no means; she hath so strictly tied her ber, that it is impossible.
noons more she 'll wear Diana's livery;
eye of Cynthia hath she vow'd,
virgin honour will not break.
Loth to bid farewell, we take our leaves.

[Exeunt.]

I despatch'd; now to my daughter's letter:
here, she 'll wed the stranger knight,
re to view nor day nor light.
mistress, your choice agrees with mine;
ell:—nay, how absolute she 's in 't,
; whether I dislike or no.
commend her choice,
longer have it be delay'd:
comes;—I must dissemble it.

Enter PERICLES.

fortune to the good Simonides!
you as much! Sir, I am beholden to you, et music this last night: I do sars were never better fed elightful pleasing harmony.
your grace's pleasure to commend;
rt.

Sir, you are music's master.
worst of all her scholars, my good lord.
me ask you one thing. What do you think ter, sir?
ost virtuous princess.
she is fair too, is she not?
fair day in summer; wondrous fair.
daughter, sir, thinks very well of you;
that you must be her master,
be your scholar; therefore look to it.
unworthy for her schoolmaster.
thinks not so; peruse this writing else.
t 's here!
; she loves the knight of Tyre?
; 's subtilty to have my life. [Aside.] to entrap me, gracious lord,
ad distressed gentleman,
im'd so high to love your daughter,
offices to honour her.
; hast bewitch'd my daughter, and thou art

Per. By the gods I have not;
Never did thought of mine levy offence;
Nor never did my actions yet commence
A deed might gain her love, or your displeasure

Sim. Traitor, thou liest.

Per. Traitor!

Sim. Ay, traitor.

Per. Even in his throat (unless it be a king),
That calls me traitor, I return the lie.

Sim. Now, by the gods, I do applaud his courage.

[Aside.]

Per. My actions are as noble as my thoughts,
That never relish'd of a base descent.
I came unto your court, for honour's cause,
And not to be a rebel to her state;
And he that otherwise accounts of me,
This sword shall prove, he 's honour's enemy.

Sim. No!—
Here comes my daughter, she can witness it.

Enter THAISA.

Per. Then, as you are as virtuous as fair,
Resolve your angry father, if my tongue
Did e'er solicit, or my hand subscribe
To any syllable that made love to you?

Thai. Why, sir, say if you had, who takes offence
At that would make me glad?

Sim. Yea, mistress, are you so preemptory?

I am glad of it with all my heart.

[Aside.]

I 'll tame you; I 'll bring you in subjection.

Will you, not having my consent, bestow

Your love and your affections upon a stranger?

(Who, for aught I know,

May be, nor can I think the contrary,

As great in blood as I myself.)

[Aside.]

Therefore, hear you, mistress; either frame

Your will to mine—and you, sir, hear you,

Either be rul'd by me, or I will make you—

Man and wife;

Nay, come, your hands and lips must seal it too:

And, being join'd, I 'll thus your hopes destroy;—

And for a further grief,—God give you joy!—

What, are you both pleas'd?

Thai. Yes, if you love me, sir.

Per. Even as my life, or blood that fosters it.

Sim. What, are you both agreed?

Both. Yes, if it please your majesty.

Sim. It pleaseth me so well, that I 'll see you wed;

Then, with what haste you can, get you to bed.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Enter GOWER.

Now sleep yslaked hath the rout;
but snores, the house about,
under by the o'er-fed breast
most pompous marriage feast.
, with eyne of burning coal,
aches from * the mouse's hole;
ckets sing at the oven's mouth,
blither for their drouth.
hath brought the bride to bed,
by the loss of maidenhead,
is moulded:—Be attent,
ne that is so briefly spent,
our fine fancies quaintly eche;<sup>b</sup>
dumb in show, I 'll plain with speech.

<sup>a</sup> fore—a short distance off. <sup>b</sup> Eche—eche out.

Dumb show.

Enter PERICLES and SIMONIDES, at one door, with Attendants; a Messenger meets them, kneels, and gives PERICLES a letter. PERICLES shows it to SIMONIDES; the Lords kneel to him. Then enter THAISA with child, and LYCHORIDA, a nurse. SIMONIDES shows [his daughter] the letter; she rejoices: she and PERICLES take leave of her father, and depart.

Gow. By many a derne<sup>a</sup> and painful perch
Of Pericles the careful search
By the four opposing coignes,
Which the world together joins,
Is made, with all due diligence,
That horse and sail, and high expense.

<sup>a</sup> Derne—solitary.

Can stand the quest. At last from Tyre (Fame answering the most strange inquire)
 To the court of king Simonides
 Are letters brought; the tenor these:
 Antiochus and his daughter dead;
 The men of Tyrus on the head
 Of Helicanus would set on
 The crown of Tyre, but he will none;
 The mutiny he there hastes t' oppress;
 Says to them, if king Pericles
 Come not home in twice six moons,
 He, obedient to their dooms,
 Will take the crown. The sum of this,
 Brought hither to Pentapolis,
 Yravisied the regions round,
 And every one with claps 'gan sound,
 "Our heir apparent is a king:
 Who dream'd, who thought of such a thing?"
 Brief he must hence depart to Tyre;
 His queen with child, makes her desire
 (Which who shall cross?) along to go;
 (Omit we all their dole and woe:)
 Lychorida her nurse she takes,
 And so to sea. Their vessel shakes
 On Neptune's billow; half the flood Hath their keel cut; but fortune mov'd,
 Varies again: the grizzled north
 Disgorges such a tempest forth,
 That, as a duck for life that dives,
 So up and down the poor ship drives.
 The lady shrieks, and well-a-near Doth fall in travail with her fear:
 And what ensues in this fell storm,
 Shall for itself, itself perform;
 I will relate; action may Conveniently the rest convey:
 Which might not what by me is told.—
 In your imagination hold
 This stage, the ship, upon whose deck
 The sea-toss'd Pericles appears to speak. [Exit.

SCENE I.

Enter PERICLES on a ship at sea.

Per. Thou God of this great vast, rebuke these surges,
 Which wash both heaven and hell; and thou that hast
 Upon the winds command, bind them in brass, Having call'd them from the deep! O still Thy deaf'ning, dreadful thunders; gently quench
 Thy nimble, sulphurous flashes!—O how, Lychorida,
 How does my queen?—Thou storm, venomously,
 Wilt thou spit all thyself?—The seaman's whistle
 Is as a whisper in the ear of death,
 Unheard—Lychorida!—Lucina, O
 Divinest patroness, and midwife, gentle
 To those that cry by night, convey thy deity
 Aboard our dancing boat; make swift the pangs
 Of my queen's travails!—Now, Lychorida—

Enter LYCHORIDA.

Lyc. Here is a thing too young for such a place,
 Who, if it had conceit, would die, as I Am like to do: take in your arms this piece
 Of your dead queen.

Per. How! how, Lychorida!

Lyc. Patience, good sir, do not assist the storm.
 Here's all that is left living of your queen,
 A little daughter; for the sake of it,
 Be manly, and take comfort.

Per.

Oh ye gods!
 Why do you make us love your goodly gifts,
 And snatch them straight away? We, here below,
 Recall not what we give, and therein may Use honour with you.

Lyc.
 Even for this Per.
 For a more I Quiet and g
 For thou art
 That e'er wa
 Thou hast as
 As fire, air,
 To herald th
 Even at the Thy portage
 Now the goo

1 Sail. W
 Per. Cou
 It hath done
 Of this poor
 I would it w
 1 Sail. S
 thou? Bl
 2 Sail. B
 kiss the mo
 1 Sail. S works high, t
 ship be clear Per. That
 1 Sail. P been still of Therefore br straight.

Per. Be it
 Lyc. Here
 Per. A te
 No light, no
 Forgot thee u
 To give thee
 Must cast th
 Where, for a
 And aye-rem
 And hummir
 Lying with s
 Bid Nestor b
 My casket ar
 Bring me the
 Upon the pill
 A priestly fa
 2 Sail. S
 caulk'd and t
 Per. I tha
 2 Sail. W
 Per. Thith
 Alter thy cou
 2 Sail. B
 Per. O ma
 There will I Cannot hold c
 At careful nu
 I'll bring the

SCENE II.—

Enter CERES

Cer. Philer

<sup>a</sup> Strong is, a in easterne." W with the concise sailors wants is distely, is off th
 and the ship is the helm:—"V astern."

<sup>b</sup> Coffin, and c
<sup>c</sup> Pursue not t

Enter PHILEMON.

My lord call?
 And meat for these poor men;
 turbulent and stormy night.
 Men in many; but such a night as this,
 endur'd.
 My master will be dead ere you return;
 can be minister'd to nature,
 him. Give this to the 'pothecary, it works. [To PHILEMON.]

Enter two Gentlemen.

Tomorrow.
 Good morrow to your lordship.
 Why do you stir so early?
 For lodgings, standing bleak upon the sea,
 had did quake;
 alas! did seem to rend,
 pure surprise and fear
 e the house.
 is the cause we trouble you so early;
 and dry.

O you say well.
 much marvel that your lordship, having you, should at these early hours den slumber of repose:

so conversant with pain, t compell'd.

I held it ever,
 ing were endowments greater and riches: careless heirs
 er darken and expend;
 attends the former,
 god. 'Tis known, I ever
 ysic, through which secret art, authorities, I have ny practice) made familiar y aid, the bless'd infusions getives, in metals, stones;
 of the disturbances
 ks, and of her cures; which gives me in course of true delight
 y after tottering honour,
 re up in silken bags,
 d and death.

honour hath through Ephesus pour'd

d hundreds call themselves who by you have been restor'd:
 knowledge, your personal pain, but open, hath built lord Cerimon own as time shall never—two Servants with a Chest.

there.
 that?

the sea toss up upon our shore of some wrack.
 own, let 's look upon it.
 like a coffin, sir.

Whate'er it be,
 heavy. Wrench it open straight;
 ach be o'ercharg'd with gold,
 straint of Fortune it belches upon us.
 so, my lord.

The strongest timbers of a building, knowledge,
 are for Measure:—

"Merely thou art death's fool, thou labour'st by thy flight to shun, sun'st toward him still."

Cer. How close 't is caulk'd and bitum'd
 Did the sea cast it up?

Ser. I never saw so huge a billow, sir,
 As toss'd it upon shore.

Cer. Wrench it open;
 Soft—it smells most sweetly in my sense.

2 Gent. A delicate odour.
 Cer. As ever hit my nostril; so,—up with it.
 Oh you most potent gods! what 's here? a corse!

1 Gent. Most strange!
 Cer. Shrouded in cloth of state!
 Balm'd and entreasur'd with full bags of spices!
 A passport too! Apollo, perfect me
 In the characters! [He reads out of a scroll!]

"Here I give to understand
 (If e'er this coffin drive a-land),
 I, king Pericles, have lost
 This queen, worth all our mundane cost.
 Who finds her, give her burying,
 She was the daughter of a king:
 Besides this treasure for a fee,
 The gods requite his charity!"

If thou liv'st, Pericles, thou hast a heart
 That even cracks for woe! This chanc'd to-night.

2 Gent. Most likely, sir.
 Cer. Nay, certainly to-night;

For look how fresh she looks!—They were too rough That threw her in the sea. Make a fire within;
 Fetch hither all my boxes in my closet.
 Death may usurp on nature many hours,
 And yet the fire of life kindle again
 The o'erpress'd spirits. I have heard of an Egyptian
 That had nine hours lien dead,
 Who was by good appliance recovered.

Enter a Servant with napkins and fire.

Well said, well said; the fire and the cloths.—
 The rough and woeful music that we have,
 Cause it to sound, beseech you.
 The viol once more;—How thou stirr'st, thou block!
 The music there.—I pray you, give her air;—
 Gentlemen, this queen will live:
 Nature awakes; a warmth breathes out of her;
 She hath not been entranc'd above five hours.
 See how she 'gins to blow into life's flower again!

1 Gent. The heavens, through you, increase our wonder,

And set up your fame for ever.

Cer. She is alive; behold,
 Her eyelids, cases to those heavenly jewels
 Which Pericles hath lost,
 Begin to part their fringes of bright gold;
 The diamonds of a most praised water
 Do appear, to make the world twice rich. O live,
 And make us weep to hear your fate, fair creature,
 Rare as you seem to be! [She moves.]

Thai. O dear Diana,
 Where am I? Where 's my lord? What world is this?

2 Gent. Is not this strange?
 1 Gent. Most rare.

Cer. Hush, my gentle neighbours;
 Lend me your hands; to the next chamber bear her.
 Get linen; now this matter must be look'd to,
 For her relapse is mortal. Come, come,
 And Esculapius guide us!

[Exeunt, carrying her away]

SCENE III.—Tharsus. A Room in Cleon's House.

Enter PERICLES, CLEON, DIONYZA, LYCHORIDA, and MARINA.

Per. Most honour'd Cleon, I must needs be gone;
 My twelve months are expir'd, and Tyrus stands
 In a litigious peace. You and your lady Take from my heart all thankfulness! The gods
 Make up the rest upon you!

Cle. Your shafts of fortune, though they hurt you mortally,
Yet glance full wond'ringly on us.

Dion. O your sweet queen!
That the strict fates had pleas'd you had brought her hither,
To have bless'd mine eyes with her!

Per. We cannot but obey
The powers above us. Could I rage and roar
As doth the sea she lies in, yet the end
Must be as 't is. My gentle babe, Marina, (Whom, for she was born at sea, I have nam'd so,) Here I charge your charity withal,
Leaving her the infant of your care, beseeching you
To give her princely training, that she may be Manner'd as she is born.

Cle. Fear not, my lord; but think,
Your grace, that fed my country with your corn,
(For which the people's prayers still fall upon you,)
Must be as 't is. My gentle babe, Marina,
Should therein make me vile, the common body,
By you reliev'd, would force me to my duty:
But if to that my nature need a spur,
The gods revenge it upon me and mine,
To the end of generation!

Per. I believe you;
Your honour and your goodness teach me to it,
Without your vows. Till she be married, madam,
By bright Diana, whom we honour all,
Unscissar'd shall this hair of mine remain,
Though I show will in 't.<sup>a</sup> So I take my leave:
Good madam, make me blessed in your care
In bringing up my child.

Dion. I have one myself,

Who shall not be more dear to my respect
Than yours, my lord.

Per. Madam, my than Cle. We 'll bring your grace even to shore;

Then give you up to the mask'd Neptun
The gentlest winds of heaven.

Per. I will em
Your offer. Come, dearest madam.—(C
Lychorida, no tears:
Look to your little mistress, on whose g
You may depend hereafter.—Come, my

SCENE IV.—Ephesus. A Room in C

Enter CERIMON and THAI

Cer. Madam, this letter, and some o Lay with you in your coffer; which an
At your command. Know you the cha

Thai. It is my lord's. That I was al
I well remember, even on my yearning:
But whether there delivered or no,
By the holy gods, I cannot rightly say;
But since king Pericles, my wedded lord
I ne'er shall see again, a vestal livery
Will I take me to, and never more have

Cer. Madam, if this you purpose as y
Diana's temple is not distant far,
Where you may 'bide until your date ex
Moreover, if you please, a niece of mine
Shall there attend you.

Thai. My recompense is thanks, that 's
Yet my good will is great, though the gift

ACT IV.

Enter GOWER.

Gow. Imagine Pericles arriv'd at Tyre, Welcom'd and settled to his own desire.
His woeful queen we leave at Ephesus,
Unto Diana there a votaress.
Now to Marina bend your mind,
Whom our fast-growing scene must find
At Tharsus, and by Cleon train'd
In music, letters; who hath gain'd
Of education all the grace,
Which makes her both the heart and place
Of general wonder. But, alack!
That monster Envy, oft the wrack
Of earned praise, Marina's life
Seeks to take off by treason's knife.
And in this kind hath our Cleon
One daughter, and a wench full grown,
Even right for marriage fight; this maid
Hight Philoten: and it is said
For certain in our story, she Would ever with Marina be.
Be 't when she weav'd the sleided silk
With fingers, long, small, white as milk;
Or when she would with sharp needl wound
The cambric, which she made more sound
By hurting it; or when to the lute
She sung, and made the night-bird mute
That still records<sup>b</sup> with moan; or when She would with rich and constant pen

<sup>a</sup> The original has "unscissar'd shall this hair." He will not be shall be unscissar'd. But when Pericles in the fifth his daughter, he will "clip to form" what makes so dismal;" and beautify what for "fourteen years ach'd."

<sup>b</sup> Records—makes music—sings.

Vail to her mistress Dian; still
This Philoten contends in skill
With absolute Marina: so
The dove of Paphos might with the cr Vie feathers white. Marina gets
All praises, which are paid as debts,
And not as given. This so dark
In Philoten all graceful marks,
That Cleon's wife, with envy rare,
A present murderer does prepare
For good Marina, that her daughter Might stand peerless by this slaughter.
The sooner her vile thoughts to stead,
Lychorida, our nurse, is dead,
And curs'd Dionyza hath
The pregnant instrument of wrath
Prest<sup>b</sup> for this blow. The unborn ev
I do commend to your content:
Only I carried winged time
Post on the lame feet of my rhyme;
Which never could I so convey,
Unless your thoughts went on my wip
Dionyza doth appear,
With Leonine, a murderer.

SCENE I.—Tharsus. An open place a sea-shore.

Enter DIONYZA and LEONINE.

Dion. Thy oath remember; thou hast sw
'T is but a blow, which never shall be know
Thou canst not do a thing in the world w
To yield thee so much profit. Let not care

<sup>a</sup> Until you die.

<sup>b</sup> Press—sings

ld, inflaming love i' thy bosom, ly; nor let pity, which re cast off, melt thee, but be purpose.
't; but yet she is a goodly creature.
ter then the gods above should have her.
weeping for her only mistress' death.
!?

I am resolv'd.

MARINA, with a basket of flowers.

will rob Tellus of her weed,
en with flowers: the yellows, blues,
ts, and marigolds, * hang upon thy grave, ays do last. Ah me! poor maid,
it, when my mother died,
e is like a lasting storm,
m my friends.
ow, Marina! why do you keep alone?
daughter is not with you? Do not ood with sorrowing; you have Lord! how your favour 's chang'd itable woe!
our flowers, ere the sea mar them.
me; the air 's quick there,
id sharpens the stomach. Come,
r by the arm, walk with her.
ay you;
you of your servant.
come;
our father, and yourself,
foreign heart. We every day
: when he shall come, and find ll reports thus blasted,
e breadth of his great voyage;
lord and me, that we have ta'en est courses. Go, I pray you, eerful once again; reserve<sup>b</sup> mplexion which did steal
g and old. Care not for me;
one.

Well, I will go;
o desire to it.

come, I know 't is good for you.
ur, Leonine, at the least;
I have said.

I warrant you, madam.
ve you, my sweet lady, for a while;
, do not heat your blood:
ave a care of you.

My thanks, sweet madam.

[Exit DIONYZA.]

early that blows?

South-west.

was born the wind was north.

Was 't so?

er, as nurse said, did never fear,
d seamen," to the sailors, galling
s with hauling of the ropes;
the mast, endur'd a sea t the deck.

When was this?

was born.

nor wind more violent;

old copies. The modern reading is chaplet.
at the poet was thinking of the green mound resting-place of the humble, and not of the be adorned with wreaths. Upon the grassy hang a carpet of flowers—he will strew fore said. The carpet of Shakspeare's time stry, or embroidery, spread upon tables;
s with which Marina will cover the grave of ave been, in her imagination, so intertwined pet, usually bright with the flowers of the * Reserve—preserve.

And from the ladder-tackle washes off
A canvas-climber: "Ha!" says one, "wilt out?"
And with a dropping industry they skip From stem to stern: the boatswain whistles, and
The master calls, and trebles their confusion
Leon. Come, say your prayers.

Mar. What mean you?

Leon. If you require a little space for prayer,
I grant it: pray; but be not tedious,
For the gods are quick of ear, and I am sworn
To do my work with haste.

Mar. Why will you kill me?

Leon. To satisfy my lady.

Mar. Why would she have me kill'd?

Now, as I can remember, by my troth,
I never did her hurt in all my life;
I never spake bad word, nor did ill turn,
To any living creature: believe me, la,
I never kill'd a mouse, nor hurt a fly:
I trod upon a worm against my will,
But I wept for it. How have I offended,
Wherein my death might yield her any profit,
Or my life imply her any danger?

Leon. My commission is not to reason of the deed, but do it.

Mar. You will not do 't for all the world, I hope.
You are well-favour'd, and your looks foreshow
You have a gentle heart. I saw you lately,
When you caught hurt in parting two that fought:
Good sooth, it show'd well in you; do so now:
Your lady seeks my life;—come you between,
And save poor me, the weaker.

Leon. I am sworn,

And will despatch.

Enter Pirates whilst she is struggling.

1 Pirate. Hold, villain! [LEON. runs away]

2 Pirate. A prize! a prize!

3 Pirate. Half-part, mates, half-part. Come, let 's have her aboard suddenly. [Exeunt Pirates with MARINA.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Re-enter LEONINE.

Leon. These roguing thieves serve the great pirate Valdes;

And they have seiz'd Marina. Let her go;
There 's no hope she 'll return. I 'll swear she 's dead,
And thrown into the sea.—But I 'll see further;
Perhaps they will but please themselves upon her,
Not carry her aboard. If she remain,
Whom they have ravish'd must by me be slain. [Exit]

SCENE III.—Mitylene. A Room in a Brothel.

Enter Pander, Bawd, and BOULT.

Pand. Boul.

Boult. Sir.

Pand. Search the market narrowly; Mitylene is full of gallants. We lost too much money this mart by being too wenchless.

Bawd. We were never so much out of creatures.
We have but poor three, and they can do no more than they can do; and they with continual action are even as good as rotten.

Pand. Therefore let 's have fresh ones, whate'er we pay for them. If there be not a conscience to be used in every trade, we shall never prosper.

Bawd. Thou say'st true: 't is not our bringing up of poor bastards, as I think I have brought up some eleven—

Boult. Ay, to eleven, and brought them down again
But shall I search the market?

ask you 'll turn a child again.
 chief lord of all this spacious world,
 undo the deed. O lady, blood than virtue, yet a princess single crown o' the earth,
 f compare! O villain Leonine, st poison'd too!
 rnk to him, it had been a kindness thy face: What canst thou say ericles shall demand his child?
 she is dead. Nurses are not the fates,
 r ever to preserve.
 ht; I 'll say so. Who can cross it?
 y the impious innocent,
 est attribute, cry out,
 foul play."

O, go to. Well, well, ts beneath the heavens, the gods
 rst.

Be one of those that think ns of Tharsus will fly hence, to Pericles. I do shame at a noble strain you are,
 ward a spirit.

To such proceeding
 his approbation added,
 e pre-consent, he did not flow
 le courses.
 so then:
 know, but you, how she came dead,
 know, Leonine being gone.
 a my child, and stood between rtunes: none would look on her,
 gazes on Marina's face;
 is blurted at, and held a malkin ime of day. It pierc'd me thorough;
 u call my course unnatural,
 child well loving, yet I find,
 e an enterprise of kindness,
 our sole daughter.

Heavens forgive it!
 as for Pericles,
 e say? We wept after her hearse, ve mourn: her monument
 'd, and her epitaphs
 lden characters express se to her, and care in us
 se 't is done.

Thou art like the harpy,
 ay, dost, with thine angel's face,
 e eagle's talons.
 re like one, that superstitiously be gods, that winter kills the flies:
 you 'll do as I advise. [Exeunt.]

before the Monument of MARINA at Tharsus.

as time we waste, and longest leagues short,
 rockles, have and wish but for 't;
 take your imagination)
 to bourne, region to region.
 g pardon'd, we commit no crime
 language, in each several clime enes seem to live. I do beseech you, ne, who stand i' the gaps to teach you,
 our story. Pericles
 thwarting the wayward seas, (by many a lord and knight,
 ighter, all his life's delight, whom Helicanus late time to great and high estate,
 ern. Bear you it in mind,
 us goes along behind.

Well-sailing ships and bounteous winds have brought
 This king to Tharsus (think his pilot thought,
 So with his steerage shall your thoughts grow on),
 To fetch his daughter home, who first is gone.
 Like motes and shadows see them move a while;
 Your ears unto your eyes I 'll reconcile.

Dumb show.

Enter PERICLES at one door, with all his train;
 CLEON and DIONYZA at the other. CLEON shoots
 PERICLES the tomb [of MARINA]; whereat PERI-CLES makes lamentation, puts on sackcloth, and in a mighty passion departs.

Gow. See how belief may suffer by foul show!
 This borrow'd passion stands for true old woe;
 And Pericles, in sorrow all devour'd,
 With sighs shot through, and biggest tears o'erflow'd,
 Leaves Tharsus, and again embarks. He swears
 Never to wash his face, nor cut his hairs;
 He puts on sackcloth, and to sea. He bears
 A tempest, which his mortal vessel tears,
 And yet he rides it out. Now please you wit
 The epitaph is for Marina writ
 By wicked Dionyza.

[Reads the inscription on MARINA's monument.]

"The fairest, sweetest, best, lies here,
 Who wither'd in her spring of year.
 She was of Tyrus, the king's daughter,
 On whom foul death hath made this slaughter;
 Marina was she call'd; and at her birth,
 Thetis, being proud, swallow'd some part o' the earth:
 Therefore the earth, fearing to be o'erflow'd,
 Hath Thetis' birth-child on the heavens bestow'd:
 Wherefore she does, and swears she 'll never stint,
 Make raging battery upon shores of flint."

No vizor does become black villainy,
 So well as soft and tender flattery.
 Let Pericles believe his daughter's dead,
 And bear his courses to be ordered
 By lady Fortune; while our tears must play
 His daughter's woe and heavy well-a-day,
 In her unholy service. Patience then,
 And think you now are all in Mitylene. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Mitylene. A Street before the Brothel.

Enter, from the Brothel, two Gentlemen.

1 Gent. Did you ever hear the like?

2 Gent. No, nor never shall do in such a place as this, she being once gone.

1 Gent. But to have divinity preach'd there! did you ever dream of such a thing?

2 Gent. No, no. Come, I am for no more bawdyhouses: shall we go hear the vestals sing?

1 Gent. I 'll do anything now that is virtuous, but I am out of the road of rutting, for ever. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—The same. A Room in the Brothel.

Enter Pander, Bawd, and BOULT.

Pand. Well, I had rather than twice the worth of her, she had ne'er come here.

Bawd. Fie, fie upon her; she is able to freeze the god Priapus, and undo a whole generation. We must either get her ravish'd, or be rid of her. When she should do for clients her fitment, and do me the kindness of our profession, she has me her quirks, her reasons, her master-reasons, her prayers, her knees; that she would make a puritan of the devil, if he should cheapen a kiss of her.

Boult. Faith, I must ravish her, or she 'll disfigure us of all our cavaliers, and make all our swearers priests.

Pand. Now, the pox upon her green-sickness for me!

Bawd. Faith, there's no way to be rid o' 't, but * Please you wit—be pleased to know.

the way to the port. Here comes the lord Lysimachus, disguised.

Bowl. We should have both lord and low, if the peevish baggage would but give way to customers.

Enter LYSIMACHUS.

Lys. How now? How a dozen of virginities?

Bowl. Now, the gods to-bless your honour!

Bowl. I am glad to see your honour in good health.

Lys. You may so; 't is the better for you that your resorters stand upon sound legs. How now, wholesome iniquity? Have you that a man may deal withal and defy the surgeon?

Bowl. We have here one, sir, if she would—but there never came her like in Mitylena.

Lys. If she'd do the deed of darkness, thou wouldst say.

Bowl. Your honour knows what 't is to say, well enough.

Lys. Well; call forth, call forth.

Bowl. For flesh and blood, sir, white and red, you shall see a rose; and she were a rose indeed, if she had but—

Lys. What, prithee?

Bowl. O, sir, I can be modest.

Lys. That dignifies the renown of a bawd, no less than it gives a good report to a number to be chaste.

Enter MARINA.

Bowl. Here comes that which grows to the stalk;—never plucked yet, I can assure you. Is she not a fair creature?

Lys. 'Faith, she would serve after a long voyage at sea. Well, there 's for you;—leave us.

Bowl. I beseech your honour, give me leave: a word, and I 'll have done presently.

Lys. I beseech you, do.

Bowl. First, I would have you note, this is an honourable man. [To MARINA, whom she takes aside.]

Mar. I desire to find him so, that I may worthily note him.

Bowl. Next, he 's the governor of this country, and a man whom I am bound to.

Mar. If he govern the country, you are bound to him indeed; but how honourable he is in that, I know not.

Bowl. Pray you, without any more virginal fencing, will you use him kindly? He will line your apron with gold.

Mar. What he will do graciously I will thankfully receive.

Lys. Have you done?

Bowl. My lord, she 's not pac'd yet; you must take some pains to work her to your manage. Come, we will leave his honour and her together.

[Exeunt Bawd, Pander, and BOULT.]

Lys. Go thy ways.—Now, pretty one, how long have you been at this trade?

Mar. What trade, sir?

Lys. What I cannot name but I shall offend.

Mar. I cannot be offended with my trade. Please you to name it.

Lys. How long have you been of this profession?

Mar. Ever since I can remember.

Lys. Did you go to it so young? Were you a gamester at five, or at seven?

Mar. Earlier too, sir, if now I be one.

Lys. Why, the house you dwell in proclaims you to be a creature of sale.

Mar. Do you know this house to be a place of such resort, and will come into it? I hear say, you are of honourable parts, and are the governor of this place.

Lys. Why, hath your principal made known unto you who I am?

Mar. Who is my principal?

Lys. Why, roots of shame; thing of my peevish wooing. But I prithee shall not come, bring me

Mar. If you put upon you That thought you

Lys. How sage.

Mar. For my Fortune hath p Where since I Dearer than ph Would set me Though they di That flies i' the

Lys.

Thou couldst h could

Had I brought Thy speech has Persever in tha And the gods s

Mar. The g

Lys.

That I came w The very doors Fare thee well. And I doubt n Hold; here 's A curse upon l That robs thee It shall be for

[

Bowl. I bes Lys. Avaun Your house, bu Would sink an

Bowl. How with you. If a breakfast in shall undo a spaniel. Com

Mar. Whith

Bowl. I my the common h way. We 'll Come your wa

Bowl. How Bowl. Wor spoken holy w

Bowl. O at

Bowl. She afore the face o

Bowl. Mar

Bowl. The a nobleman, at ball; saying h

Bowl. Boul sure: crack the malleable.

Bowl. An i she is, she shal

Mar. Hark,

Bowl. She had never cox

She 's born to womenkind? rosemary and se, mistress; come your way with me.

 ther would you have me?
 take from you the jewel you hold so dear.
 ee, tell me one thing first.
 e now, your one thing?
 t canst thou wish thine enemy to be?
 y, I could wish him to be my master, or stress.
 er of these are yet so bad as thou art,
 better thee in their command.
 a place, for which the pained'st fiend
 not in reputation change:
 damn'd door-keeper to every coyst'el
 aquirng for his tib;
 e fistng of every rogue thy ear food is such
 belch'd on by infected lungs.
 at would you have me do? go to the wars, where a man may serve seven years for the
 and have not money enough in the end to eden one?
 nything but this thou doest. Empty es, or common sewers of filth;
 nature to the common hangman;

Any of these ways are better yet than this:
 For what thou professest, a baboon, could he speak,
 Would own a name too dear. That the gods would safely Deliver me from this place! Here, here 's gold for thee
 If that thy master would gain ought by me,
 Proclaim that I can sing, weave, sew, and dance,
 With other virtues, which I'll keep from boast;
 And I will undertake all these to teach.
 I doubt not but this populous city will Yield many scholars.

Boult. But can you teach all this you speak of?

Mar. Prove that I cannot, take me home again,
 And prostitute me to the basest groom
 That doth frequent your house.

Boult. Well, I will see what I can do for thee: if I can place thee, I will.

Mar. But amongst honest women?

Boult. Faith, my acquaintance lies little amongst them. But since my master and mistress have bought you, there 's no going but by their consent: therefore I will make them acquainted with your purpose, and I doubt not but I shall find them tractable enough.
 Come, I'll do for thee what I can; come your ways.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Enter GOWEN.

arina thus the brothel scapes, and chances est house, our story says.
 ke one immortal, and she dances
 -like to her admired lays:
 s she dumbs; and with her needl com-
 s vn shape, of bud, bird, branch, or berry;
 her art sisters the natural roses;
 silk, twin with the rubied cherry:
 s lacks she none of noble race,
 their bounty on her; and her gain
 he cursed bawd. Here we her place, father turn our thoughts again,
 left him on the sea. We there him
 :
 en before the winds he is arriv'd his daughter dwells; and on this coast
 n now at anchor. The city striv'd ne's annual feast to keep: from whence s our Tyrian ship spies,
 s sable, trimm'd with rich expense;
 s in his barge with fervour hies.
 s proposing once more put your sight:
 ericles think this the bark:
 at is done in action, more, if might,
 scover'd; please you sit and hark. [Exit.]

*-On board PERICLES' ship off Mitylene.
 million on deck, with a Curtain before it;
 within it, reclined on a couch. A barge
 e the Tyrian vessel.*

Sailors, one belonging to the Tyrian vessel, to the barge; to them HELICANUS.

Where is the lord Helicanus? He can [To the Sailor of Mitylene.] O, here he is.
 s barge put off from Mitylene, and in it s the governor, who craves to come aboard.
 will?
 he have his. Call up some gentlemen.
 Ho, gentlemen! my lord calls.

Enter two Gentlemen.
 th your lordship call?

Hel. Gentlemen, there is some one of worth would come aboard; I pray, greet him fairly.

[The Gentlemen and the two Sailors descend, and go on board the barge.]

Enter from thence LYSIMACHUS, attended; the Tyrian Gentlemen, and the two Sailors.

Tyr. Sail. Sir, this is the man that can, in ought you would, resolve you.

Lys. Hail, reverend sir! The gods preserve you!

Hel. And you, sir, to outlive the age I am,
 And die as I would do.

Lys. You wish me well.

Being on shore, honouring of Neptune's triumphs,
 Seeing this goodly vessel ride before us,
 I made to it, to know of whence you are.

Hel. First, what is your place?

Lys. I am the governor of this place you lie before.

Hel. Sir, our vessel is of Tyre, in it the king;
 A man, who for this three months hath not spoken
 To any one, nor taken sustenance,
 But to prorogue his grief.

Lys. Upon what ground is his distemperature?

Hel. Sir, it would be too tedious to repeat;
 But the main grief of all springs from the loss
 Of a beloved daughter and a wife.

Lys. May we not see him?

Hel. You may,

But bootless is your sight; he will not speak to any.

Lys. Yet let me obtain my wish.

Hel. Behold him, sir. [PERICLES discovered.] This was a goodly person,

Till the disaster that, one mortal night,
 Drove him to this.

Lys. Sir, king, all hail! the gods preserve you! Hail, Royal sir!

Hel. It is in vain; he will not speak to you.

Lord. Sir, we have a maid in Mitylene, I durst wager
 Would win some words of him.

Lys.

T is well bethought.

She, questionless, with her sweet harmony,
 And other chosen attractions, would allure,
 And make a battery through his deafen'd parts,
 Which now are midway stopp'd!

She is all happy as the fairest of all,
And, with her fellow-maids, is now upon
The leafy shelter that abuts against
The island's side.

[Whispers one of the attendant Lords. Exit Lord in the barge of LYSIMACHUS.]

Hel. Sure all's effectless; yet nothing we'll omit
That bears recovery's name. But since your kindness
We have stretch'd thus far, let us beseech you,
That for our gold we may provision have,
Wherein we are not destitute for want,
But weary for the staleness.

Lys. O, sir, a courtesy,
Which if we should deny, the most just God
For every graff would send a caterpillar,
And so inflict our province.—Yet once more Let me entreat to know at large the cause
Of your king's sorrow.

Hel. Sit, sir, I will recount it to you.
But see, I am prevented.

Enter, from the barge, Lord, MARINA, and a young Lady.

Lys. O here's the lady that I sent for. Welcome, fair one!

Is't not a goodly presence?

Hel. She's a gallant lady.

Lys. She's such a one, that were I well assur'd Came of a gentle kind, and noble stock,
I'd wish no better choice, and think me rarely wed.
Fair one, all goodness that consists in bounty
Expect even here, where is a kingly patient:
If that thy prosperous and artificial feat
Can draw him but to answer thee in aught,
Thy sacred physic shall receive such pay
As thy desires can wish.

Mar. Sir, I will use
My utmost skill in his recovery,
Provided none but I and my companion
Be suffer'd to come near him.

Lys. Come, let us leave her,
And the gods make her prosperous! [MARINA sings.]

Lys. Mark'd he your music?

Mar. No, nor look'd on us.

Lys. See, she will speak to him.

Mar. Hail, sir! my lord, Lend ear.

Per. Hum, ha!

Mar. I am a maid,
My lord, that ne'er before invited eyes,
But have been gaz'd on like a comet: she speaks,
My lord, that, may be, hath endur'd a grief
Might equal yours, if both were justly weigh'd.
Though wayward fortune did malign my state,
My derivation was from ancestors
Who stood equivalent with mighty kings:
But time hath rooted out my parentage,
And to the world and awkward casualties
Bound me in servitude.—I will desist:
But there is something glows upon my cheek,
And whispers in mine ear, "Go not till he speak."

[Aside.]

Per. My fortunes—parentage—good parentage—
To equal mine!—was it not thus? what say you?

Mar. I said, my lord, if you did know my parentage,
You would not do me violence.

Per. I do think so. Pray you, turn your eyes upon me.

You are like something, that—What country-woman?
Here of these shores?

Mar. No, nor of any shores:
Yet I was mortally brought forth, and am
No other than I appear.

Per. I am great with woe, and shall deliver weeping.

My dearest w
My daughter brows

Her stature to
As silver-voic
And cas'd as

Who starves!
The more she

Mar. Whe
You may dis

Per.
And how ach

You make m
Mar. If I Like lies disd

Per.
Falseness can

Modest as Ju
For the crow

And make m
To points tha

Like one I lo
Didst thou no

(Which was
From good de

Mar.
Per. Repo

Thou hadst b
And that thou

If both were c
Mar. Some

But what my
Per. Tell

If thine, consi
Of my endur:

Have suffer'd
Like Patience

Extremity ou
How lost th

virg
Recount, I de

Mar. My
Per.

And thou: by
To make me

Mar. Patie
Per. Nay,

Thou little kr
To call thyse

Mar.
By one that h

Per. How
Mar. You

But, not to be
I will end her

Per.
Have you a w

Well; speak
And wherefore

Mar.
For I was born

Per.
Mar. My n

Who died the
As my good n

Deliver'd weep
Per. O, sto

This is the rar
Did mock sad

My daughter
you

I'll hear you
And never int

carce believe me; 't were best I did ive you by the syllable deliver. Yet give me leave—these parts? where were you bred?
 my father, did in Tharsus leave me;
 with his wicked wife,
 er me: and having woo'd
 pt it, who having drawn to do 't,
 came and rescued me;
 tylene. But, good sir, whither
 ? Why do you weep? It may be impostor; no, good faith;
 to king Pericles,
 cles be.
 anus!
 lord?
 a grave and noble counsellor,
 ral; tell me, if thou canst,
 , or what is like to be,
 ide me weep?
 I know not; but
 , sir, of Mitylene
 r.
 would tell her parentage;
 hat, she would sit still and weep.
 nus, strike me, honour'd sir;
 ut me to present pain;
 of joys rushing upon me, t of my mortality,
 th their sweetness. O come hither,
 t him that did thee beget;
 m at sea, buried at Tharsus,
 again!—O Helicanus,
 s, thank the holy gods as loud
 ns us: This is Marina.—
 ther's name? tell me but that,
 er be confirm'd enough,
 d ever sleep.
 I pray, what is your title?
 cles of Tyre; but tell me now
 n's name: as in the rest you said,
 d-like perfect, the heir of kingdoms,
 to Pericles thy father.
 ore to be your daughter, than r's name was Thaisa?
 other, who did end
 an.
 ssing on thee, rise; thou art my arments. Mine own, Helicanus, she us, as she should have been,
 : she shall tell thee all;
 kneel, and justify in knowledge,
 incess.—Who is this?
 e governor of Mitylene,
 our melancholy state,
 ou.
 : you.
 ; I am wild in my beholding.
 y girl! But hark, what music's this?
 y Marina, tell him
 it, for yet he seems to doubt,
 my daughter.—But what music?
 I hear none.
 pheres: list, my Marina.
 ood to cross him; give him way.
 nds do ye not hear?
 My lord, I hear—
 Most heavenly music:
 st'ning, and thick slumber
 res; let me rest. [He sleeps.

Lys. A pillow for his head.
 So leave him all. Well, my companion-friends,
 If this but answer to my just belief,
 I'll well remember you.
 [Exeunt LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, MARINA, and attendant Lady.

SCENE II.—The same.

PERICLES on deck asleep; DIANA appearing to him
 as in a vision.

Dia. My temple stands in Ephesus; hie thee thither,
 And do upon mine altar sacrifice.
 There, when my maiden priests are met together,
 Before the people all
 Reveal how thou at sea didst lose thy wife:
 To mourn thy crosses, with thy daughter's, call,
 And give them repetition to the like.
 Perform my bidding, or thou liv'st in woe:
 Do 't, and be happy: by my silver bow
 Awake, and tell thy dream. [DIANA disappears.
Per. Celestial Dian, goddess argentine,
 I will obey thee!—Helicanus!

Enter LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, and MARINA.

My purpose was for Tharsus, there to strike
 Th' inhospitable Cleon; but I am
 For other service first: toward Ephesus
 Turn our blown sails: eftsoons I'll tell thee why.

[To HELICANUS.

Shall we refresh us, sir, upon your shore,
 And give you gold for such provision
 As our intents will need?

Lys. Sir,

With all my heart; and when you come ashore,
 I have another suit.

Per. You shall prevail,
 Were it to woo my daughter; for it seems
 You have been noble towards her.

Lys. Sir, lend me your arm.

Per. Come, my Marina.

[Exeunt.

Enter GOWER, before the Temple of DIANA at Ephesus.

Gow. Now our sands are almost run;
 More a little, and then dumb.
 This, as my last boon, give me,
 (For such kindness must relieve me.)
 That you aptly will suppose
 What pageantry, what feats, what shows,
 What minstrelsy, what pretty din,
 The regent made in Mitylin,
 To greet the king. So he has thriv'd,
 That he is promis'd to be wiv'd
 To fair Marina; but in no wise,
 Till he had done his sacrifice,
 As Dian bade: whereto being bound,
 The interim, pray you, all confound.
 In feather'd briefness sails are fill'd,
 And wishes fall out as they're will'd.
 At Ephesus, the temple see,
 Our king, and all his company.
 That he can hither come so soon,
 Is by your fancy's thankful doom. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The Temple of DIANA at Ephesus; THAISIA standing near the altar, as high priestess;
 a number of Virgins on each side; GERIMON and other Inhabitants of Ephesus attending.

Enter PERICLES with his Train; LYSIMACHUS, HELICANUS, MARINA, and a Lady.

Per. Hail, Dian! to perform thy just command,
 I here confess myself the king of Tyre,

Whic, frighted from my country, did wed
The fair Thaisa, at Pentapolis.
At sea in childbed died she, but brought forth
A maid-child called Marina; who, O goddess, Wears yet thy silver livery. She, at Tharsus,
Was nurs'd with Cleon; whom at fourteen years
He sought to murder: but her better stars
Brought her to Mitylene; against whose shore
Riding, her fortunes brought the maid aboard us,
Where, by her own most clear remembrance, she Made known herself my daughter.

Thai. Voice and favour!—
You are, you are—O royal Pericles!— [She faints.]
Per. What means the woman? she dies! help, gentlemen!

Per. Noble sir,
If you have told Diana's altar true,
This is your wife.

Per. Reverend appearer, no;
I threw her o'erboard with these very arms.

Per. Upon this coast, I warrant you.
Per. 'T is most certain.
Per. Look to the lady:—O, she's but o'erjoy'd.
Early in blust'ring morn this lady was Thrown upon this shore. I op'd the coffin, and Found there rich jewels; recover'd her, and plac'd her Here in Diana's temple.

Per. May we see them?
Per. Great sir, they shall be brought you to my house, Whither I invite you. Look, Thaisa is Recovered.

Thai. O, let me look upon him!
If he be none of mine, my sanctity
Will to my sense bend no licentious ear,
But curb it, spite of seeing. O, my lord,
Are you not Pericles? Like him you speak,
Like him you are: Did you not name a tempest,
A birth, and death!

Per. The voice of dead Thaisa!
Thai. That Thaisa am I, supposed drown'd And dead.

Per. Immortal Dian!
Thai. Now I know you better.—
When we with tears parted Pentapolis,
The king, my father, gave you such a ring.

[Shows a ring.]
Per. This, this; no more, you gods! your present kindness
Makes my past miseries sports: You shall do well,
That on the touching of her lips I may Melt, and no more be seen. O come, be buried
A second time within these arms.

Mar. My heart
Leaps to be gone into my mother's bosom.
[Kneels to THAISIA.]
Per. Look, who kneels here! Flesh of thy flesh, Thaisa;
Thy burthen at the sea, and call'd Marina,
For she was yielded there.

Thai. Bless'd, and mine own!
Hel. Hail, madam, and my queen!
Thai. I know you not.
Per. You have heard me say, when I did fly from Tyre,

I left behind an ancient substitute.
Can you remember what I call'd the name?
I have nam'd him oft.

Thai. 'T was Helicanus then.
Per. Still confirmation:

Embrace him, dear Thaisa: this is he.
Now do I long to hear how you were found;
How possibly preserv'd; and whom to thank,
Besides the gods, for this great miracle.

Thai. Lord Cerimon, my lord; this man, to whom

The gods have shown their power; that can first
To last resolve you.

Per. Reverend sir, the gods
Can have no mortal officer more like A god than you. Will you deliver how This dead queen re-lives?

Per. I will, my lord.
Beseech you, first go with me to my house,
Where shall be shown you all was found with her
How she came plac'd here within the temple;
No needful thing omitted.

Per. Pure Diana!
I bless thee for thy vision, and will offer
Night-oblations to thee. Thaisa,
This prince, the fair-betroth'd of your daughter,
Shall marry her at Pentapolis. And now,
This ornament that makes me look so dismal,
Will I, my lov'd Marina, clip to form;
And what this fourteen years no razor touch'd,
To grace thy marriage-day, I'll beautify.

Thai. Lord Cerimon hath letters of good cheer
Sir, that my father's dead.

Per. Heavens make a star of him! Yet the queen,
We'll celebrate their nuptials, and ourselves
Will in that kingdom spend our following days.
Our son and daughter shall in Tyre reign.
Lord Cerimon, we do our longing stay,
To hear the rest untold.—Sir, lead the way.

[Exeunt.]
Enter Gowen.

Gow. In Antiochus and his daughter, you heard
Of monstrous lust the due and just reward:
In Pericles, his queen and daughter, seen (Although assail'd with fortune's surge and lee,
Virtue preserv'd from fell destruction's blast,
Led on by heaven, and crown'd with joy at last,
In Helicanus may you well descry
A figure of truth, of faith, of loyalty:
In reverend Cerimon there well appears
The worth that learned charity eye sees.
For wicked Cleon and his wife, when these Had spread their cursed deed, and honour'd
Of Pericles, to rage the city turn;
That him and his they in his palace burn.
The gods for murder seemed so content
To punish them; although not done, but meant.
So, on your patience ever more attending,
New joy wait on you! Here our play hath end.

[Exit Gowen.]

[End of Act.]

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS

---

'THE Tragedy of Coriolanus' was first printed in the folio collection of 1623. With the exception of a few obvious typographical errors, such as invariably occur even under the eye of an author when a book is printed from manuscript, the text is wonderfully accurate.

'The Lives of the Noble Grecians and Romans, compared together by Plutarch, done into English by Thomas North,' is a book on many accounts to be venerated. It is still the best translation of Plutarch we have,—full of fine robust English,—a book worthy of Shakspeare to read and sometimes to imitate. Here he found the story of Coriolanus told in the most graphic manner; and he followed it pretty literally. Nieouhr places this story amongst the fabulous legends of Rome. Plutarch, and especially Shakspeare, have made it almost impossible to believe that such Romans did not really live, and think, and talk, and act, as we see them in these wonderful pictures of humanity.

The leading idea of Shakspeare's 'Coriolanus'—the pivot upon which all the action turns—the key to the bitterness of factious hatred which runs through the whole drama—is the contest for power between the patricians and plebeians. This is a broad principle, assuming various modifications in various states of society, but very slightly varied in its foundations and its results. He that truly works out the exhibition of this principle must paint men, let the scene be the Rome of the first Tribunes, or the Venice of the last Doges. With the very slightest changes of accessaries, the principle stands and democracy, historical truth, a Shakspeare has em But suppose he had subject with what had learnt that story is to be re period; that in shades of different population of Rome much more comparative of Plutarch learning, he had plebeian and patric display of it, acco industry and accuracy subject. It is even been betrayed into necessarily have d and enduring me vividly—under such—with such univ, some persons of st to complain, acc that his plebeians haughty. The t partiality is compl

CORIOLANUS.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

CORIOLANUS, a noble Roman.

sc. 4; sc. 5; sc. 6; sc. 8; sc. 9. Act II.
Act III. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 1;
V. sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5.

AUFIDIUS, a general, against the Volces.

sc. 4; sc. 5; sc. 7; sc. 9. Act II. sc. 1.
Act III. sc. 1.

ANTONIO, a general, against the Volces.

sc. 6; sc. 9. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act III.
sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 6. Act V. sc. 1.

AGRIPPA, friend to Coriolanus.

1. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3. Act III.
Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 6. Act V. sc. 1;

VELUTUS, a tribune of the people.

1. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3. Act III.
Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 6. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 4.

RUTUS, a tribune of the people.

1. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3. Act III.
Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 6. Act V. sc. 1.

MARCUS, son to Coriolanus.

Appears, Act V. sc. 3.

A Roman Herald.

Appears, Act II. sc. 1.

TULLUS AUFIDIUS, general of the Volces.

Appears, Act I. sc. 2; sc. 8; sc. 10. Act IV. sc. 5; sc. 7
Act V. sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5.

Lieutenant to Aufidius.

Appears, Act IV. sc. 7.

Conspirators with Aufidius.

Appear, Act V. sc. 5.

A Citizen of Antium.

Appears, Act IV. sc. 4.

Two Volcian Guards.

Appear, Act V. sc. 2.

VOLUMNIA, mother to Coriolanus.

Appears, Act I. sc. 3. Act II. sc. 1. Act III. sc. 2. Act IV.
sc. 1; sc. 2. Act V. sc. 3.

VIRGILIA, wife to Coriolanus.

Appears, Act I. sc. 3. Act II. sc. 1. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 2.
Act V. sc. 3.

VALERIA, friend to Virgilia.

Appears, Act I. sc. 3. Act II. sc. 1. Act V. sc. 3.

Gentlewoman attending Virgilia.

Appears, Act I. sc. 3.

Roman and Volcian Senators, Patricians, Ædiles, Lictors, Soldiers, Citizens, Messengers, Servants to Aufidius, and other Attendants.

ACT I. PARTLY IN ROME; AND PARTLY IN THE TERRITORIES OF THE VOLCIANS AND ANTIATES.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

Enter a Party of mutinous Citizens, with staves, swords, and other weapons.

1. We proceed any further, hear me speak.
2. Speak. [Several speaking at once.]

3. We are all resolved rather to die than to be so abused.

4. We are all resolved.

5. We know, Caius Marcius is chief enemy to the people.

6. We know 't.

7. We will kill him, and we'll have corn at our old price.

8. Talking on 't: let it be done: away,
away!

9. All good citizens.

10. We are accounted poor citizens; the patricians are accounted rich; we are accounted poor citizens; the patri-

11. That authority surfeits on would relieve us; but they will yield us but the superfluity, while we are in need; and we are too dear: the lean-ness, the object of our misery, is as an incubus upon us; the abundance, the object of their covetousness, is as a sickle to reap us:
let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

12. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

13. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

14. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

15. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

16. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

17. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

18. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

19. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

20. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

21. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

22. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

23. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

24. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

25. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

26. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

27. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

28. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

29. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

30. Let us have vengeance for the gods' sake, and
let us have bread, not in thirst for revenge.

2. Cit. Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius?

Cit. Against him first: he 's a very dog to the commonalty.

2. Cit. Consider you what services he has done for his country?

1. Cit. Very well; and could be content to give him good report for 't, but that he pays himself with being proud.

All. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1. Cit. I say unto you, what he hath done famously he did it to that end; though soft-conscienced men can be content to say it was for his country, he did it to please his mother, and to be partly proud; which he is,
even to the altitude of his virtue.

2. Cit. What he cannot help in his nature you account a vice in him: You must in no way say he is covetous.

1. Cit. If I must not, I need not be barren of accusations; he hath faults, with surplus, to tire in repetition. [Shouts within.] What shouts are these? The other side o' the city is risen: Why stay we prating here? to the Capitol!

All. Come, come.

1. Cit. Soft! who comes here?

Enter MENENIUS AGRIPPA

2. Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa; one that hath always loved the people.

1. Cit. He 's one honest enough: "Would all the world were so!"

Men. What work 's, my countrymen, in hand?
Where go you

With bats and clubs? The matter? Speak, I pray you.

2 Cit.<sup>a</sup> Our business is not unknown to the senate; they have had inkling, this fortnight, what we intend to do, which now we'll show 'em in deeds. They say poor suitors have strong breaths; they shall know we have strong arms too.

Men. Why, masters, my good friends, mine honest neighbours,

Will you undo yourselves?

2 Cit. We cannot, sir, we are undone already.

Men. I tell you, friends, most charitable care

Have the patricians of you. For your wants,

Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well

Strike at the heaven with your staves, as lift them

Against the Roman state; whose course will on

The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs

Of more strong link asunder than can ever

Appear in your impediment: For the dearth,

The gods, not the patricians, make it; and

Your knees to them, not arms, must help. Alack,

You are transported by calamity

Thither where more attends you; and you slander

The helms o' the state, who care for you like fathers,

When you curse them as enemies.

2 Cit. Care for us!—True, indeed!—They ne'er cared for us yet. Suffer us to famish, and their store-houses crammed with grain; make edicts for usury, to support usurers; repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich; and provide more piercing statutes daily, to chain up and restrain the poor. If the wars eat us not up, they will; and there 's all the love they bear us.

Men. Either you must Confess yourselves wondrous malicious,

Or be accus'd of folly. I shall tell you

A pretty tale; it may be you have heard it;

But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture

To scale 't<sup>b</sup> a little more.

2 Cit. Well, I'll hear it, sir: yet you must not think to sob off our disgrace with a tale: but, an 't

please you, deliver.

Men. There was a time when all the body's members

Rebell'd against the belly; thus accus'd it:—

That only like a gulf it did remain

I' the midst o' the body, idle and unactive,

Still cupboarding the viand, never bearing

Like labour with the rest; where the other instruments

Did see and hear, devise, instruct, walk, feel,

And mutually participate; did minister

Unto the appetite and affection common

Of the whole body. The belly answered,—

2 Cit. Well, sir, what answer made the belly?

Men. Sir, I shall tell you.—With a kind

Which ne'er came from the lungs, but even

(For, look you, I may make the belly smile

As well as speak,) it tauntingly replied

To the discontented members, the mutinous

That envied his receipt; even so most fitly

As you malign our senators, for that

They are not such as you.

2 Cit. Your belly's answer

The kingly-crowned head, the vigilant eye,

The counsellor heart, the arm our soldier,

Our steed the leg, the tongue our trumpet,

With other muniments and petty helps

In this our fabric, if that they—

Men. What then!

'Fore me, this fellow speaks!—what then!

2 Cit. Should by the cormorant belly be

Who is the sink o' the body,—

Men. Well, what the

2 Cit. The former agents, if they did com-

What could the belly answer?

Men. I will tell you;

If you'll bestow a small (of what you have li-

Patience a while, you'll hear the belly's answer.

2 Cit. You are long about it.

Men. Note me this, ge-

Your most grave belly was deliberate,

Not rash like his accusers, and thus answer'd:

"True is it, my incorporate friends," quoth he

"That I receive the general food at first,

Which you do live upon: and fit it is;

Because I am the storehouse, and the shop

Of the whole body: But if you do remember,

I send it through the rivers of your blood,

Even to the court, the heart, to the seat o' the

And through the cranks and offices of man:

The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,

From me receive that natural competency

Whereby they live." And though that all at

You, my good friends," (this says the belly,)—

2 Cit. Ay, sir; well, well.

Men. "Though all at on-

See what I do deliver out to each;

Yet I can make my audit up, that all

From me do back receive the flour of all,

And leave me but the bran." What say you?

2 Cit. It was an answer: How apply you it?

Men. The senators of Rome are this good belly

And you the mutinous members: For examine

Their counsels and their cares; digest things

Touching the weal o' the common; you shall

No public benefit, which you receive,

But it proceeds, or comes, from them to you:

And no way from yourselves.—What do you

You, the great toe of this assembly?—

2 Cit. I the great toe? Why the great toe!

Men. For that, being one o' the lowest, least

Of this most wise rebellion, thou go'st foremost:

Thou rascal, that art worst in blood to run,

<sup>a</sup> The usual punctuation of this passage is—

"I send it through the rivers of your blood,

Even to the court, the heart,—to the seat o' the

And, through the cranks and offices of man,

The strongest nerves," &c.

The obvious meaning of the passage without any forced punctuation (the original uses an and and the appears to us to be,—I send the general food through of your blood, to the court, the heart; I send it to the brain, and through the cranks and offices (nerves)

the whole body. By this means

"The strongest nerves, and small inferior veins,

From me receive that natural competency

Whereby they live."

<sup>a</sup> All the subsequent dialogue with Menenius is given by the modern editors to the first citizen. The first citizen is a hater of public men,—the second of public measures; the first would kill Coriolanus,—the second would repeal the laws relating to corn and usury. He says not one word against Coriolanus. We are satisfied that it was not Shakspeare's intention to make the low brawler against an individual argue so well with Menenius in the matter of the "kingly-crowned head." &c.

<sup>b</sup> To scale 't. It is necessary to see how Shakspeare has used this verb in other passages. In the second act Sicinius tells the citizens,

"You have found,
Scaling his present bearing with his past,
That he's your fixed enemy."

Dr. Johnson explains this, "Weighing his past and present behaviour." In 'Measure for Measure' when the Duke explains his project to Isabella, he says, by this is "the corrupt deputy scaled." Upon this passage Johnson says, "To scale the deputy may be to reach him, or it may be to strip him." Here he differs from his interpretation of the passage in 'Coriolanus.' But surely "the corrupt deputy" may be "scaled" in the same way that the bearing of Coriolanus is "scaled." If interpretation be good for two of the passages, why not for 'd,—that of the text before us? Menenius will venture to try the value, of the "pretty tale" a little more; h they may have heard it, he will again scale it.

to win some vantage.—
ready your stiff hats and clubs;
rats are at the point of battle,
must have bale<sup>a</sup>—Hail, noble Marcius!

Enter CAIUS MARCIUS.

ks.—What 's the matter, you dissentious
ses,
the poor itch of your opinion,
ves scabs?

We have ever your good word.
at will give good words to thee will flatter ring.—What would you have, you curs, peace, nor war? the one affrights you,
kes you proud. He that trusts to you, uld find you lions finds you hares;
geese: You are no surer, no,
oal of fire upon the ice,
n the sun. Your virtue is,
worthy whose offence subdues him,
it justice did it. Who deserves greatness hate: and your affections are appetite, who desires most that increase his evil. He that depends ours swims with fins of lead, en oaks with rushes. Hang ye! Trust ye?
dinate you do change a mind;
noble that was now your hate,
t was your garland. What 's the matter, several places of the city
st the noble senate, who,
ls, keep you in awe, which else
n one another?—What 's their seeking?
orn at their own rates; whereof, they say,
ell stor'd.

Hang 'em! They say!
y the fire, and presume to know
i' the Capitol: who 's like to rise, and who declines: side factions, and give arrriages; making parties strong,

such as stand not in their liking cobbled shoes. They say there 's grain gh!
bility lay aside their ruth,<sup>b</sup> se my sword, I 'd make a quarry ds of these quarter'd slaves, as high ck<sup>c</sup> my lance.

these are almost thoroughly persuaded;
undantly they lack discretion, assing cowardly. But, I beseech you,
e other troop?

They are dissolved: Hang 'em!
y were an-hungry; sigh'd forth proverbs,
roke stone walls, that dogs must eat,
e made for mouths, that the gods sent not ich men only:—With these shreds beir complainings; which being answer'd,
s granted them, a strange one,
heart of generosity,
hl power look pale,) they threw their caps
l hang them on the horns o' the moon, emulation.

What is granted them?
tribunes to defend their vulgar wisdoms,
choice: One 's Junius Brutus,
tus, and I know not—'Sdeath!
ould have first unroof'd the city,
'd with me; it will in time
wer, and throw forth greater themes n's arguing.

This is the only instance in which Shakspeare dive bale; though we have frequently baleful.
th—pity. <sup>a</sup> Pick—pitch.

Men. This is strange.
Mar. Go, get you home, you fragments!

Enter a Messenger, hastily.

Mess. Where 's Caius Marcius?
Mar. Here: What 's the matter?

Mess. The news is, sir, the Volces are in arms.
Mar. I am glad on 't; then we shall have means to vent

Our musty superfluity:—See, our best elders.

Enter COMINIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, and other Senators, JUNIUS BRUTUS, and SICINIUS VELUTUS.

1 Sen. Marcius, 't is true that you have lately told us;

The Volces are in arms.

Mar. They have a leader,
Tullus Aufidius, that will put you to 't.
I sin in envying his nobility:
And were I anything but what I am,
I would wish me only he.

Com. You have fought together.

Mar. Were half to half the world by the ears, and he

Upon my party, I 'd revolt, to make Only my wars with him: he is a lion
That I am proud to hunt.

1 Sen. Then, worthy Marcius, Attend upon Cominius to these wars.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir, it is;
And I am constant.—Titus Lartius, thou Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus' face:
What, art thou stiff? stand'st out?

Tit. No, Caius Marcius;
I 'll lean upon one crutch, and fight with t' other,
Ere stay behind this business.

Men. O, true bred!

1 Sen. Your company to the Capitol; where, I know,

Our greatest friends attend us.

Tit. Lead you on:

Follow, Cominius; we must follow you;

Right worthy you priority.<sup>a</sup>

Com. Noble Marcius!

1 Sen. Hence! To your homes, be gone.

[To the Citizens.

Mar. Nay, let them follow:

The Volces have much corn; take these rats thither,
To gnaw their garners:—Worshipful mutineers,
Your valour puts well forth: pray, follow.

*[Exeunt Senators, COM., MAR., TIT., and MENEN.
Citizens steal away.]*

Sic. Was ever man so proud as is this Marcius?

Bru. He has no equal.

Sic. When we were chosen tribunes for the people,—

Bru. Mark'd you his lip and eyes?

Sic. Nay, but his taunts.

Bru. Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird<sup>b</sup> the gods.

Sic. Be-mock the modest moon.

Bru. The present wars devour him: he is grown Too proud to be so valiant.<sup>c</sup>

Sic. Such a nature,

Tickled with good success, disdains the shadow

Which he treads on at noon: But I do wonder

His insolence can brook to be commanded

Under Cominius.

<sup>a</sup> We must here understand, worthy of priority.

<sup>b</sup> Gird. This is the verb of Falstaff's noun, "Every man has a gird at me."

<sup>c</sup> There is much dispute about the meaning of this sentence.

<sup>d</sup> The present wars devour him is clear enough, we think;
the wars absorb, eat up the whole man: and then comes the explanation; he is grown too proud of his valour—of being so valiant.

Bru. Fame, at the which he aims,
In whom already he is well grac'd, cannot Better be held, nor more attain'd, than by
A place below the first: for what miscarries
Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
To the utmost of a man; and giddy censure Will then cry out of Marcius, "O, if he Had borne the business!"

Sic. Besides, if things go well, Opinion, that so sticks on Marcius, shall
Of his demerits<sup>a</sup> rob Cominius.

Bru. Come:
Half all Cominius' honours are to Marcius,
Though Marcius earn'd them not; and all his faults
To Marcius shall be honours, though, indeed,
In aught be merit not.

Sic. Let 's hence, and hear
How the despatch is made: and in what fashion,
More than in singularity, he goes
Upon this present action.

Bru. Let 's along. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Corioli. The Senate-House.

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, and certain Senators.

1 Sen. So, your opinion is, Aufidius,
That they of Rome are enter'd in our counsels,
And know how we proceed.

Auf. Is it not yours?
Whatever have<sup>b</sup> been thought on in this state,
That could be brought to bodily act ere Rome
Had circumvention? 'T is not four days gone
Since I heard thence; these are the words: I think I have the letter here; yes, here it is: [Reads.]

"They have press'd a power, but it is not known Whether for east or west: The dearth is great;
The people mutinous: and it is rumour'd,
Cominius, Marcius your old enemy,
(Who is of Rome worse hated than of you),
And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
These three lead on this preparation
Whither 't is bent: most likely, 't is for you:
Consider of it."

1 Sen. Our army 's in the field:
We never yet made doubt but Rome was ready To answer us.

Auf. Nor did you think it folly
To keep your great pretences veil'd till when They needs must show themselves; which in the hatching,

It seem'd, appear'd to Rome. By the discovery,
We shall be shorten'd in our aim; which was,
To take in<sup>c</sup> many towns, ere, almost, Rome
Should know we were afoot.

2 Sen. Noble Aufidius,
Take your commission; hie you to your bands:
Let us alone to guard Corioli:
If they set down before us, for the remove Bring up your army; but, I think, you 'll find
They 've not prepar'd for us.

Auf. O, doubt not that;
I speak from certainties. Nay, more;
Some parcels of their powers are forth already,
And only hitherward. I leave your honours.
If we and Caius Marcius chance to meet,
'T is sworn between us we shall ever<sup>d</sup> strike
Till one can do no more.

<sup>a</sup> Demerits. The word is used in a similar sense in 'Othello,' that of merits. The meaning of ill-deserving was acquired later; for demerit is constantly used for desert by the old writers.

<sup>b</sup> Whatever have—elliptically, whatever things have.

<sup>c</sup> in—subdus.
<sup>d</sup> ever strike we understand, we shall continue to we adopt the modern reading of never, we must be in the sense of striking a colour—yielding.

All. The gods assist you
Auf. And keep your honours safe!

1 Sen. Farewell.

2 Sen.

All. Farewell.

SCENE III.—Rome. An Apartment in House.

Enter VOLUMNIA and VIRGILIA: They sit two low stools, and sew.

Vol. I pray you, daughter, sing; or express in a more comfortable sort: If my son were hand, I should freelier rejoice in that absence he won honour, than in the embracements of where he would show most love. When yet he tender-bodied, and the only son of my womb youth with comeliness plucked all gaze his way for a day of king's entreaties, a mother should him an hour from her beholding; I,—consider honour would become such a person; that 't better than picture-like to hang by the wall, 't made it not stir,—was pleased to let him seek where he was like to find fame. To a crook was him; from whence he returned, his brows bent oak. I tell thee, daughter,—I sprang not new at first hearing he was a man-child, than not seeing he had proved himself a man.

Vir. But had he died in the business, madam,
then?

Vol. Then his good report should have been I therein would have found issue. Hear me sincerely:—Had I a dozen sons, each in my love and none less dear than thine and my good life had rather had eleven die nobly for their country one voluptuously surfeit out of action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the lady Valeria is come
to you.

Vir. Beseech you, give me leave to retire to my chamber.
Vol. Indeed, you shall not.

Vir. Methinks, I hear hither your husband's drum;
See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair;
As children from a bear, the Volces shunning Methinks, I see him stamp thus, and call thus:
"Come on, you cowards! you were got in fear, Though you were born in Rome!" His bloody
With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he goes Like to a harvest-man, that 's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire.

Vir. His bloody brow! O, Jupiter, no blood!

Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man Than gilt his trophy: The breasts of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords' contending.—Tell Valeria
We are fit to bid her welcome. [Exit.]

Vir. Heavens bless my lord from fell Aufidius!
Vol. He 'll beat Aufidius' head below his heels
And tread upon his neck.

Re-enter Gentlewoman, with VALERIA and her

Val. My ladies both, good day to you.

Vol. Sweet madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your ladyship.

Val. How do you both? you are manifold keepers. What are you sewing here? A fine good faith.—How does your little son?

Vir. I thank your ladyship; well, good madam.

Vol. He had rather see the sword, and hear than look upon his schoolmaster.

Val. O' my word, the father's son—I'll see boy. O' my troth, I looked upon him y half an hour together: he has such a sentenance. I saw him run after a gilded d when he caught it, he let it go again; gain; and over and over he comes, and atched it again: or whether his fall ent how 't was, he did so set his teeth, and warrant, how he mammocked it!

of his father's moods.

sd, la, 't is a noble child.

ack, madam.

s, lay aside your stitchery; I must have idle huswife with me this afternoon.

good madam; I will not out of doors.

out of doors?

hall, she shall.

sd, no, by your patience: I will not over till my lord return from the wars.

you confine yourself most unreasonably.

ust go visit the good lady that lies in.

I wish her speedy strength, and visit her ers; but I cannot go thither.

, I pray you?

not to save labour, nor that I want love.

would be another Penelope: yet, they say,
he spun in Ulysses' absence did but fill

' moths. Come; I would your cambric

as your finger, that you might leave

r pity. Come, you shall go with us.

good madam, pardon me; indeed I will uth, la, go with me; and I'll tell you

s of your husband.

od madam, there can be none yet.

y, I do not jest with you; there came n last night.

sd, madam?

riest, it's true; I heard a senator speak it.

The Volces have an army forth, against us the general is gone, with one part of ower: your lord and Titus Lartius are ee their city Corioli; they nothing doubt al to make it brief wars. This is true, on and so, I pray, go with us.

me excuse, good madam; I will ob-ey

hing hereafter.

er alone, lady; as she is now, she will ir better mirth.

oth, I think she would:—Fare you well,

good sweet lady.—Prithee, Virgilia, turn s out o' door, and go along with us.

at a word, madam, indeed I must not.

uch mirth.

, then farewell.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Before Corioli.

Alarums and colours, MARCIUS, TITUS
Officers, and Soldiers. To them a Mes-

enger comes news:—A wager, they have horse to yours, no.

T is done.

Agreed.

has our general met the enemy?

y lie in view; but have not spoke as yet.

he good horse is mine.

I'll buy him of you.

I'll nor sell nor give him: lend you him ill.

undred years.—Summon the town.

far off lie these armies?

Within this mile and half.

Mar. Then shall we hear their 'latum, and they ours.
Now, Mars, I prithee, make us quick in work;

That we with smoking swords may march from hence,

To help our fielded friends!—Come, blow thy blast.

They sound a parley. Enter, on the walls, some

Senators, and others.

Tullus Aufidius, is he within your walls?

1 Sen. No, nor a man that fears you less than he:

That 's lesser than a little. Hark, our drums

Are bringing forth our youth: We'll break our walls,

Rather than they shall pound us up: Our gates,

Which yet seem shut, we have but pinn'd with rushes;

They'll open of themselves. Hark you, afar off;

[Other alarums.]

There is Aufidius: list, what work he makes

Amongst your cloven army.

Mar. O, they are at it!

Lart. Their noise be our instruction.—Ladders, ho!

The Volces enter, and pass over the stage.

Mar. They fear us not, but issue forth their city.

Now put your shields before your hearts, and fight

With hearts more proof than shields.—Advance, brave

Titus:

They do disdain us much beyond our thoughts,

Which makes me sweat with wrath.—Come on, my fellows;

He that retires I'll take him for a Volce,

And he shall feel mine edge.

Alarums, and exeunt Romans and Volces, fighting.

The Romans are beaten back to their trenches. Re-

enter MARCIUS.

Mar. All the contagion of the south light on you,

You shames of Rome!—you herd of—Boils and plagues

Plaster you o'er; that you may be abhorr'd

Further than seen, and one infect another

Against the wind a mile! You souls of geese

That bear the shapes of men, how have you run

From slaves that apes would beat! Pluto and hell!

All hurt behind; backs red, and faces pale

With flight and agued fear! Mend, and charge home,

Or, by the fires of heaven, I'll leave the foe,

And make my wars on you! look to 't: Come on;

If you'll stand fast, we'll beat them to their wives,

As they us to our trenches followed.

Another alarum. The Volces and Romans re-entes, and the fight is renewed. The Volces retire into

Corioli, and MARCIUS follows them to the gates.

So, now the gates are ope:—Now prove good seconds:

'T is for the followers fortune widens them,

Not for the fliers: mark me, and do the like.

[He enters the gates, and is shut in.]

1 Sol. Fool-hardiness; not I.

2 Sol. Nor I.

3 Sol. See, they have shut him in.

[Alarum continues.]

All. To the pot, I warrant him.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS.

Lart. What is become of Marc'us?

All. Slain, sir, doubtless.

1 Sol. Following the fliers at the very heels,

With them he enters: who, upon the sudden,

Clapp'd to their gates; he is himself alone,

To answer all the city.

Lart. O noble fellow!

Who sensibly outdares his senseless sword,

And when it bows stands up! Thou art left, Marc'us

A carbuncle entire, as big as thou art,

Were not so rich a jewel. Thou wast a soldier

3 F 2

Even to Cato's wish, not fierce and terrible
Only in strokes; but with thy grim looks and
The thunder-like percussion of thy sounds,
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
Were feverous, and did tremble.

Re-enter MARCIUS, bleeding, assaulted by the enemy.

1 Sol. Look, sir.
Lart. O! 't is Marcus:
Let's fetch him off, or make remain alike.
[They fight, and all enter the city.]

SCENE V.—Within the Town. A Street.

Enter certain Romans, with spoils.

1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome.
2 Rom. And I this.
3 Rom. A murrain on 't! I took this for silver.
[Alarum continues still afar off.]

Enter MARCIUS and TITUS LARTIUS, with a trumpet.

Mar. See here these movers, that do prize their hours
At a crack'd drachm! Cushions, leaden spoons, Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up:—Down with them!—
And hark, what noise the general makes!—To him!—
There is the man of my soul's hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romans: Then, valiant Titus, take Convenient numbers to make good the city;
Whilst I, with those that have the spirit, will haste
To help Cominius.

Lart. Worthy sir, thou bleed'st;
Thy exercise hath been too violent
For a second course of fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not;
My work hath yet not warm'd me: Fare you well.
The blood I drop is rather physical Than dangerous to me: To Aufidius thus
I will appear, and fight.

Lart. Now the fair goddess, Fortune,
Fall deep in love with thee; and her great charms
Misguide thy opposers' swords! Bold gentleman, Prosperity be thy page!

Mar. Thy friend no less Than those she placeth highest!—So, farewell.

Lart. Thou worthiest Marcus!— [Exit MAR.]
Go, sound thy trumpet in the market-place;
Call thither all the officers of the town,
Where they shall know our mind: Away! [Exit.

SCENE VI.—Near the Camp of Cominius.

Enter COMINIUS and Forces, retreating.

Com. Breathe you, my friends; well fought: we are come off

Like Romans, neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire: believe me, sirs,
We shall be charg'd again. Whiles we have struck,
By interims and conveying gusts we have heard
The charges of our friends:—The Roman gods
Lead their successes as we wish our own:
That both our powers, with smiling fronts encountering,

Enter a Messenger.

May give you thankful sacrifice!—Thy news?

Mess. The citizens of Corioli have issued,
And given to Lartius and to Marcus battle:
I saw our party to their trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speak'st truth,
Thinks thou speak'st not well. How long is 't since?
Mess. Above an hour, my lord.

Com. 'T is not a mile; briefly we heard their drums:

How couldst thou in a mile confound an hour,
And bring thy news so late?

Mess. Spies of the Volturnus
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, sir,
Half an hour since brought my report.

Enter MARCIUS.

Com. What
That does appear as he were flay'd? O gods!
He has the stamp of Marcus; and I have Before-time seen him thus.

Mar. Come I too late
Com. The shepherd knows not thunder
More than I know the sound of Marcus' trumpet
From every meaner man.

Mar. Come I too late
Com. Ay, if you come not in the blood
But mantled in your own.

Mar. O! let me clip
In arms as sound as when I woo'd; in heat
As merry as when our nuptial day was done
And tapers burn'd to bedward.

Com. Flower of war
How is 't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about decrees Condemning some to death, and some to exile,
Ransoming him, or pitying, threat'ning the other,
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that slave
Which told me they had beat you to your tents?
Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone
He did inform the truth: But for our gentle
The common file, (A plague!—Tribunes for
The mouse ne'er shunn'd the cat as they did
From rascals worse than they.

Com. But how prevail
Mar. Will the time serve to tell? I do not Where is the enemy? Are you lords o' the field?
If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Marcus, we have at disadvantage fought
And did retire, to win our purpose.

Mar. How lies their battle? Know you side
They have plac'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guess
Their hands in the vaward are the Antiatles,
Of their best trust; o'er them Aufidius,
Their very heart of hope.

Mar. I do beseech you,
By all the battles wherein we have fought,
By the blood we have shed together, by the vows
We have made to endure friends, that you do
Set me against Aufidius, and his Antiatles:
And that you not delay the present; but,
Filling the air with swords advanc'd, and darts
We prove this very hour.

Com. Though I could wish
You were conducted to a gentle bath,
And balms applied to you, yet dare I never Deny your asking; take your choice of those
That best can aid your action.

Mar. Those are they
That most are willing:—If any such be (As it were sin to doubt,) that love this point
Wherein you see me smear'd; if any fear
Lesser his person than an ill report;
If any think brave death outweighs bad life,
And that his country's dearer than himself;
Let him alone, or so many so minded,
Wave thus, [waving his hand] to express his mind.

with Marc'us.

They all shout, and wave their swords; take him up in their arms, and cast up their caps.

ne! Make you a sword of me?
ows be not outward, which of you r Volces? None of you but is ar against the great Aufidius is hard as his. A certain number, anks to all, must I select from all: the rest
the business in some other fight, will be obey'd. Please you to march;
shall quickly draw out my command,
so are best inclin'd.

March on, my fellows:
I this ostentation, and you shall all with us. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—The Gates of Corioli.

LARTIUS, having set a guard upon Corioli, going drum and trumpet toward COMINIUS and MARCIUS, enters with a Lieutenant, a party of soldiers, and a Scout.

o, let the ports be guarded; keep your duties, set them down. If I do send, despatch turies to our aid; the rest will serve t holding: If we lose the field,
I keep the town.

Fear not our care, sir.
I hence, and shut your gates upon us.—
r, come; to the Roman camp conduct us.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—A Field of Battle between the Roman and the Volcian Camps.

Enter MARCIUS and AUFIDIUS.

I'll fight with none but thee; for I do hate thee
as a promise-breaker.

We hate alike;
owns a serpent I abhor
thy fame, and envy: Fix thy foot at the first budger die the other's slave, his doom him after!

If I fly, Marc'us,
I like a hare.

Within these three hours, Tullus, ought in your Corioli walls,
what work I pleas'd; 'T is not my blood you seat me mask'd: for thy revenge thy power to the highest.

Wert thou the Hector
he whip of your bragg'd progeny,
I list not scape me here.—

[They fight, and certain Voices come to the aid of AUFIDIUS.
and not valiant—you have sham'd me condemned seconds.

[Exeunt fighting, driven in by MARCIUS.]

SCENE IX.—The Roman Camp.

A retreat is sounded. Flourish. Enter at COMINIUS, and Romans; at the other side, MARCIUS, with his arm in a scarf, and other soldiers.

I should tell thee o'er this thy day's work,
I believe thy deeds: but I'll report it others shall mingle tears with smiles;
at patricians shall attend, and shrug,
admire; where ladies shall be frighted,
they quak'd, hear more; where the dull tribunes,
the fusty plebeians, hate thine honours.

Shall say, against their hearts,—“We thank the gods,
Our Rome hath such a soldier!”—
Yet cam'st thou to a morsel of this feast,
Having fully din'd before.

Enter TITUS LARTIUS, with his power, from the pursuit.

Lart. O general,
Here is the steed, we the caparison:
Hadst thou beheld—

Mar. Pray now, no more: my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me grieves me. I have done,
As you have done: that's what I can; induc'd
As you have been; that's for my country:
He that has but effected his good will Hath overta'en mine act.

Com. You shall not be
The grave of your deserving: Rome must know
The value of her own: 't were a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings; and to silence that,
Which, to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest: Therefore, I beseech you,
(In sign of what you are, not to reward
What you have done,) before our army hear me.

Mar. I have some wounds upon me, and they smart
To hear themselves remember'd.

Com. Should they not,
Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
And tent themselves with death. Of all the horses, (Whereof we have ta'en good, and good store,) of all
The treasure, in this field achiev'd, and city,
We render you the tenth; to be ta'en forth,
Before the common distribution,
At your only choice.

Mar. I thank you, general;
But cannot make my heart consent to take
A bribe to pay my sword: I do refuse it;
And stand upon my common part with those
That have beheld the doing.

[A long flourish. They all cry, Marc'us! Marc'us! cast up their caps and lances; COMINIUS and LARTIUS stand bare.]

Mar. May these same instruments, which you profane, Never sound more, when drums and trumpets shall
I' the field prove flatterers! Let courts and cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing, where steel grows soft
As the parasite's silk!

Let them be made an overture for the wars!<sup>a</sup>
No more, I say! For that I have not wash'd
My nose that bled, or foil'd some debile wretch,
Which without note here 's many else have done,
You shout me forth
In acclamations hyperbolic:
As if I lov'd my little should be dieted
In praises sauc'd with lies.

Com. Too modest are you;
More cruel to your good report than grateful

<sup>a</sup> We here venture to make an important change in the generally received reading of this passage. It is invariably printed thus:—

“May these same instruments, which you profane, Never sound more! When drums and trumpets shall
I' the field prove flatterers, let courts and cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing! When steel grows Soft as the parasite's silk, let him be made
An overture for the wars!”

The commentators have long notes of explanation; and they leave the matter more involved than they found it. The slight change we have made gives a perfectly clear meaning. Opposed as we are to editorial licence, we hold ourselves keeping within due bounds in substituting where for when, and them for him; for there are several instances of these words having been misprinted in the original copies.

Tell us that give you truly: by your patience.
 If 'twain yourself you be incens'd, we'll put you
 Like one that means his proper harm, in minutes.
 Then reason safely with you.—Therefore, be it known,
 As to us, to all the world, that Caius Marcius
 Wears this war's zarland: in token of the action
 My noble steel, known to the camp, I give him.
 With all his trim belonging: and, from this time,
 For what he do before Corioli, call him,
 With all the applause and clamour of the host,
CAIUS MARCIUS CORIOLANUS.—
 Bear the addition nobly ever!

[Flourish. Trumpets sound, and drums.]

All. Caius Marcius Coriolanus!

Cor. I will go wash;

And when my face is fair, you shall perceive Whether I blush, or no: Howbeit, I thank you:—
 I mean to stride your steel; and, at all times,
 To undercrest your good addition,
 To the fairness of my power.

Com. So, to our tent:
 Where, ere we do repose us, we will write
 To Rome of our success.—You, Titus Lartius, Must to Corioli back: send us to Rome
 The best, with whom we may articulate,
 For their own good, and ours.

Lart. I shall, my lord.

Cor. The gods begin to mock me. I that now Refus'd most princely gifts, am bound to beg
 Of my lord general.

Com. Take it: 't is yours.—What is 't?

Cor. I sometime lay, here in Corioli,
 At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly:
 He cried to me; I saw him prisoner;
 But then Aufidius was within my view,
 And wrath o'erwhelm'd my pity: I request you
 To give my poor host freedom.

Com. O, well begg'd!
 Were he the butcher of my son, he should Be free as is the wind. Deliver him, Titus.

Lart. Marcius, his name!

Cor. By Jupiter, forgot!—
 I am weary; yea, my memory is tir'd.—
 Have we no wine here?

Com. Go we to our tent:

The blood of
 It should be

SCENE

A flourish.

Auf. The
1 Sol. T

Auf. Com
 I would I we

Being a Vale
 What good c

I the part th
 I have fought

And wouldst
 As often as w

If e'er again
 He is mine, c

Hath not that I thought to c

True sword Or wrath, or

1 Sol.
Auf. Bobb

pois
 With only su

Shall fly out
 Being naked,

The prayers c
 Embarqueme

Their rotten
 My hate to

At home, upo
 Against the h

Wash my the Learn how 't

Be hostages f
1 Sol.

Auf. I am
 I pray you, c

thit
 How the world

I may spur o
1 Sol.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS, SICINIUS, and BRUTUS.

Men. The augurer tells me we shall have news tonight.

Bru. Good, or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they love not Marcius.

Sic. Nature teaches beasts to know their friends.

Men. Pray you, who does the wolf love?

Sic. The lamb.

Men. Ay, to devour him; as the hungry plebeians would the noble Marcius.

Bru. He 's a lamb indeed, that baes like a bear.

Men. He 's a bear, indeed, that lives like a lamb.
 You two are old men; tell me one thing that I shall ask you.

Both Trib. Well, sir.

Men. In what enormity is Marcius poor in, that you two have not in abundance?

Bru. He 's poor in no one fault, but stored with all.

Sic. Especially in pride.

Bru. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This
 you are cens
 right-hand fil

Both Trib.

Men. Beca

be angry?

Both Trib.

Men. Why

thief of occasi

give your dis

pleasures; at

you, in being

Bru. We c

Men. I kn

helps are man

drous single:

much alone.

turn your eye

* Embarquem

Johnson c

that every man

his neighbour's

stows his own."

interior survey of your good selves! O, and then, sir?

Then you should discover a brace of unad, violent, testy magistrates, (alias, fools,) me.

Menenius, you are known well enough too. I am known to be a humorous patrician, and to have a cup of hot wine with not a drop of water in 't; said to be something imperfect, the first complaint: hasty, and tinder-trivial motion: one that converses more of the night than with the forehead of the day.

What I think I utter; and spend my breath: Meeting two such weals-men as cannot call you Lycurguses,) if the drink touch my palate adversely, I make a matter of it. I cannot say your worships have a matter well, when I find the ass in common major part of your syllables: and though content to bear with those that say you are wise men, yet they lie dead that tell you so. If you see this in the roap of my follows it that I am known well enough to harm can your bisson<sup>a</sup> conspectivities this character, if I be known well enough to you, sir, come, we know you well enough. I know neither me, yourselves, nor anything. I am notorious for poor knaves' caps and legs; you are so wholesome forenoon in hearing a cause of an orange-wife and a fosset-seller; and then in controversy of three-pence to a second day. When you are hearing a matter between a party, if you chance to be pinched with the like faces like mummings; set up the bloody ill patience; and, in roaring for a chamber-controversy bleeding, the more entangled in the thing: all the peace you make in their cause with the parties knaves: You are a pair of knives, come, you are well understood to be a pair for the table, than a necessary bencher.

Every priest must become mockers, if they suffer such ridiculous subjects as you are. Speak best unto the purpose, it is not worth of your beards; and your beards deserve a grave as to stuff a butcher's cushion, imbed in an ass's pack-saddle. Yet you say, Marcius is proud; who, in a cheap worth all your predecessors since Deuigh, peradventure, some of the best of them are hangmen. Good e'en to your worships; for conversation would infect my brain, and of the beastly plebeians: I will be gone by leave of you.

Menenius and Sicinius retire to the back of the stage.

VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and VALERIA, &c.

As fair as noble ladies, (and the moon, only, no nobler,) whither do you follow your honourable Menenius, my boy Marcius after the love of Juno, let 's go.

Menenius coming home? Marcius worthy Meuenius; and with most production.

Menenius my cap, Jupiter, and I thank thee!—as coming home!

Menenius. Nay, 't is true. Here 's a letter from him; the state hath another, his wife another; and I think there 's one at home for you.

<sup>a</sup> Bisson—blind.

Men. I will make my very house reel to-night:—A letter for me?

Vir. Yes, certain, there 's a letter for you; I saw 't.

Men. A letter for me? It gives me an estate of seven years' health; in which time I will make a lip at the physician: the most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empiric<sup>a</sup> tick, and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse-drench. Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded.

Vir. O, no, no, no.

Vol. O, he is wounded, I thank the gods for 't.

Men. So do I too, if it be not too much:—Brings a victory in his pocket?—The wounds become him.

Vol. On 's brows: <sup>b</sup> Menenius, he comes the third time home with the oaken garland.

Men. Has he disciplined Aufidius soundly?

Vol. Titus Lartius writes,—they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Men. And 't was time for him too, I 'll warrant him that: an he had staid by him, I would not have been so fidiused for all the chests in Corioli, and the gold that 's in them. Is the senate possessed of this?

Vol. Good ladies, let 's go:—Yes, yes, yes: the senate has letters from the general, wherein he gives my son the whole name of the war: he bath in this action outdone his former deeds doubly.

Vol. In troth, there 's wondrous things spoke of him.

Men. Wondrous! ay, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Vir. The gods grant them true!

Vol. True? pow, wow!

Men. True? I 'll be sworn they are true:—Where is he wounded?—God save your good worships! [To the Tribunes, who come forward.] Marcius is coming home: he has more cause to be proud.—Where is he wounded?

Vol. I 't the shoulder, and i' the left arm: There will be large cicatrices to show the people when he shall stand for his place. He received in the repulse of Tarquin seven hurts i' the body.

Men. One in the neck, and two in the thigh,—there 's nine that I know.

Vol. He had, before this last expedition, twenty-five wounds upon him.

Men. Now it 's twenty-seven: every gash was an enemy's grave: [a shout and flourish.] Hark! the trumpets.

Vol. These are the ushers of Marcius: before him he carries noise, and behind him he leaves tears:

Death, that dark spirit, in 's nery arm doth lie;

Which, being advanc'd, declines; and then men die.

A Sennet. Trumpets sound. Enter COMINIUS and TITUS LARTIUS; between them, CORIOLANUS, crowned with an oaken garland; with Captains, Soldiers, and a Herald.

Her. Know, Rome, that all alone Marcius did fight Within Corioli' gates: where he hath won,

With fame, a name to Caius Marcius;

These in honour follows, Coriolanus:—

Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus! [Flourish.]

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus!

Cor. No more of this, it does offend my heart;

Pray now, no more.

Com. Look, sir, your mother!

Cor. O! you have, I know, petition'd all the gods For my prosperity. [Kneels.]

<sup>a</sup> Empiric<sup>a</sup> tick. This is a word coined from empiric, and is spelt in the original "empiric<sup>a</sup> ticks."

<sup>b</sup> Volumnia here answers the question of Menenius, "brings a (he) victory in his pocket?" without noticing the old man's observation about the "wounds."

Vol. Nay, my good soldier, up!
My gentle Marcius, worthy Caius,
And by deed-achieving honour newly nam'd,
What is it? Coriolanus must I call thee?
But, O thy wife!

Cor. My gracious silence, hail!
Wouldst thou have laugh'd had I come coffin'd home,
That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah, my dear,
Such eyes the widows in Corioli wear,
And mothers that lack sons.

Men. Now the gods crown thee!
Cor. And live you yet?—O my sweet lady, pardon.

[To VALERIA.
Vol. I know not where to turn;—O welcome home;
And welcome, general:—And you are welcome all.

Men. A hundred thousand welcomes: I could weep,
And I could laugh; I am light and heavy: Welcome:
A curse begin at very root of his heart
That is not glad to see thee!—You are three
That Rome should dote on: yet, by the faith of men,
We have some old crab-trees here at home that will not Be grafted to your relish. Yet welcome, warriors:
We call a nettle but a nettle;
And the faults of fools but folly.

Com. Ever right.
Cor. Menenius, ever, ever.

Her. Give way there, and go on.

Cor. Your hand, and yours:
[To his wife and mother.

Ere in our own house I do shade my head,
The good patricians must be visited;
From whom I have receiv'd not only greetings,
But with them change of honours.

Vol. I have liv'd
To see inherited my very wishes,
And the buildings of my fancy:
Only there 's one thing wanting, which I doubt not,
But our Rome will cast upon thee.

Cor. Know, good mother,
I had rather be their servant in my way,
Than sway with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitol!
[Flourish. Cornets. Esecunt in state, as before.
The Tribunes remain.

Bru. All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacl'd to see him. Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture<sup>a</sup> lets her baby cry,
While she chats him; the kitchen malkin<sup>b</sup> pins
Her richest lockram<sup>c</sup> 'bout her reechy neck,
Clambering the walls to eye him: Stalls, bulks, windows,
Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions: all agreeing
In earnestness to see him: seld-shown flamens
Do press among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar station: our veil'd dames Commit the war of white and damask, in Their nicely-gawded cheeks, to the wanton spoil
Of Phœbus' burning kisses: such a pother,
As if that whatsoever god who leads him
Were slily crept into his human powers,
And gave him graceful posture.

Sic. On the sudden,
I warrant him consul.

Bru. Then our office may,
During his power, go sleep.

Sic. He cannot temperately transport his honours
From where he should begin, and end; but will Lose those he hath won.

Bru. In that there 's comfort.

Sic. Doubt not the commoners, for whom we stand,

<sup>a</sup>ure—fit.

<sup>b</sup>A scarecrow, a figure of rags, is called a malkin
and was no doubt a coarse linen.

But they, upon their ancient malice, will Forget, with the least cause, these his new honours Which that he 'll give them, make I as little of
As he is proud to do 't.

Bru. I heard him swear,
Were he to stand for consul, never would he Appear i' the market-place, nor on him put
The napless<sup>a</sup> vesture of humility;
Nor, showing (as the manner is) his wounds
To the people, beg their stinking breaths.

Sic. <sup>T is</sup>
Bru. It was his word: O, he would miss it,
Than carry it, but by the suit o' the gentry to him
And the desire of the nobles.

Sic. I wish no better Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it
In execution.

Bru. 'T is most like, he will.

Sic. It shall be to him then, as our good will,
A sure destruction.

Bru. So it must fall out
To him, or our authorities. For an end,
We must suggest the people in what hatred
He still hath held them; that, to his power, he
Have made them mules, silenc'd their pleasures,
And dispropertied their freedoms: holding them,
In human action and capacity,
Of no more soul, nor fitness for the world,
Than camels in their war; who have their provand
Only for bearing burdens, and sore blows
For sinking under them.

Sic. This, as you say,—suggest
At some time when his soaring insolence Shall teach the people,—(which time shall not want
If he be put upon 't, and that 's as easy
As to set dogs on sheep,) will be his fire
To kindle their dry stubble;<sup>b</sup> and their blast
Shall darken him for ever.

Enter a Messenger.

Bru. What 's the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitol.
'T is thought that Marcius shall be consul:
I have seen the dumb men throng to see him,
And the blind to hear him speak: <sup>Matrons</sup>
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs
Upon him as he pass'd: the nobles bended,
As to Jove's statue; and the common people
A shower and thunder, with their caps and staves:
I never saw the like.

Bru. Let 's to the Capitol;
And carry with us ears and eyes for the time,
But hearts for the event.

Sic. Have with you. [Exit

SCENE II.—The same. The Capitol.

Enter Two Officers, to lay cushions.

1 Off. Come, come, they are almost here: <sup>But</sup> many stand for consulships?

2 Off. Three, they say: but 't is thought of some one Coriolanus will carry it.

1 Off. That 's a brave fellow; but he 's very proud, and loves not the common people.

2 Off. 'Faith, there have been many great men have flattered the people, who ne'er loved them; and there be many that they have loved, they know not wherefore: so that if they love they know not why, and hate upon no better a ground: Therefore, for Coriolanus neither to care whether they love or hate him, neither

<sup>a</sup> Napless—threadbare.

<sup>b</sup> This—this plan—is the antecedent to "will be his fire"

dge he has in their disposition; and, carelessness, lets them plainly see 't. did not care whether he had their love indifferently 'twixt doing them neither but he seeks their hate with greater hey can render it him; and leaves not at may fully discover him their oppoem to affect the malice and displeasure as bad as that which he dislikes, to their love.

ath deserved worthily of his country: is not by such easy degrees as those who, ple and courteous to the people, bonany further deed to have them at all tion and report: but he hath so planted heir eyes, and his actions in their hearts, gues to be silent, and not confess so nd of ingrateful injury; to report otherlice, that, giving itself the lie, would ad rebuke from every ear that heard it. ore of him: he is a worthy man: Make oming.

r, with Lictors before them, COMINIUS MENENIUS, CORIOLANUS, many other INIUS and BRUTUS. The Senators aces; the Tribunes take theirs also by g determin'd of the Volces, Titus Lartius, it remains, out of this our after-meeting, ble service, that hath his country: Therefore, please you, nd grave elders, to desire sul, and last general ad successes, to report worthy work perform'd ius Coriolanus; whom both to thank, and to remember ke himself.

Speak, good Cominius: out for length, and make us think, 's defective for requital, tch it out. Masters o' the people, your kindest ears; and, after, tion toward the common body, asses here.

We are convented; treaty; and have hearts pour and advance ir assembly.

Which the rather us'd to do, if he remember of the people than priz'd them at.

That 's off, that 's off;<sup>b</sup> ther had been silent: Please you ius speak?

Most willingly: tion was more pertinent e you give it.

He loves your people; : to be their bedfellow.— us, speak.—Nay, keep your place. RIOLANUS rises, and offers to go away.

thello says—
"My demerits
May speak, unbanneted."
how the bonnet. But in the text before us we used also means without the bonnet. Malone ibly took off their bonnets without any he context appears to us to give exactly the : "His ascent is not by such easy degrees as been supple and courteous to the people," as "without any further deed." at is nothing to the matter.

I Sen. Sit, Coriolanus; never shame to hear What you have nobly done.

Cor. Your honours' pardon; I had rather have my wounds to heal again, Than hear say how I got them.

Bru. Sir, I hope My words dis-bench'd you not.

Cor. No, sir: yet oft, When blows have made me stay, I fled from words. You sooth'd not, therefore hurt not: But, your people, I love them as they weigh.

Men. Pray now, sit down.
Cor. I had rather have one scratch my head i' the sun,

When the alarum were struck, than idly sit To hear my nothings monster'd. [Exit Cor.]

Men. Masters o' the people, Your multiplying spawn how can he flatter, (That 's thousand to one good one,) when you now see He had rather venture all his limbs for honour, Than one of his ears to hear it?—Proceed, Cominius.

Com. I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus Should not be utter'd feebly.—It is held

That valour is the chiefest virtue, And most dignifies the haver: if it be, The man I speak of cannot in the world Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years, When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought Beyond the mark of others: our then dictator, Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight, When with his Amazonian chin he drove The bristled lips before him: he bestrid An o'erpress'd Roman, and i' the consul's view Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met, And struck him on his knee:<sup>a</sup> in that day's feats, When he might act the woman in the scene, He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his meed Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil age Man-enter'd thus, he waxed like a sea;

And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since, He lurch'd<sup>b</sup> all swords o' the garland. For this last, Before and in Corioli, let me say I cannot speak him home: He stopp'd the fliers; And by his rare example made the coward Turn terror into sport: as weeds before A vessel under sail, so men obey'd, And fell below his stem: his sword (death's stamp,) Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot He was a thing of blood, whose every motion Was tim'd with dying cries: alone he enter'd The mortal gate o' the city, which he painted With shunless destiny, aidless came off, And with a sudden re-enforcement struck Corioli like a planet: Now all 's his: When by and by the din of war gan pierce His ready sense, then straight his doubled spirit Re-quickened what in flesh was fatigate, And to the battle came he; where he did Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if 'T were a perpetual spoil: and, till we call'd Both field and city ours, he never stood To ease his breast with panting.

Men. Worthy man
I Sen. He cannot but with measure fit the honours Which we devise him.

Com. Our spoils he kick'd at; And look'd upon things precious as they were The common muck o' the world; he covets less Than misery itself would give; rewards His deeds with doing them; and is content To spend the time, to end it.

<sup>a</sup> On his knee—down on his knee.
<sup>b</sup> Lurch'd. The term is, or was, used in some game of cards, in which a complete and easy victory is called a lurch.

Men. He's right noble;
Let him be call'd for.

1 Sen. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appear.

Re-enter CORIOLANUS.

Men. The senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd
To make thee consul.

Cor. I do owe them still
My life and services.

Men. It then remains
That you do speak to the people.

Cor. I do beseech you,
Let me o'erleap that custom; for I cannot Put on the gown, stand naked, and entreat them,
For my wounds' sake, to give their suffrage: please you
That I may pass this doing.

Sic. Sir, the people
Must have their voices; neither will they bate
One jot of ceremony.

Men. Put them not to 't:—
Pray you, go fit you to the custom;
And take to you, as your predecessors have,
Your honour with your form.

Cor. It is a part
That I shall blush in acting, and might well
Be taken from the people.

Bru. Mark you that?
Cor. To brag unto them,—Thus I did, and thus:—
Show them the unaching scars which I should hide,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hire
Of their breath only:—

Men. Do not stand upon 't:—
We recommend to you, tribunes of the people,
Our purpose to them;—and to our noble consul
Wish we all joy and honour.

Sen. To Coriolanus come all joy and honour!

[Flourish. Then exeunt Senators.
Bru. You see how he intends to use the people.

Sic. May they perceive his intent! He will require them,

As if he did condemn what he requested
Should be in them to give.

Bru. Come, we'll inform them
Of our proceedings here; on the market-place
I know they do attend us. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—The same. The Market-place.

Enter several Citizens.

1 Cit. Once, if he do require our voices, we ought not to deny him.

2 Cit. We may, sir, if we will.

3 Cit. We have power in ourselves to do it, but it is a power that we have no power to do: for if he show us his wounds, and tell us his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speak for them; so, if he tell us his noble deeds, we must also tell him our noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous; and for the multitude to be ingrateful were to make a monster of the multitude; of the which, we being members, should bring ourselves to be monstrous members.

1 Cit. And to make us no better thought of, a little help will serve: for once, when we stood up about the corn, he himself stuck not to call us the many-headed multitude.

3 Cit. We have been called so of many; not that our heads are some brown, some black, some auburn, some bald, but that our wits are so diversely coloured:
and truly I think if all our wits were to issue out of one skull, they would fly east, west, north, south; and their consent of one direct way should be at once to all points o' the compass.

2 Cit. Think you so? Which way do you wit would fly?

3 Cit. Nay, your wit will not so soon as man's will, 't is strongly wedged up in a but if it were at liberty, 't would, sure, soar
2 Cit. Why that way?

3 Cit. To lose itself in a fog; where being melted away with rotten dews, the fourth way for conscience' sake, to help to get thee a wife.

2 Cit. You are never without your tricks:
you may.

3 Cit. Are you all resolved to give your that's no matter, the greater part carries it:
he would incline to the people, there was worthier man.

Enter CORIOLANUS and MENENIUS.

Here he comes, and in the gown of humility behaviour. We are not to stay altogether, by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, and He's to make his requests by particulars:
every one of us has a single honour, in giving own voices with our own tongues: therefore and I'll direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content.
Men. O sir, you are not right: have you not
The worthiest men have done 't?

Cor. What must I
I pray, sir,—Plague upon 't! I cannot bring
My tongue to such a pace:—Look, sir;—my wounds
I got them in my country's service, when Some certain of your brethren roar'd, and ran
From the noise of our own drums.

Men. O me, the gods!
You must not speak of that: you must desire
To think upon you.

Cor. Think upon me? Hang
I would they would forget me, like the virtues
Which our divines lose by them.

Men. You'll mar
I'll leave you: Pray you, speak to them, I pray
In wholesome manner.

Enter two Citizens.

Cor. Bid them wash their faces
And keep their teeth clean.—So, here comes a
You know the cause, sir, of my standing here.

1 Cit. We do, sir; tell us what hath brought Cor. Mine own desert.

2 Cit. Your own desert?

Cor. Ay, not mine own desire.

1 Cit. How! not your own desire?

Cor. No, sir: 'T was never my desire yet to the poor with begging.

1 Cit. You must think, if we give you anything hope to gain by you.

Cor. Well then, I pray, your price o' the corn
1 Cit. The price is, to ask it kindly.

Cor. Kindly, sir? I pray, let me have wounds to show you, which shall be yours in part.
Your good voice, sir; what say you?

2 Cit. You shall have it, worthy sir.
Cor. A match, sir:—There is in all two voices begged:—I have your alms; adieu.

1 Cit. But this is something odd.
2 Cit. An't were to give again,—But 'tis no [Exeunt two Citizens.]

Enter two other Citizens.

Cor. Pray you now, if it may stand with your voices that I may be consul, I have here a tomary gown.

3 Cit. You have deserved nobly of your country, you have not deserved nobly.

ma?
e been a scourge to her enemies, you her friends; you have not, indeed, people.

ld account me the more virtuous that I mon in my love. I will, sir, flatter the people, to earn a dearer estimation condition they account gentle: and of their choice is rather to have my
, I will practise the insinuating nod, a most counterfeitly: that is, sir, I e bewitchment of some popular man, fully to the desirers. Therefore, bebe consul.

to find you our friend: and there-voices heartily.

ve received many wounds for your seal your knowledge with showing e much of your voices, and so trouble gods give you joy, sir, heartily! [Ex. t voices!—

better to starve,

e which first we do deserve.

h gown should I stand here,

I Dick, that do appear,

ches? Custom calls me to 't:—

e, in all things should we do 't?

ne time would lie unswept,

error be too highly heap'd

er. Rather than fool it so,

and the honour go

do thus.—I am half through;

'd, the other will I do.

er thros other Citizens.

ices.—

our voices I have fought;

voices; for your voices, bear

ten odd; battles thrice six

ard of; for your voices things, some less, some more; your consul.

me nobly, and cannot go without any let him be consul: The gods give him good friend to the people!

m. God save thee, noble consul!

[Exeunt Citizens.

ices!

ius, with BRUTUS and SICINIUS.

e stood your limitation; and the e people's voice:

he official marks invested,

the senate.

Is this done?

of request you have discharg'd:

it you; and are summon'd

your approbation.

the senate-house?

There, Coriolanus.

nge these garments?

You may, sir.

straight do; and, knowing myself

e-house.

you company.—Will you along?

ere for the people.

Fare you well.

[Exeunt CORIOL. and MENEN.

He has it now; and by his looks, methinks,
'T is warm at his heart.

Bru. With a proud heart he wore
His humble weeds: Will you dismiss the people?

Re-enter Citizens.

Sic. How now, my masters? have you chose this man?

1 Cit. He has our voices, sir.

Bru. We pray the gods he may deserve your loves.

2 Cit. Amen, sir: To my poor and worthy notice,

He mock'd us when he begg'd our voices.

3 Cit. Certainly,

He flouted us downright.

1 Cit. No, 't is his kind of speech, he did not mock us.

2 Cit. Not one amongst us, save yourself, but says

He used us scornfully: he should have show'd us

His marks of merit, wounds receiv'd for his country.

Sic. Why, so he did, I am sure.

Cit. No, no; no man saw 'em. [Several speak.

3 Cit. He said he had wounds, which he could show in private;

And with his hat, thus waving it in scorn,

"I would be consul," says he: "aged custom,

But by your voices, will not so permit me;

Your voices therefore:" When we granted that,

Here was,—"I thank you for your voices,—thank

you,—

Your most sweet voices:—now you have left your voices,

I have no further with you:"—was not this mockery?

Sic. Why, either, were you ignorant to see 't?

Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness

To yield your voices?

Bru. Could you not have told him,

As you were lesson'd,—When he had no power,

But was a petty servant to the state,

He was your enemy; ever spake against

Your liberties, and the charters that you bear

I' the body of the weal: and now, arriving

A place of potency, and sway o' the state,

If he should still malignantly remain

Fast foe to the plebeii, your voices might

Be curses to yourselves? You should have said

That as his worthy deeds did claim no less

Than what he stood for, so his gracious nature

Would think upon you for your voices,

And translate his malice towards you into love,

Standing your friendly lord.

Sic. Thus to have said,

As you were fore-advis'd, had touch'd his spirit,

And tried his inclination; from him pluck'd

Either his gracious promise, which you might,

As cause had call'd you up, have held him to;

Or else it would have gall'd his sturly nature,

Which easily endures not article

Tying him to aught; so, putting him to rage,

You should have ta'en the advantage of his choler,

And pass'd him unelected.

Bru. Did you perceive

He did solicit you in free contempt,

When he did need your loves; and do you think

That his contempt shall not be bruising to you,

When he hath power to crush? Why, had your bodies

No heart among you? Or had you tongues, to cry

Against the rectorship of judgment?

Sic. Have you,

Ere now, denied the asker? and, now again,

On him that did not ask, but mock, bestow

Your sued-for tongues?

3 Cit. He's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet.

2 Cit. And will deny him:

I'll have five hundred voices of that sound.

1 Cit. I twice five hundred, and their friends to piece

'em.

Bru. Get you hence instantly; and tell those friends, They have chose a consul that will from them take Their liberties; make them of no more voice Than dogs, that are as often beat for barking As therefore kept to do so.

Sic. Let them assemble; And, on a safer judgment, all revoke Your ignorant election: Enforce his pride, And his old hate unto you: besides, forget not With what contempt he wore the humble weed: How in his suit he scorn'd you: but your loves, Thinking upon his services, took from you The apprehension of his present portance, Which most gibingly, ungravely, he did fashion After the inveterate hate he bears you.

Bru. Lay a fault on us, your tribunes, that we labour'd (No impediment between) but that you must Cast your election on him.

Sic. Say, you chose him More after our commandment, than as guided By your own true affections; and that your minds Pre-occupied with what you rather must do Than what you should, made you against the grain To voice him consul: Lay the fault on us.

Bru. Ay, spare us not. Say we read lectures to you, How youngly he began to serve his country, How long continued: and what stock he springs of, The noble house o' the Marcians; from whence came

That Ancus Marcius, Numa's daughter's son Who, after great Hostilius, here was king: Of the same house Publius and Quintus were That our best water brought by conduits hither [And Censorinus, darling of the people,] And nobly nam'd so, twice being censor, Was his great ancestor.

Sic. One thus descended That hath beside well in his person wrought To be set high in place, we did commend To your remembrances: but you have found Scaling his present bearing with his past, That he's your fixed enemy, and revoke Your sudden approbation.

Bru. Say, you ne'er had (Harp on that still,) but by our putting on; And presently, when you have drawn your swords Repair to the Capitol.

Sic. We will so: almost all repent in this [Several speak. Exeunt

Bru. Let them go on; This mutiny were better put in hazard, Than stay, past doubt, for greater: If, as his nature is, he fall in rage With their refusal, both observe and answer The vantage of his anger.

Sic. To the Capitol! Come; we'll be there before the stream o' the And this shall seem, as partly 't is, their own Which we have goaded onward.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. A Street.

Cornets. Enter CORIOLANUS, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, TITUS LARTIUS, Senators, and Patricians.

Cor. Tullus Aufidius then had made new head?
Lart. He had, my lord; and that it was which caus'd Our swifter composition.

Cor. So then the Volces stand but as at first; Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road Upon us again.

Com. They are worn, lord consul, so That we shall hardly in our ages see Their banners wave again.

Cor. Saw you Aufidius?
Lart. On safeguard he came to me; and did curse Against the Volces, for they had so vilely Yielded the town: he is retir'd to Antium.

Cor. Spoke he of me?
Lart. He did, my lord.
Cor. How? what?

Lart. How often he had met you, sword to sword: That of all things upon the earth he hated Your person most: that he would pawn his fortunes To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher.

Cor. At Antium lives he?
Lart. At Antium.

Cor. I wish I had a cause to seek him there, To oppose his hatred fully.—Welcome home.
[To LARTIUS.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Behold! these are the tribunes of the people, The tongues o' the common mouth. I do despise them; For they do prank them in authority, Against all noble sufferance.

Sic. Pass no further.

Cor. Ha! what is that?

Bru. It will be dangerous to go on: no farther.

Cor. What makes this change?

Men. The matter.

Com. Hath he not pass'd the noble and the

Bru. Cominius, no.

Cor. Have I had children's

1 Sen. Tribunes, give way; he shall to the place.

Bru. The people are incens'd against him.

Sic. Or all will fall in broil.

Cor. Are these your heads?

Must these have voices, that can yield them to And straight disclaim their tongues?—What offices?

You being their mouths, why rule you not the Have you not set them on?

Men. Be calm, be calm.

Cor. It is a purpos'd thing, and grows by

To curb the will of the nobility;

Suffer it, and live with such as cannot rule,

Nor ever will be rul'd.

Bru. Call 't not a plot:

The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late

When corn was given them gratis, you repeal'd

Scandal'd the suppliants for the people; call'd

Time-pleasers, flatterers, foes to nobleness.

Cor. Why, this was known before.

Bru. Not to the

Cor. Have you inform'd them since?

Bru. How! I inform <sup>a</sup> The line in brackets is not in the original, but by Pope. Something is clearly wanting to connect being censor; and Plutarch tells us who was "noble"

—Censorinus also came of that family, that was so because the people had chosen him censor twice.

<sup>b</sup> Silence—since.

like to do such business.<sup>a</sup>
 Not unlike,
 er yours.
 should I be consul? By yon clouds, ill as you, and make me
 ne.
 You show too much of that rile stir: If you will pass bound, you must inquire your way, it of, with a gentler spirit;
 ble as a consul,
 n for tribune.

Let 's be calm,
 e are abus'd,—set on.<sup>b</sup>—This palt'ring
 e; nor has Coriolanus
 shonour'd rub, laid falsely
 f his merit.

Tell me of corn!
 ch, and I will speak 't again;—
 not now.

Not in this heat, sir, now.
 live, I will.—My nobler friends,
 ons:
 rank-scented many,
 ne as I do not flatter,
 d themselves: I say again,
 we nourish 'gainst our senate
 bellion, insolence, sedition, es have plough'd for, sow'd and scat-with us, the honour'd number;
 ue, no, nor power, but that given to beggars.

Well, no more.
 e words, we beseech you.
 How! no more?
 y I have shed my blood,
 rd force, so shall my lungs
 air decay, against those meazels,
 i should tetter us, yet sought catch them.
 k o' the people as if you were a god man of their infirmity.
 ell we let the people know 't.
 hat? his choler?

as the midnight sleep,
 l be my mind!

It is a mind
 i a poison where it is,
 urther.

Shall remain!—
 ton of the minnows? mark you
 !!

'T was from the canon.
 Shall!
 unwise patricians, why,
 ckless senators, have you thus
 e to choose an officer, empty shall, being but se o' the monsters, wants not spirit your current in a ditch, hannel his? If he have power, ignorance: if none, awake
 enity. If you are learned, a fools: if you are not,
 ahions by you. You are plebeians,
 s: and they are no less,
 voices blended, the greatest taste
 s. They choose their magistrate;

in of Cominius is according to the old copy.
 17.
 amongst the cura.
 18.

And such a one as ne, woo puts his shall,
 His popular shall, against a graver bench
 Than ever frown'd in Greece! By Jove himself,
 It makes the consuls base! and my soul aches
 To know, when two authorities are up,
 Neither supreme, how soon confusion
 May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take
 The one by the other.

Com. Well—on to the market-place.

Cor. Whoever gave that counsel to give forth
 The corn o' the storehouse gratis, as 't was used Sometime in Greece,—

Men. Well, well, no more of that.

Cor. Though there the people had more absolute power,
 I say, they nourish'd disobedience, fed
 The ruin of the state.

Bru. Why shall the people give
 One that speaks thus, their voice?

Cor. I 'll give my reasons,
 More worthier than their voices. They know the corn
 Was not our recompense; resting well assur'd
 They ne'er did service for 't: Being press'd to the war,
 Even when the navel of the state was touch'd,
 They would not thread the gates: this kind of service
 Did not deserve corn gratis: being i' the war,
 Their mutinies and revolts, wherein they show'd
 Most valour, spoke not for them: The accusation
 Which they have often made against the senate,
 All cause unborn, could never be the native
 Of our so frank donation. Well, what then?
 How shall this bosom multiplied digest
 The senate's courtesy? Let deeds express What's like to be their words:—"We did request it;
 We are the greater poll, and in true fear
 They gave us our demands:"—Thus we debase
 The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
 Call our cares, fears: which will in time Break ope the locks o' the senate, and bring in
 The crows to peck the eagles.

Men. Come, enough.

Bru. Enough, with over-measure.

Cor. No, take more:

What may be sworn by, both divine and human,
 Seal what I end withal!—This double worship,—
 Where one part does disdain with cause, the other Insult without all reason; where gentry, title, wisdom
 Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no
 Of general ignorance,—it must omit Real necessities, and give way the while
 To unstable slightness: purpose so barr'd, it follows
 Nothing is done to purpose: Therefore, beseech you,—
 You that will be less fearful than discreet;
 That love the fundamental part of state
 More than you doubt the change on 't; that prefer
 A noble life before a long, and wish
 To jump * a body with a dangerous physic
 That's sure of death without it,—at once pluck out
 The multitudinous tongue, let them not lick
 The sweet which is their poison: your dishonour
 Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
 Of that integrity which should become it;
 Not having the power to do the good it would,
 For the ill which doth control it.

Bru. He has said enough.

Sic. He has spoken like a traitor, and shall answer
 As traitors do.

Cor. Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee!—
 What should the people do with these bald tribunes?
 On whom depending, their obedience fails
 To the greater bench: In a rebellion,
 When what 's not meet, but what must be, was law,
 Thou were they chosen; in a better hour,

* Jump—in the sense of risk.

Let what is most be said, it must be most,
And thro' their power? the dust.

Bru. Manifest treason!

Sic. This a cause? no.

Bru. The Ætles, be!—let him be apprehended.

Sic. Go, call the people; [Exit BRUTUS] in whose name, myself

Attack thee, as a traitorous innovator,

A foe to the public weal: Obey, I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.

Cor. Hence, old goat!

Bru. and Pat. We'll smother him.

Com. Aged sir, handle off.

Cor. Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments!

Sic. Help, ye citizens!

Re-enter BRUTUS, with the Ætles, and a rabble of Citizens.

Men. On both sides more respect.

Sic. Here's he that would take from you all your power.

Bru. Seize him, Ætles!

Cor. Down with him, down with him!

[Several speak.]

2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons!

[They all bustle about CORIOLANUS.]

Tribunes, patricians, citizens!—what, ho!

Sicinus, Brutus, Coriolanus, citizens!

Cor. Peace, peace, peace; stay, hold, peace!

Men. What is about to be?—I am out of breath;

Confusion's near: I cannot speak:—You, tribunes

To the people.—Coriolanus, patience:—

Speak, good Sicinius.

Sic. Hear me, people;—Peace!

Cor. Let's hear our tribunes:—Peace! Speak, speak!

Sic. You are at point to lose your liberties:

Marcus would have all from you; Marcus,

Whom late you have nam'd for consul.

Men. Fie, fie, fie!

This is the way to kindle, not to quench.

1 Sen. To unbuild the city, and to lay all flat.

Sic. What is the city but the people?

Cor. True,

The people are the city.

Bru. By the consent of all, we were establish'd

The people's magistrates.

Cor. You so remain.

Men. And so are like to do.

Com. That is the way to lay the city flat;

To bring the roof to the foundation;

And bury all which yet distinctly ranges,

In heaps and piles of ruin.*

Sic. This deserves death.

Bru. Or let us stand to our authority,

Or let us lose it:—We do here pronounce,

Upon the part o' the people, in whose power

We were elected theirs, Marcus is worthy

Of present death.

Sic. Therefore lay hold of him;

* We give this speech, as in the original, to the calm and re-verend Cominius. Coriolanus is standing apart, in proud and sullen rage; and yet the modern editors put these four lines in his mouth, as if it was any part of his character to argue with the people about the prudence of their conduct. The editors continue this change in the persons to whom the speeches are assign'd, without the slightest regard, as it appears to us, to the exquisite characterisation of the poet. Amidst all this tumult the first words which Coriolanus utters, according to the original copy, are, "No, I'll die here." He again continues silent; but the modern editors must have him talking;

so they put in his mouth the calculating sentence, "We are many friends as enemies," and the equally characteristic of Menenius—"I would they were barbarians," we left all these passages precisely as they are in the original.

Beat him to the rock Tarpeian, and from thence Down destruction cast him.

Bru. Ætles, seize him!

Cor. Yield, Marcus, yield.

Men. Hear me, we will Search you, tribunes, hear me but a word.

Æt. Peace, peace!

Men. Be that you seem, truly your country's best;

And temperately proceed to what you would Thus violently refuse.

Bru. Sic, these old ways,

That seem like gradient helps, are very poisonous

When the disease is violent:—Lay hands upon him,

And bear him to the rock.

Cor. No; I'll die here. [Drawing his sword.]

There's some among you have believ'd me fighting;

Come, try upon yourselves what you have set on.

Men. Down with that sword!—Tribunes, withdraw a while.

Bru. Lay hands upon him.

Men. Help Marcus; help

You that be noble; help him, young and old!

Cor. Down with him, down with him!

[In this scuffling, the Tribunes, &c. seize and the people are beat in.]

Men. Go, get you to your house; be gone, you!

All will be naught else.

2 Sen. Get you gone.

Com. Stand fast;

We have as many friends as enemies.

Men. Shall it be put to that?

1 Sen. The gods forbid!

I prithee, noble friend, home to thy house;

Leave us to cure this cause.

Men. For 't is a sore upon

You cannot tent yourself; Begone, beseech you.

Com. Come, sir, along with us.

Men. I would they were barbarians, (as they are,

Though in Rome litter'd,) not Romans, (as they are not,

Though call'd i' the porch o' the Capitol.)—Be gone,

Put not your worthy rage into your tongues;

One time will owe another.

Cor. On fair ground I could beat forty of them.

Men. I could myself take up a brace of the best of them; yea, the two tribunes.

Com. But now 't is odds beyond arithmetic;

And manhood is call'd foolery, when it stands

Against a falling fabric.—Will you hence

Before the tag return? whose rage doth rend

Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear

What they are used to bear.

Men. Pity you, be gone:

I'll try whether my old wit be in request

With those that have but little; this must be patch'd

With cloth of any colour.

Com. Nay, come away.

[Exit CORIOLANUS, COMINIUS, and others.]

1 Pat. This man has marr'd his fortune.

Men. His nature is too noble for the world;

He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,

Or Jove for his power to thunder. His heart is his mouth:

What his breast forges that his tongue must vent;

And, being angry, does forget that ever

He heard the name of death. [A noise within.]

Here's goodly work!

2 Pat. I would they were so bad!

Men. I would they were in Tyler!—What a vengeance,

Could he not speak them fair!

Re-enter BRUTUS and SICINIUS, with the rabble.

Sic. Where is this rascal?

depopulate the city,
man himself?

You worthy tribunes,— all be thrown down the Tarpeian rock hands; he hath resisted law, law shall scorn him further trial
erity of the public power, sets at naught.

He shall well know
tribunes are the people's mouths,
hands.

He shall, sure on 't.

[Several speak together.

Sir, sir,—

Peace!

not cry havoc, where you should but hunt
warrant.

Sir, how comes 't, that you have help rescue?

Hear me speak :—
the consul's worthiness,
his faults :—

Consul!—what consul?
consul Coriolanus.

He consul!

o, no, no, no!
by the tribunes' leave, and yours, good ple,
rd, I would crave a word or two;
all turn you to no further harm
h loss of time.

Speak briefly then;
remptory, to despatch
traitor: to eject him hence danger; and to keep him here leath; therefore it is decreed, ght.

Now the good gods forbid, owned Rome, whose gratitude deserved children is enroll'd a book, like an unnatural dam eat up her own!
a disease that must be cut away.
e 's a limb, that has but a disease;
t it off; to cure it, easy.
done to Rome that 's worthy death?
memies? The blood he hath lost, re vouch is more than that he hath,
ounce,) he dropp'd it for his country:
left, to lose it by his country,
ll, that do 't, and suffer it,
se end o' the world.

This is clean kann.*
dy awry: When he did love his country,
im.

The service of the foot,
angren'd, is not then respected
re it was—<sup>b</sup>

We 'll hear no more :—
o his house, and pluck him thence;
tion, being of catching nature,
tr.

One word more, one word.
sted rage, when it shall find uncann'd swiftness, will, too late, ounds to his heels. Proceed by process; (as he is belov'd) break out,
eat Rome with Romans.

If it were so,—
do ye talk?

is to mean, nothing to the purpose.
k of Menenius is interrupted. He would ask ve just not to respect the "service" of the ed."

Have we not had a taste of his obedience?

Our Ædiles smote! ourselves resisted!—Come :—

Men. Consider this;—he has been bred i' the wars
Since he could draw a sword, and is ill school'd
In bolted language; meal and bran together
He throws without distinction. Give me leave,
I 'll go to him, and undertake to bring him in peace,
Where he shall answer, by a lawful form,
(In peace,) to his utmost peril.

I Sen. Noble tribunes,
It is the humane way: the other course
Will prove too bloody; and the end of it
Unknown to the beginning.

Sic. Noble Menenius,
Be you then as the people's officer :—
Masters, lay down your weapons.

Bru. Go not home.

Sic. Meet on the market-place :—We 'll attend you
there :

Where, if you bring not Marcius, we 'll proceed
In our first way.

Men. I 'll bring him to you :—

Let me desire your company. He must come, [To the Senators.

Or what is worse will follow.

I Sen. Pray you, let 's to him. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in Coriolanus's House.

Enter CORIOLANUS and Patricians.

Cor. Let them pull all about mine ears; present me
Death on the wheel, or at wild horses' heels;
Or pile ten hills on the Tarpeian rock,
That the precipitation might down stretch
Below the beam of sight, yet will I still Be thus to them.

Enter VOLUMNIA.

I Pat. You do the nobler.

Cor. I muse my mother

Does not approve me further, who was wont
To call them woollen vassals, things created
To buy and sell with groats; to show bare heads
In congregations, to yawn, be still, and wonder
When one but of my ordinance stood up
To speak of peace or war. I talk of you; [To Vol.
Why did you wish me milder? Would you have me False to my nature? Rather say, I play
The man I am.

Vol. O, sir, sir, sir,
I would have had you put your power well on,
Before you had worn it out.

Cor. Let go.

Vol. You might have been enough the man you are,
With striving less to be so: Lesser had been The thwartings of your dispositions, if You had not show'd them how you were dispos'd
Ere they lack'd power to cross you.

Cor. Let them hang.

Vol. Ay, and burn too.

Enter MENENIUS and Senators.

Men. Come, come, you have been too rough, something too rough:

You must return, and mend it.

I Sen. There 's no remedy;
Unless, by not so doing, our good city
Cleave in the midst, and perish.

Vol. Pray be counsell'd:

I have a heart as little apt as yours,
But yet a brain that leads my use of anger
To better vantage.

Men. Well said, noble woman!
Before he should thus stoop to the herd, but that 'The violent fit o' the time craves it as physic

For the whole state, I would put mine armour on,
Which I can scarcely bear.

Cor. What must I do?

Men. Return to the tribunes.

Cor. Well,

What then? what then?

Men. Repent what you have spoke.

Cor. For them?—I cannot do it to the gods;

Must I then do 't to them?

Vol. You are too absolute;

Though therein you can never be too noble,
But when extremities speak. I have heard you say,
Honour and policy, like unsever'd friends,
I' the war do grow together: Grant that, and tell me,
In peace, what each of them by th' other lose,
That they combine not there.

Cor. Tush, tush!

Men. A good demand.

Vol. If it be honour, in your wars, to seem

The same you are not, (which, for your best ends,
You adopt your policy,) how is it less, or worse,
That it shall hold companionship in peace
With honour, as in war; since that to both
It stands in like request?

Cor. Why force you this?

Vol. Because that now it lies you on to speak
To the people; not by your own instruction,
Nor by the matter which your heart prompts you,
But with such words that are but rotes in Your tongue, though but bastards, and syllables
Of no allowance, to your bosom's truth.
Now, this no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune, and
The hazard of much blood.—

I would dissemble with my nature, where
My fortunes, and my friends, at stake, requir'd
I should do so in honour: I am in this,
Your wife, your son, these senators, the nobles;
And you will rather show our general lowts
How you can frown, than spend a fawn upon them,
For the inheritance of their loves, and safeguard
Of what that want might ruin.

Men. Noble lady!

Come, go with us; speak fair: you may salve so,
Not what is dangerous present, but the loss
Of what is past.

Vol. I prithee now, my son,

Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretch'd it, (here be with them,)
Thy knee bussing the stones, (for in such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears,) waving thy head,
Which often,—thus,—correcting thy stout heart,<sup>a</sup>
Now humble, as the ripest mulberry
That will not hold the handling: Or, say to them,
Thou art their soldier, and being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which, thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
In asking their good loves; but thou wilt frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power and person.

Men. This but done,

Even as she speaks, why, their hearts were yours:
For they have pardons, being ask'd, as free
As words to little purpose.

<sup>a</sup> This passage has been a stumbling-block to the commentators; and they want to know how the waving the head corrects the stout heart. They have forgotten the maxim which Volunmia has just uttered, "Action is eloquence." She is explaining her meaning by her action:—waving thy head, which often wave—thus—(and she then waves her head several times). She adds, "correcting thy stout heart," be "humble the ripest mulberry."

Vol. Prithee now Go, and be rul'd: although I know thou hast
Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bower. Here is Cominius

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. I have been i' the market-place: as
't is fit

You make strong party, or defend yourself
By calmness, or by absence; all 's in argu.

Men. Only fair speech.

Com. I think 't will work
Can thereto frame his spirit.

Vol. He must, and will—Prithee now say you will, and go about it.

Cor. Must I go show them my unshak'd Must I,

With my base tongue, give to my noble heart
A lie, that it must bear? Well, I will do 't:
Yet were there but this single plot to lose,
This mould of Marcius they to dust should graft,
And throw it against the wind.—To the market-place
You have put me now to such a part, which never
I shall discharge to the life.

Com. Come, come, we 'll permit

Vol. I prithee now, sweet son, as thou hast wish'd
My praises made thee first a soldier, so,
To have my praise for this, perform a part
Thou hast not done before.

Cor. Well, I must do 't:

Away my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! My throat of war be turn'd
Which quired with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice
That babies lulls asleep! The smiles of knave Tent in my cheeks; and schoolboys' tears take up
The glasses of my sight! A beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd hand
Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do 't:
Lest I surcease to honour mine own truth,
And, by my body's action, teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

Vol. At thy choice then:

To beg of thee it is my more dishonour,
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin; let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dangerous stoutness; for I mock at death
With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'd'st it from me
But owe thy pride thyself.

Cor. Pray, be content:

Mother, I am going to the market-place;
Chide me no more. I 'll mountebank their loves,
Cog their hearts from them, and come home belov'd
Of all the trades in Rome. Look, I am going:
Commend me to my wife. I 'll return command:
Or never trust to what my tongue can do
I' the way of flattery, further.

Vol. Do your will.

Com. Away! the tribunes do attend you—yourself

To answer mildly; for they are prepar'd
With accusations, as I hear, more strong
Than are upon you yet.

Cor. The word is, mildly:—Pray you, let us go
Let them accuse me by invention, I Will answer in mine honour.

Men. Ay, but mildly.

Cor. Well, mildly be it then; mildly. [Exit

SCENE III.—The same. The Market-place.

Enter SICIPIUS and BRUCCUS.

Bru. In this point charge him home that he shall

r: If he evade us there,
his envy to the people;
il, got on the Antiates,
ated.—

Enter an Ædile.

me?

He's coming.

How accompanied?
Menenius, and those senators
sur'd him.

Have you a catalogue
that we have procur'd,
poll?

I have; 't is ready.
collected them by tribes?

I have.
presently the people hither:
ear me say "It shall be so strength o' the commons," be it either e, or banishment, then let them,
"fine;" if death, cry "death;"
old prerogative truth o' the cause.

I shall inform them.
en such time they have begun to cry,
se, but with a din confus'd ent execution
ice to sentence.

Very well.
m be strong, and ready for this hint,
ap to give 't them.

Go about it.— [Exit Ædile.]
r straight: He hath been us'd and to have his worth
: Being once chaf'd, he cannot to temperance: then he speaks sart: and that is there which looks his neck.

US, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, Senators, and Patricians.

re he comes.

Calmly, I do beseech you.
n ostler, that for the poorest piece ave by the volume.—The honour'd gods safety, and the chairs of justice orthy men! plant love among us!
temples with the shows of peace,
ets with war!

Amen, amen!

wish.

Enter Ædile, with Citizens.

ur, ye people.
our tribunes; audience: Peace, I say!
ar me speak.

Well, say.—Peace, ho!
be charg'd no further than this present
ine here?

I do demand,
m to the people's voices,
era, and are content censure for such faults
d upon you?

I am content.
rens, he says he is content:
ice he has done, consider;
unds his body bears, which show
e holy churchyard.

Scratches with briars,
ught only.

Consider further,
walks not like a citizen,

You find him like a soldier: Do not take
His rougher accents for malicious sounds,
But, as I say, such as become a soldier,
Rather than envy you.

Com. Well, well, no more.

Cor. What is the matter,
That being pass'd for consul with full voice,
I am so dishonour'd, that the very hour
You take it off again?

Sic. Answer to us.

Cor. Say then: 't is true, I ought so.

Sic. We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical;
For which you are a traitor to the people.

Cor. How! Traitor?

Men. Nay; temperately: Your promise.

Cor. The fires i' the lowest hell fold in the people!
Call me their traitor!—Thou injurious tribune!
Within thine eyes sat twenty thousand deaths,
In thy hands clutch'd as many millions, in Thy lying tongue both numbers, I would say,
Thou liest, unto thee, with a voice as free
As I do pray the gods.

Sic. Mark you this, people?

Cit. To the rock; to the rock with him!

Sic. Peace!

We need not put new matter to his charge:
What you have seen him do, and heard him speak,
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves,
Opposing laws with strokes, and here defying
Those whose great power must try him; even this,
So criminal, and in such capital kind,
Deserves the extremest death.

Bru. But since he hath serv'd well for Rome,—

Cor. What! do you prate of service?

Bru. I talk of that, that know it.

Cor.

Men. Is this the promise that you made your mother?

Com. Know, I pray you,—

Cor. I'll know no further:

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flogging, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word;
Nor check my courage for what they can give,
To have 't with saying, Good morrow.

Sic. For that he has

(As much as in him lies) from time to time
Envied against the people, seeking means
To pluck away their power; as now at last Given hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it: In the name o' the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we,
Even from this instant, banish him our city;
In peril of precipitation
From off the rock Tarpeian, never more
To enter our Rome gates; I' the people's name,
I say it shall be so.

Cit. It shall be so: It shall be so; let him away!
He's banish'd, and it shall be so.

Com. Hear me, my masters, and my common friends;—

Sic. He's sentenc'd; no more hearing.

Com.

Let me speak:
I have been consul, and can show, from Rome,
Her enemies' marks upon me. I do love
My country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
And treasure of my loins; then if I would Speak that—

Sic. We know your drift: Speak what?

Bru. There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd,
As enemy to the people and his country:
It shall be so.

Cit. It shall be so, it shall be so.
Cor. You common cry of curs! whose breath I hate
As reek o' the rotten fens, whose loves I prize
As the dead carcasses of unburied men
That do corrupt my air, I banish you;
And here remain with your uncertainty!
Let every feeble rumour shake your hearts!
Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes, Fan you into despair! Have the power still
To banish your defenders; till, at length,
Your ignorance, (which finds not, till it feels,)
Making not reservation of yourselves,
(Still your own foes,) deliver you,

As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Despairing
For you, the city, thus I turn my back:
There is a world elsewhere.

[*Exeunt CORIOLANUS, COMINIUS,
Senators, and Patricians.*]

Æd. The people's enemy is gone, is gone.

Cit. Our enemy is banish'd! he is hoo!

[The people shout, and throw up

Sic. Go, see him out at gates, and follow
As he hath follow'd you, with all despite;
Give him deserv'd vexation. Let a guard
Attend us through the city.

Cit. Come, come, let's see him out at gates
The gods preserve our noble tribunes!—Cor.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. Before a Gate of the City.

Enter CORIOLANUS, VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, MENENIUS, COMINIUS, and several young Patricians.

Cor. Come, leave your tears; a brief farewell:—the beast

With many heads butts me away.—Nay, mother,
Where is your ancient courage? you were used
To say, extremity was the trier of spirits;
That common chances common men could bear;
That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Show'd mastership in floating: fortune's blows,
When most struck home, being gentle wounded, craves
A noble cunning: you were used to load me
With precepts, that would make invincible
The heart that conn'd them.

Vir. O heavens! O heavens!

Cor. Nay, I prithee, woman,—
Vol. Now the red pestilence strike all trades in Rome,
And occupations perish!

Cor. What, what, what!
I shall be lov'd when I am lack'd. Nay, mother,
Resume that spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat.—Cominius,
Droop not; adieu!—Farewell, my wife! my mother!
I'll do well yet.—Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
And venomous to thine eyes.—My sometime general,
I have seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld Heart-hard'ning spectacles; tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes,
As 't is to laugh at them.—My mother, you wot well
My hazards still have been your solace: and Believe 't not lightly, (though I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen<sup>a</sup>
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen,) your son
Will, or exceed the common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice.

Vol. My first<sup>b</sup> son,
Whither wilt thou go? Take good Cominius
With thee a while: Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' the way before thee.

Cor. O the gods!
Com. I'll follow thee a month, devise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou mayst hear of us,
And we of thee: so, if the time thrust forth

<sup>a</sup> The fen is the pestilential abode of the "lonely dragon," which he makes "feared and talk'd of more than seen."

<sup>b</sup> First—in the sense of noblest.

A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world, to seek a single man
And lose advantage, which doth ever cool
I' the absence of the needer.

Cor. Fare ye well:—
Thou hast years upon thee; and thou art the
Of the wars' surfeits, to go rove with one That's yet unbruise'd: bring me but out at gates Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch, when I am forth, Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you, O
While I remain above the ground, you shall Hear from me still; and never of me aught
But what is like me formerly.

Men. That's worthily
As any ear can hear.—Come, let's not weep:
If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs, by the good gods
I'd with thee every foot!

Cor. Give me thy hand.
Come.

SCENE II.—The same. A Street near the

Enter SICINIUS, BRUCCUS, and an

Sic. Bid them all home; he's gone, and further.—
The nobility are vex'd, who, we see here side
In his behalf.

Bru. Now we have shown our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a doing.

Sic. Bid them hence: Say, their great enemy is gone, and they Stand in their ancient strength.

Bru. Dimiss them in
[Exit]

Enter VOLUMNIA, VIRGILIA, and Menenius
Here comes his mother.

Sic. Let's not meet her.

Bru. Why

Sic. They say she's mad.

Bru. They have to do

Keep on your way.

Vol. O, you're well met: The banish'd gods

Requite your love!

Men. Peace, peace! he not so low

Vol. If that I could for weeping, you could

Nay, and you shall hear some.—Will you be
[Exit]

shall stay too: [To SicIN.] I would I the power
ny husband.

Are you mankind? *
fool: Is that a shame?—Note but this
—
an my father? Hadst thou foxship n that struck more blows for Rome, st spoken words?

O blessed heavens!
noble blows, than ever thou wise words;
e's good.—I'll tell thee what;—Yet go:—
i shalt stay too:—I would my son ia, and thy tribe before him,
rd in his hand.

What then? What then!
n end of thy posterity.
rds, and all.—
e wounds that he does bear for Rome!
e, come, peace!
ld he had continued to his country and not unknit himself ot he made.

I would he had.
uld he had! 'T was you incens'd the
le:
udge as fitly of his worth,
ose mysteries which heaven
e earth to know.

Pray, let us go.
pray, sir, get you gone:
e a brave deed. Ere you go, hear this;
i the Capitol exceed house in Rome, so far my son,
usband here, this, do you see,
ave banish'd, does exceed you all.
well, we'll leave you.

Why stay we to be baited
t wants her wits?
Take my prayers with you.—
ods had nothing else to do, [Exeunt Tribunes.]
n my curses! Could I meet them
y, it would unclog my heart
eavy to 't.

You have told them home, roth, you have cause. You'll sup with
's my meat; I sup upon myself,
tarve with feeding.—Come, let 's go:
nt puling, and lament as I do,
o-like. Come, come, come.
fle, fie! [Exeunt.]

III.—A Highway between Rome and Antium.

a Roman and a Volce, meeting.
ow you well, sir, and you know me: your
, is Adrian.
so, sir: truly, I have forgot you.
a Roman; and my services are, as you em: Know you me yet?
nor? No. same, sir.
had more beard when I last saw you, but well appeared * by your tongue. What 's ome? I have a note from the Volcian rou out there: You have well saved me a Sicinius asks insultingly whether Volturnus is man with the roughness of a man?

res—scudered apparent.

Rom. There hath been in Rome strange insurrections: the people against the senators, patricians, and nobles.

Volc. Hath been! Is it ended then? Our state thinks not so; they are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division.

Rom. The main blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame again. For the nobles receive so to heart the banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptness to take all power from the people, and to pluck from them their tribunes for ever.
This lies glowing, I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Volc. Coriolanus banished?

Rom. Banished, sir.

Volc. You will be welcome with this intelligence, Nicanor.

Rom. The day serves well for them now. I have heard it said, the fittest time to corrupt a man's wife is when she's fallen out with her husband. Your noble Tullus Aufidius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer, Coriolanus, being now in no request of his country.

Volc. He cannot choose. I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: You have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home.

Rom. I shall, between this and supper, tell you most strange things from Rome; all tending to the good of their adversaries. Have you an army ready, say you?

Volc. A most royal one: the centurions, and their charges, distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment,* and to be on foot at an hour's warning.

Rom. I am joyful to hear of their readiness, and am the man, I think, that shall set them in present action.
So, sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your company.

Volc. You take my part from me, sir; I have the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let us go together. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Antium. Before Aufidius's House.

Enter CORIOLANUS, in mean apparel, disguised and muffled.

Cor. A goodly city is this Antium: City,
'T is I that made thy widows: many an heir
Of these fair edifices 'fore my wars
Have I heard groan, and drop: then know me not;
Lest that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones,

Enter a Citizen.

In puny battle slay me.—Save you, sir.

Cit. And you.

Cor. Direct me, if it be your will,

Where great Aufidius lies: Is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and feasts the nobles of the state,

At his house this night.

Cor. Which is his house, beseech you?

Cit. This, here, before you.

Cor. Thank you, sir; farewell.

[Exit Citizen.]

O, world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, and exercise,
Are still together, who, twin, as 't were, in love
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity: So, fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends,
And interjoin their issues. So with me:—
My birthplace hate I, and my love 's upon—

* In the entertainment—under engagement for pay.

This enemy town.—I'll enter : if he slay me,
He does fair justice ; if he give me way,
I'll do his country service. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—The same. A Hall in Aufidius's House.

Music within. Enter a Servant.

1 Serv. Wine, wine, wine ! What service is here !
I think our fellows are asleep. [Exit.]

Enter another Servant.

2 Serv. Where 's Cotus ? my master calls for him.
Cotus ! [Exit.]

Enter CORIOLANUS.

Cor. A goodly house : The feast smells well : but I Appear not like a guest.

Re-enter the first Servant.

1 Serv. What would you have, friend ? Whence are you ? Here 's no place for you : Pray, go to the door.

Cor. I have deserv'd no better entertainment,
In being Coriolanus.

Re-enter second Servant.

2 Serv. Whence are you, sir ? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions ? Pray, get you out.

Cor. Away !

2 Serv. Away ! Get you away.

Cor. Now thou art troublesome.

2 Serv. Are you so brave ? I'll have you talked with anon.

Enter a third Servant. The first meets him.

3 Serv. What fellow 's this ?

1 Serv. A strange one as ever I looked on : I cannot get him out o' the house : Prithce, call my master to him.

3 Serv. What have you to do here, fellow ? Pray you, avoid the house.

Cor. Let me but stand ; I will not hurt your hearth.

3 Serv. What are you ?

Cor. A gentleman.

3 Serv. A marvellous poor one.

Cor. True, so I am.

3 Serv. Pray you, poor gentleman, take up some other station ; here 's no place for you ; pray you, avoid : come.

Cor. Follow your function, go ! and batten on cold bits. [Pushes him away.]

3 Serv. What, will you not ? Prithce, tell my master what a strange guest he has here.

2 Serv. And I shall. [Exit.]

3 Serv. Where dwellest thou ?

Cor. Under the canopy ?

3 Serv. Under the canopy ?

Cor. Ay.

3 Serv. Where 's that ?

Cor. I' the city of kites and crows.

3 Serv. I' the city of kites and crows ?—What an ass it is !—Then thou dwellest with daws too ?

Cor. No, I serve not thy master.

3 Serv. How, sir ! Do you meddle with my master ?

Cor. Ay ; 't is an honest service than to meddle with thy mistress : Thou prat'st, and prat'st ; serve with thy trencher, hence ! [Beats him away.]

Enter Aufidius and the second Servant.

Auf. Where is this fellow ?

2 Serv. Here, sir ; I'd have beaten him like a dog, but for disturbing the lords within.

Auf. Whence com'st thou ? what wouldst thou ? Thy name ? Why speak'st not ? Speak, man : What 's thy name ?

Cor. If, Tullus, [unmuffling] not yet thou know'st me, and, seei

am, necessity

Auf. Wha

Cor. A na

And harsh in

Auf.

Thou hast a

Bears a com

Thou show'st

Cor. Prep

yet

Auf. I kn

Cor. My r

To thee parti

Great hurt at

My surname

The extreme

Shed for my

But with tha

And witness

Which thou :

The cruelty :

Permitted by

Have all fors

And suffer'd

Whoop'd out

Hath brough

Mistake me :

I had fear'd

I would have

To be full q

Stand I befor

A heart of w

Thine own p

Of shame see

And make m

That my rev

As benefits t

Against my

Of all the un

Thou dar'st r

Thou art tir

Longer to liv

My throat t

Which not t

Since I have

Drawn tuns

And cannot l

It be to do th

Auf.

Each word th

A root of anc

Should from

And say, "

Than thee, al

Mine arms al

My grained :

And scar'd t

The anvil of

As hotly and

As ever in an

Content agai

I lov'd the m

Sigh'd truer

Thou noble t

Than when I

Bestride my

We have a p

Once more t

Or lose mine

Twelve sever

Dreamt of en

b Under th en down together in any sleep,

helm, biting each other's throat,
half dead with nothing. Worthy Marcius, other quarrel else to Rome, but that ence banish'd, we would muster all s to seventy; and, pouring war
vels of ungrateful Rome, flood o'erbeat. O, come, go in,
r friendly senators by the hands;
re here, taking their leaves of me,
epar'd against your territories,
for Rome itself.

You bless me, gods!
efore, most absolute sir, if thou wilt have of thine own revenges, take f of my commission; and set down,— i art experienc'd, since thou know'st y's strength and weakness,—thine own ways;
knock against the gates of Rome,
isit them in parts remote,
em, ere destroy. But come in:
mend thee first to those that shall thy desires. A thousand welcomes!
friend than e'er an enemy;
is, that was much. Your hand! Most wel-
me!

[Exeunt CORIOLANUS and AUFIDIUS.
Advancing.] Here's a strange alteration!
By my hand, I had thought to have strucken cudgel; and yet my mind gave me, his e a false report of him.

What an arm he has! He turned me about nger and his thumb, as one would set up a

Nay, I knew by his face that there was some-n: he had, sir, a kind of face, methought,—
I how to term it.

He had so; looking as it were,—'Would I I but I thought there was more in him than ik.

So did I, I'll be sworn: he is simply the
' the world.

I think he is: but a greater soldier than he,
t.

Who? my master?

Nay, it's no matter for that.

Worth six of him.

Nay, not so neither; but I take him to be soldier.

Faith, look you, one cannot tell how to say
e defence of a town our general is excellent.
Ay, and for an assault too.

Re-enter third Servant.

O, slaves, I can tell you news; news, you rv.

rv. What, what, what? let's partake.

I would not be a Roman, of all nations; I be a condemned man.

rv. Wherefore? wherefore?

Why, here's he that was wont to thwack
—Caius Marcius.

Why do you say thwack our general?

I do not say thwack our general; but he was
I enough for him.

Come, we are fellows, and friends; he was
d for him; I have heard him say so himself.
He was too hard for him directly, to say the before Corioli he scotched him and notched carbonado.

Am he had been cannibally given, he might
I and eaten him too.

But more of thy news?

Why, he is so made on here within, as if he were son and heir to Mars: set at upper end o' the table: no question asked him by any of the senators, but they stand bald before him: Our general himself makes a mistress of him; sanctifies himself with's hand, and turns up the white o' the eye to his discourse. But the bottom of the news is, our general is cut i' the middle, and but one half of what he was yesterday; for the other has half, by the entreaty and grant of the whole table. He'll go, he says, and sowle<sup>a</sup> the porter of Rome gates by the ears: He will mow all down before him, and leave his passage polled.<sup>b</sup>

2 Serv. And he's as like to do 't as any man I can imagine.

3 Serv. Do 't? he will do 't: For, look you, sir, he has as many friends as enemies: which friends, sir, (as it were,) durst not (look you, sir) show themselves (as we term it) his friends whilst he's in directitude.<sup>c</sup>

1 Serv. Directitude! what's that?

3 Serv. But when they shall see, sir, his crest up again, and the man in blood, they will out of their burrows, like conies after rain, and revel all with him.

1 Serv. But when goes this forward?

3 Serv. To-morrow; to-day; presently. You shall have the drum struck up this afternoon: 't is, as it were, a parcel of their feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Serv. Why, then we shall have a stirring world again. This peace is nothing, but to rust iron, increase tailors, and breed ballad-makers.

1 Serv. Let me have war, say I; it exceeds peace as far as day does night; it's sprightly, waking, audible, and full of vent. Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargy;
mull'd, deaf, sleepy, insensible; a getter of more bastard children than war's a destroyer of men.

2 Serv. 'T is so; and as wars, in some sort, may be said to be a ravisher, so it cannot be denied but peace is a great maker of cuckolds.

1 Serv. Ay, and it makes men hate one another.

3 Serv. Reason; because they then less need one another. The wars for my money. I hope to see Romans as cheap as Volcians. They are rising, they are rising.

All. In, in, in, in!

[Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter SICINIUS and BRUTUS.

Sic. We hear not of him, neither need we fear him;
His remedies are tame i' the present peace
And quietness o' the people, which before
Were in wild hurry. Here do we make his friends Blush that the world goes well; who rather had,
Though they themselves did suffer by 't, beheld Dissentious numbers pretering streets, than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly.

Enter MENENIUS.

Bru. We stood to 't in good time. Is this Menenius?

Sic. 'T is he, 't is he: O, he is grown most kind of late. Hail, sir!

Men. Hail to you both!

Sic. Your Coriolanus is not much missed but with his friends; the commonwealth doth stand; and so would do, were he more angry at it.

Men. All's well; and might have been much better,
if he could have temporis'd.

Sic. Where is he, hear you?

<sup>a</sup> Sowle—a provincial word for pull out.

<sup>b</sup> Polled—cleared.

<sup>c</sup> Directitude. Malone would read Directitude. He thinks the servant was not meant to talk absolute nonsense. Why then does the other servant use the meaning of the fine word?

Men. Nay, I hear nothing; his mother and his wife hear nothing from him.

Enter three or four Citizens.

Cit. The gods preserve you both!

Sic. Good-e'en, our neighbours.

Bru. Good-e'en to you all, good-e'en to you all.

1 Cit. Ourselves, our wives, and children, on our knees,

Are bound to pray for you both.

Sic. Live, and thrive!

Bru. Farewell, kind neighbours: We wish'd Coriolanus

Had lov'd you as we did.

Cit. Now the gods keep you!

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell. [Exeunt Citizens.]

Sic. This is a happier and more comely time

Than when these fellows ran about the streets,

Crying, Confusion.

Bru. Caius Marcius was

A worthy officer i' the war; but insolent,
O'ercome with pride, ambitious past all thinking,
Self-loving,—

Sic. And affecting one sole throne, Without assistance.

Men. I think not so.

Sic. We should by this, to all our lamentation,
If he had gone forth consul, found it so.

Bru. The gods have well prevented it, and Rome
Sits safe and still without him.

Enter Ædile.

Æd. Worthy tribunes,

There is a slave, whom we have put in prison,

Reports, the Volces with two several powers

Are enter'd in the Roman territories;

And with the deepest malice of the war

Destroy what lies before them.

Men. 'T is Aufidius,

Who, hearing of our Marcius' banishment,
Thrusts forth his horns again into the world,
Which were inshell'd when Marcius stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out.

Sic. Come, what talk you of Marcius?

Bru. Go see this rumourer whipp'd.—It cannot be
The Volces dare break with us.

Men. Cannot he!

We have record that very well it can:
And three examples of the like have been Within my age. But reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this:
Lest you shall chance to whip your information,
And beat the messenger who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sic. Tell not me:

I know this cannot be.

Bru. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The nobles, in great earnestness, are going
All to the senate-house: some news is coming
That turns their countenances.

Sic. 'T is this slave;—
Go whip him 'fore the people's eyes:—his raising!
Nothing but his report!

Mess. Yes, worthy sir,
The slave's report is seconded; and more,
More fearful, is deliver'd.

Sic. What more fearful?

Mess. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,
(How probable I do not know,) that Marcius, Join'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome;
I vows revenge as spacious as between young'st and oldest thing.

Sic. This is most li

Bru. Rais'd only that the weaker sort may Good Marcius home again.

Sic. The very trick o

Men. This is unlikely:
He and Aufidius can no more stone*
Than violentest contrariety.

Enter another Messenger.

Mess. You are sent for to the senate;
A fearful army, led by Caius Marcius,
Associated with Aufidius, rages
Upon our territories; and have already,
O'erborne their way, consum'd with fire, and What lay before them.

Enter COMINIUS.

Com. O, you have made good work!

Men. What news? w

Com. You have help to ravish your own
and

To melt the city leads upon your gates;
To see your wives dishonour'd to your noses;

Men. What's the news? what's the news?

Com. Your temples burned in their censures
Your franchises, whereon you stood, confin'd
Into an auger's bore.

Men. Pray now, your news!—

You have made fair work, I fear me:—Pray,
If Marcius should be join'd with Volcians,—

Com.

He is their god; he leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better; and they follow him
Against us brats, with no less confidence
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies,
Or butchers killing flies.

Men. You have made good

You, and your apron-men; you that stood so Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlic eaters!

Com. He'll shako your Rome about your

Men. As Hercules did shake down mellow
You have made fair work!

Bru. But is this true, w

Com. Ay; and you'll look pale Before you find it other. All the regions
Do smilingly revolt; and, who resist,
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Who is't can blame
Your enemies, and his, find something in him.

Men. We are all undone, unless
The noble man have mercy.

Com. Who shall ask it!

The tribunes cannot do 't for shame; the people Deserve such pity of him as the wolf Does of the shepherds: for his best friends, if they Should say, "Be good to Rome," they charge even

As those should do that had deserv'd his hate,
And therein show'd like enemies.

Men. 'T is true.

If he were putting to my house the brand
That should consume 't, I have not the face
To say, "Beseech you, cease."—You have
hands,

You and your crafts! you have crafted fair!

Com. You have

A trembling upon Rome, such as was never
So incapable of help.

Tri. Say not we brought it.

Men. How! Was it we? We lov'd him; he beasts,

* Stone—be reconciled—at one.

ables, gave way unto your clusters,
m out o' the city.

But, I fear,
t in again. Tullus Aufidius, e of men, obeys his points officer:—Desperation strength, and defence,
make against them.

Enter a Troop of Citizens.

Here come the clusters.—
with him?—You are they ir unwholesome, when you cast reasy caps, in hooting xile. Now he's coming;
pon a soldier's head
prove a whip; as many coxcombs
ps up, will he tumble down,
your voices. 'T is no matter;
us all into one coal,
d it.
e hear fearful news.

For mine own part,
nish him, I said 't was pity.
did I.
did I; and, to say the truth, so did : That we did we did for the best; and gly consented to his banishment, yet it will.

goodly things, you voices!
You have made
n and your cry!—Shall us to the

what else? [Exeunt COM. and MEN.
ers, get you home, be not dismay'd.
that would be glad to have they so seem to fear. Go home, n of fear.

ds be good to us! Come, masters, let's said we were i' the wrong when we we all. But come, let's home.

[Exeunt Citizens.
t like this news.

the Capitol:—'Would half my wealth
for a lie!

Pray, let us go. [Exeunt.

—A Camp; at a small distance from Rome.

AUFIDIUS and his Lieutenant.

still fly to the Roman?
t know what witchcraft's in him; but e him as the grace fore meat,
de, and their thanks at end;

And you are darken'd in this action, sir,
Even by your own.

Auf. I cannot help it now;
Unless, by using means, I lame the foot
Of our design. He bears himself more proudlier Even to my person, than I thought he would
When first I did embrace him: Yet his nature
In that's no changeling; and I must excuse
What cannot be amended.

Lieu. Yet I wish, sir,
(I mean, for your particular,) you had not Join'd in commission with him: but either had borne
The action of yourself, or else to him
Had left it solely.

Auf. I understand thee well; and be thou sure,
When he shall come to his account, he knows not What I can urge against him. Although it seems,
And so he thinks, and is no less apparent
To the vulgar eye, that he bears all things fairly,
And shows good husbandry for the Volcian state;
Fights dragon-like, and does achieve as soon
As draw his sword: yet he hath left undone
That which shall break his neck, or hazard mine,
Whene'er we come to our account.

Lieu. Sir, I beseech you, think you he'll carry Rome?

Auf. All places yield to him ere he sits down;
And the nobility of Rome are his:
The senators and patricians love him too:
The tribunes are no soldiers; and their people
Will be as rash in the repeal, as hasty
To expel him thence. I think he'll be to Rome,
As is the osprey to the fish, who takes it
By sovereignty of nature. First he was A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even: whether 't was pride,
Which out of daily fortune ever taints
The happy man; whether defect of judgment,
To fall in the disposing of those chances
Which he was lord of; or whether nature,
Not to be other than one thing, not moving
From the casque to the cushion, but commanding peace
Even with the same austerity and garb
As he controll'd the war; but one of these (As he hath spices of them all, not all,
For I dare so far free him) made him fear'd,
So hated, and so banish'd: But he has a merit,
To choke it in the utterance. So our virtues
Lie in the interpretation of the time:
And power, unto itself most commendable,
Hath not a tomb so evident as a chair
To extol what it hath done.

One fire drives out one fire; one nail, one nail;
Rights by rights fouler,* strength by strength do fail.
Come, let's away. When, Caius, Rome is thine,
Thou art poor'st of all; then shortly art thou mine.

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

E I.—Rome. A public Place.

COMINIUS, SICINIUS, BRUTUS, and others.

ll not go: you hear what he hath said
etime his general; who lov'd him rticular. He call'd me father:
? Go, you that banish'd him;
s tent fall down and knee*

original. Shakspeare uses knee as a verb in

* To knee his throne."

The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd
To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Com. He would not seem to know me.

Men. Do you hear?

Com. Yet one time he did call me by my name:

I urg'd our old acquaintance, and the drops

That we have bled together. Coriolanus

He would not answer to: forbaid all names;

* Fouler. We may understand the meaning of the expression if we substitute the opposite epithet, finer. As it is, the lesser rights drive out the greater—the fairer rights fall through the fouler.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
Till he had forg'd himself a name i' the fire
Of burning Rome.

Men. Why, so; you have made good work:
A pair of tribunes that have rack'd for Rome,
To make coals cheap: A noble memory!

Com. I minded him how royal 't was to pardon
When it was less expected: He replied,
It was a bare petition of a state
To one whom they had punish'd.

Men. Very well;
Could he say less?

Com. I offer'd to awaken his regard For his private friends: His answer to me was,
He could not stay to pick them in a pile
Of noisome musty chaff: He said, 't was folly
For one poor grain or two to leave unburnt,
And still to nose the offence.

Men. For one poor grain or two?
I am one of those: his mother, wife, his child,
And this brave fellow too, we are the grains:
You are the musty chaff; and you are smelt
Above the moon: We must be burnt for you.

Sic. Nay, pray be patient: If you refuse your aid
In this so never-heeded help, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. But, sure, if you Would be your country's pleader, your good tongue,
More than the instant army we can make,
Might stop our countryman.

Men. No; I 'll not meddle.
Sic. Pray you, go to him.

Men. What should I do?
Bru. Only make trial what your love can do
For Rome, towards Marcius.

Men. Well, and say that Marcius return me,
As Cominius is return'd, unheard; what then?
But as a discontented friend, grief-shot
With his unkindness? Say 't be so?

Sic. Yet your good will Must have that thanks from Rome, after the measure
As you intended well.

Men. I 'll undertake it:
I think he 'll hear me. Yet, to bite his lip
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
He was not taken well: he had not din'd:
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We put upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of our blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I 'll watch him

Till he be dieted to my request,
And then I 'll set upon him.

Bru. You know the very road into his kindness,
And cannot lose your way.

Men. Good faith, I 'll prove him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long have knowledge
Of my success. [Exit.]

Com. He 'll never hear him.
Sic. Not?

Com. I tell you he does sit in gold, his eye
Red as 't would burn Rome; and his injury
The gaoler to his pity. I kneel'd before him;
'T was very faintly he said, "Rise;" dismiss'd me
Thus, with his speechless hand: What he would do,
He sent in writing after me,—what he would not;
Bound with an oath to yield to his conditions:*

* Coriolanus sends "in writing" both "what he would do" and "what he would not;" and, in justification of the harshness of his demands, he adds that he is "bound with an oath to yield to his conditions,"—that is, to make his sole law the "conditions" in which he had become placed—his duty to the "state";—to yield himself up entirely to the guidance of "auditions."

So that all hope is vain,
Unless* his noble mother, and his wife;
Who, as I hear, mean to solicit him
For mercy to his country. Therefore, let's be
And with our fair entreaties haste them on.

SCENE II.—An advanced Post of the Volscians before Rome. The Guard at their station.

Enter to them MENENIUS.

1 G. Stay: Whence are you?

2 G. Stand, and

Men. You guard like men; 't is well: But leave,

I am an officer of state, and come
To speak with Coriolanus.

1 G. From whence?

Men. From

1 G. You may not pass, you must return: you Will no more hear from thence.

2 G. You 'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire
You 'll speak with Coriolanus.

Men. Good my friend

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
And of his friends there, it is lots<sup>b</sup> to blanks
My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Menenius

1 G. Be it so; go back: the virtue of your
Is not here passable.

Men. I tell thee, fellow,

Thy general is my lover: I have been
The book of his good acts, whence men have
His fame unparallel'd, haply amplified;
For I have ever verified my friends
'Of whom he 's chief' with all the size that Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I have tumbled past the throw; and in his
Have almost stamp'd the leasing; therefore, let
I must have leave to pass.

1 G. Faith, sir, if you had told as many behalf, as you have uttered words in your should not pass here; no, though it were as lie as to live chastely. Therefore, go back.

Men. Prithee, fellow, remember my name nius, always factionary on the party of your

2 G. Howsoever you have been his list, (as you have,) I am one that, telling the say you cannot pass. Therefore, go back.

Men. Has he dined, canst thou tell? for I speak with him till after dinner.

1 G. You are a Roman, are you?

Men. I am as thy general is.

1 G. Then you should hate Rome, as he you, when you have pushed out your gates defender of them, and in a violent popular given your enemy your shield, think to venge with the easy groans of old women, the palms of your daughters, or with the
of such a decayed dotant as you seem to be?
think to blow out the intended fire your city flame in, with such weak breath as this? No, deceived: therefore, back to Rome, and prepare execution: you are condemned; our general you out of reprieve and pardon.

Men. Sirrah, if thy captain knew I was would use me with estimation.

2 G. Come, my captain knows you not.

Men. I mean, thy general.

1 G. My general cares not for you. Back go, lest I let forth your half-pint of blood that 's the utmost of your having;—back.

* Unless is here used in the sense of exempt.

<sup>b</sup> Lots are the whole number of things, and a proportion of the whole number.

at fellow, fellow,—

CORIANUS and AUFIDIUS.

the matter?
 you companion, I'll say an errand for know now that I am in estimation; you hat a jack guardant cannot office me riolanus: guess, but by my entertain-if thou stand'st not i' the state of hang-death more long in spectatorship, and ring; behold now presently, and swoon me upon thee.—The glorious gods sit in out thy particular prosperity, and love an thy old father Menenius does! O, n! thou art preparing fire for us; look er to quench it. I was hardly moved to ut being assured none but myself could ve been blown out of your gates with ure thee to pardon Rome, and thy peti-men. The good gods assuage thy wrath, egs of it upon this varlet here; this who,
 th denied my access to thee.

away?
 other, child, I know not. My affairs o others: Though I owe perly, my remission lies sts. That we have been familiar, lness shall poison rather
 how much.—Therefore, be gone.
 at your suits are stronger than just my force. Yet, for I lov'd thee,
 ; I writ it for thy sake, [Gives a letter.
 re sent it. Another word, Menenius, thee speak.—This man, Aufidius,
 d in Rome: yet thou behold'st—
 rep a constant temper.

[Exit CORIANUS and AUFIDIUS.
 ir, is your name Menenius?
 a spell, you see, of much power: You come again.

hear how we are shent* for keeping your cause, do you think, I have to swoon?
 er care for the world nor your general:
 as you, I can scarce think there's any,
 st. He that hath a will to die by himself,
 n another. Let your general do his worst.
 at you are, long; and your misery in-r age! I say to you, as I was said to,
 [Exit.

le fellow, I warrant him.
 erty fellow is our general: He is the ot to be wind-shaken. [Exit.

E III.—The tent of Coriolanus.

CORIANUS, AUFIDIUS, and others.

ll before the walls of Rome to-morrow
 ost.—My partner in this action, et to the Volcian lords how plainly his business.

Only their ends
 ected; stopp'd your ears against it of Rome; never admitted per, no, not with such friends been sure of you.

This last old man,
 crack'd heart I have sent to Rome,
 re the measure of a father;
 me, indeed. Their latest refuge im; for whose old love I have w'd sourly to him) once more offer'd

* Shent—rebuked

The first conditions which they did refuse,
 And cannot now accept, to grace him only,
 That thought he could do more; a very little
 I have yielded too: Fresh embassies, and suits,
 Nor from the state, nor private friends, hereafter
 Will I lend ear to.—Ha! what shout is this?

[Shout within.

Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow
 In the same time 't is made? I will not,—

Enter VIRGILIA, VOLUMNIA, leading young MARCIUS, VALERIA, and Attendants.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould
 Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand
 The grandchild to her blood. But out, affection!
 All bond and privilege of nature break!
 Let it be virtuous to be obstinate.—
 What is that curtsy worth! or those doves' eyes,
 Which can make gods forsworn!—I melt, and am not
 Of stronger earth than others.—My mother bows;
 As if Olympus to a molehill should
 In supplication nod: and my young boy Hath an aspect of intercession, which Great nature cries, "Deny not."—Let the Voices Plough Rome, and harrow Italy: I'll never Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand,
 As if a man were author of himself,
 And knew no other kin.

Vir. My lord and husband!

Cor. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Vir. The sorrow that delivers us thus chang'd Makes you think so.

Cor. Like a dull actor now,
 I have forgot my part, and I am out,
 Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
 Forgive my tyranny; but do not say,
 For that, "Forgive our Romans."—O, a kiss
 Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
 Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
 I carried from thee, dear, and my true lip
 Hath virgin'd it e'er since.—You gods! I prate,
 And the most noble mother of the world
 Leave unsaluted: Sink, my knee, i' the earth; [Kneels.
 Of thy deep duty more impression show
 Than that of common sons.

Vol. O, stand up bless'd!

Whilst, with no softer cushion than the flint,
 I kneel before thee; and unproperly Show duty, as mistaken all this while Between the child and parent. [Kneels.

Cor. What is this?

Your knees to me? to your corrected son?
 Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
 Fillip the stars; then let the mutinous winds
 Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun; Murd'ring impossibility, to make
 What cannot be, slight work.

Vol. Thou art my warrior;

I help to frame thee. Do you know this lady?

Cor. The noble sister of Publicola,
 The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle,
 That's curd'd by the frost from purest snow,
 And hangs on Dian's temple: Dear Valeria!

Vol. This is a poor epitome of yours,
 Which by the interpretation of full time
 May show like all yourself.

Cor. The god of soldiers,
 With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness; that thou mayst prove To shame invulnerable, and stick i' the wars
 Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw,
 And saving those that eye thee!

Vol. Your knee, sirrah.

Cor. That's my brave boy.

Vol. Even he, your wife, this lady, and myself, Are suitors to you.

Cor. I beseech you, peace : Or, if you 'd ask, remember this before,— The things I have forsworn to grant may never Be held by you denials. Do not bid me Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate Again with Rome's mechanics :—Tell me not Wherein I seem unnatural : Desire not To allay my rages and revenges, with Your colder reasons.

Vol. O, no more, no more ! You have said you will not grant us anything ; For we have nothing else to ask but that Which you deny already : Yet we will ask ; That, if you fail in our request, the blame May hang upon your hardness ; therefore hear us.

Cor. Aufidius, and you Volces, mark ; for we 'll Hear nought from Rome in private.—Your request ?

Vol. Should we be silent and not speak, our raiment

And state of bodies would bewray what life We have led since thy exile. Think with thyself How more unfortunate than all living women Are we come hither : since that thy sight, which should

Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,

Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow ; Making the mother, wife, and child, to see The son, the husband, and the father, tearing His country's bowels out. And to poor we Thine enmity's most capital : thou barr'st us Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort That all but we enjoy : For how can we, Alas ! how can we for our country pray, Whereto we are bound ? together with thy victory, Whereto we are bound ? Alack ! or we must lose The country, our dear nurse ; or else thy person, Our comfort in the country. We must find An evident calamity, though we had Our wish, which side should win : for either thou Must, as a foreign recreant, be led With manacles through our streets, or else Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin ; And bear the palm, for having bravely shed Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son, I purpose not to wait on fortune till These wars determine :* if I cannot persuade thee Rather to show a noble grace to both parts Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner March to assault thy country than to tread (Trust to 't, thou shalt not) on thy mother's womb, That brought thee to this world.

Vir. Ay, and mine, That brought you forth this boy, to keep your name Living to time.

Boy. A shall not tread on me ; I 'll run away till I am bigger, but then I 'll fight.

Cor. Not of a woman's tenderness to be, Requires nor child nor woman's face to see. I have sat too long. [Rising.]

Vol. Nay, go not from us thus. If it were so that our request did tend To save the Romans, thereby to destroy The Volces whom you serve, you might condemn us, As poisonous of your honour : No ; our suit Is that you reconcile them : while the Volces May say, " This mercy we have show'd ; " the Romans, " This we receiv'd ; " and each in either side Give the all-bail to thee, and cry, " Be bless'd For making up this peace ! " Thou know'st, great son, ' end of war 's uncertain ; but this certain,

* Determine—come to an end.

That if thou conquer Rome, the benefit Which thou shalt thereby reap is such a name, Whose repetition will be dogg'd with curses ; Whose chronicle thus writ,—" The man who nobly But with his last attempt he wip'd it out ; Destroy'd his country ; and his name remains To the ensuing age abhorr'd. " Speak to me, sir : Thou hast affected the fine strains of honour, To imitate the graces of the gods ; To tear with thunder the wide cheeks o' the air, And yet to charge thy sulphur with a bolt That should but rive an oak. Why dost not speak ? Think'st thou it honourable for a noble man Still to remember wrongs ?—Daughter, speak : He cares not for your weeping. Speak, then, lady : Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons.—There is no man in the world More bound to his mother ; yet here he lets us part Like one i' the stocks. Thou hast never in thy life Show'd thy dear mother any courtesy ; When she, (poor hen ! ) fond of no second hood, Has cluck'd thee to the wars, and safely home, Loaden with honour. Say, my request's unjust, And spurn me back : But, if it be not so, Thou art not honest ; and the gods will plague thee That thou restrain'st from me the duty which To a mother's part belongs.—He turns away : Down, ladies ! let us shame him with our tears. To his surname Coriolanus 'longs more pride Than pity to our prayers. Down : An end : This is the last :—So we will home to Rome, And die among our neighbours.—Nay, behold our This boy, that cannot tell what he would have, But kneels, and holds up hands, for fellowship, Does reason our petition with more strength Than thou hast to deny 't.—Come, let us go : This fellow had a Volcian to his mother ; His wife is in Corioli, and his child Like him by chance :—Yet give us our despatch. I am hush'd until our city be afire, And then I 'll speak a little.

Cor. O mother, mother !

[Holding VOLUCENA by the hand, who kneels.] What have you done ? Behold the heavens do open. The gods look down, and this unnatural scene They laugh at. O my mother, mother ! O ! You have won a happy victory to Rome : But, for your son,—believe it, O, believe it, Most dangerously you have with him prevail'd, If not most mortal to him. But let it come.—Aufidius, though I cannot make true war, I 'll frame convenient peace. Now, good Aufidius, Were you in my stead, would you have heard A mother less ? or granted less, Aufidius !

Auf. I was mov'd withal.

Cor. I dare be sworn you were. And, sir, it is no little thing to make Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But, good sir, What peace you 'll make, advise me : for my part, I 'll not to Rome, I 'll back with you ; and pray you Stand to me in this cause.—O mother ! wife !

Auf. I am glad thou hast set thy mercy and honour

At difference in thee : out of that I 'll work Myself a former fortune.

[The Ladies make signs to Coriolanus.]
Cor. Ay, by and by ; [To Vol. and Vir.] But we will drink together ; and you shall hear A better witness back than words, which we, On like conditions, will have countenanced. Come, enter with us. Ladies, you deserve To have a temple built you : all the swords In Italy, and her confederate arms, Could not have made this peace. [Exeunt.]

NE IV.—Rome. A public Place.

Enter MENENIUS and SICINIUS.

you yond' coign o' the Capitol; yond'

, what of that?

t be possible for you to displace it with ger, there is some hope the ladies of Rome, s mother, may prevail with him. But I no hope in 't; our throats are sentenced,
n execution.

ossible that so short a time can alter the
a man?

re is differency between a grub and a t your butterfly was a grub. This Marc from man to dragon: he has wings; he 's creeping thing.

ved his mother dearly.

lid he me: and he no more remembers his han an eight-year old horse. The tartness urs ripe grapes. When he walks, he moves e, and the ground shrinks before his tread-able to pierce a corslet with his eye; talks and his hum is a battery. He sits in his hing made for Alexander. What he bids shed with his bidding. He wants nothing eternity, and a heaven to throne in.

erney, if you report him truly.

aint him in the character. Mark what ther shall bring from him: There is no in him than there is milk in a male tiger;
r poor city find: and all this is 'long of ods be good unto us!

in such a case the gods will not be good hen we banished him we respected not e returning to break our necks, they re-

Enter a Messenger.

if you 'd save your life, fly to your house;
s have got your fellow-tribune,
n up and down; all swearing, if ladies bring not comfort home, him death by inches.

Enter another Messenger.

What 's the news?

od news, good news:—the ladies have vail'd,
s are dialog'd, and Marcius gone:
y did never yet greet Rome,
xpulsion of the Tarquins.

Friend,

ain this is true? is it most certain?
ertain as I know the sun is fire:
you lurk'd, that you make doubt of it?
s an arch so hurried the blown tide, sported through the gates. Why, bark you!
gets and hautboys sounded, and drums aten, all together. Shouting also within.
s, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes,
cymbals, and the shouting Romans, dance. Hark you! Shouting again.

This is good news:

et the ladies. This Volumnia onsuls, senators, patricians, of tribunes such as you nd full: You have pray'd well to-day; s, for ten thousand of your throats given a doit. Hark, how they joy!

Shouting and music.

the gods bless you for their tidings: next,
bankfulness.

Mess.

Sir, we have all

Great cause to give great thanks.

Sic.

They are near the city?

Mess.

Almost at point to enter.

Sic.

We will meet them.

And help the joy.

Going.

Enter the Ladies, accompanied by Senators, Patricians, and People. They pass over the Stage.

1 Sen. Behold our patroness, the life of Rome:

Call all your tribes together, praise the gods,

And make triumphant fires; strew flowers before them:

Unshout the noise that banish'd Marcius,

Repeal him with the welcome of his mother;

Cry,—Welcome, ladies, welcome!—

All. Welcome, ladies, welcome!

[A flourish with drums and trumpets.

Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Antium. A public Place.

Enter TULLUS AUFIDIUS, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the lords of the city I am here:

Deliver them this paper: having read it,

Bid them repair to the market-place; where I,

Even in theirs and in the commons' ears,

Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse

The city ports by this hath enter'd, and

Intends to appear before the people, hoping

To purge himself with words: Despatch.

[Exeunt Attendants.

Enter three or four Conspirators of Aufidius' faction.

Most welcome!

1 Con. How is it with our general?

Auf.

Even so

As with a man by his own alms empoison'd,

And with his charity slain.

2 Con.

Most noble sir,

If you do hold the same intent wherein

You wish'd us parties, we 'll deliver you

Of your great danger.

Auf.

Sir, I cannot tell;

We must proceed as we do find the people.

3 Con. The people will remain uncertain whilst

'Twixt you there 's difference; but the fall of either

Makes the survivor heir of all.

Auf.

I know it;

And my pretext to strike at him admits

A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd

Mine honour for his truth: Who being so heighten'd,

He water'd his new plants with dew of flattery,

Seducing so my friends: and, to this end,

He bow'd his nature, never known before

But to be rough, unswayable, and free.

3 Con. Sir, his stoutness,

When he did stand for consul, which he lost

By lack of stooping,—

Auf.

That I would have spoke of:

Being banish'd for 't, he came unto my hearth;

Presented to my knife his throat: I took him;

Made him joint-servant with me; gave him way

In all his own desires; nay, let him choose

Out of my files, his projects to accomplish,

My best and freshest men; serv'd his designments

In mine own person; help to reap the fame,

Which he did end all his; and took some pride

To do myself this wrong: till, at the last,

I seem'd his follower, not partner; and

He wag'd me with his countenance, as if

I had been mercenary.

1 Con.

So he did, my lord:

The army marvell'd at it. And, in the last,

When he had carried Rome; and that we look'd

For no less spoil than glory,—

Auf. There was it;—
For which my sinews shall be stretch'd upon him.
At a few drops of women's rheum, which are
As cheap as lies, he sold the blood and labour
Of our great action: Therefore shall he die,
And I'll renew me in his fall. But, bark!

[Drums and trumpets sound, with great shouts of the people.]

1 Con. Your native town you enter'd like a post,
And had no welcomes home; but he returns
Splitting the air with noise.

2 Con. And patient fools,
Whose children he hath slain, their base throats tear
With giving him glory.

3 Con. Therefore, at your vantage,
Ere he express himself, or move the people
With what he would say, let him feel your sword,
Which we will second. When he lies along,
After your way his tale pronounc'd shall bury
His reasons with his body.

Auf. Say no more;
Here come the lords.

Enter the Lords of the City.

Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I have not deserv'd it;
But, worthy lords, have you with heed perus'd
What I have written to you?

Lords. We have.

1 Lord. And grieve to hear it.
What faults he made before the last, I think,
Might have found easy fines: but there to end
Where he was to begin, and give away
The benefit of our levies, answering us
With our own charge; making a treaty where
There was a yielding,—this admits no excuse.

Auf. He approaches; you shall hear him.

Enter CORIOLANUS, with drums and colours; a crowd of Citizens with him.

Cor. Hail, lords! I am return'd your soldier;
No more infected with my country's love
Than when I parted hence, but still subsisting
Under your great command. You are to know,
That prosperously I have attempted, and With bloody passage led your wars, even to The gates of Rome. Our spoils we have brought home
Do more than counterpoise, a full third part,
The charges of the action. We have made peace,
With no less honour to the Antiates,
Than shame to the Romans: and we here deliver,
Subscribed by the consuls and patricians,
Together with the seal o' the senate, what We have compounded on.

Auf. Read it not, noble lords;
But tell the traitor, in the highest degree
He hath abus'd your powers.

Cor. Traitor!—How now?—

Auf. Ay, traitor, Marcius.

Cor. Marcius!

Auf. Ay, Marcius, Caius Marcius: Dost thou think I'll grace thee with that robbery, thy stol'n name Coriolanus in Corioli?

You lords and heads of the state, perfidiously
He has betray'd your business, and given up,
For certain drops of salt, your city Rome
(I say your city) to his wife and mother:
Breaking his oath and resolution, like
A twist of rotten silk; never admitting Counsel o' the war; but at his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory;
That pages blush'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wondering each at others.

Cor. Hear't it

Auf. Name not the god, thou boy of tears

Cor.

Auf. No more.

Cor. Measureless liar, thou hast made my Too great for what contains it. Boy! O sh
Pardon me, lords, 't is the first time that ev
I was forc'd to scold. Your judgments, my Must give this cur the lie: and his own nat
(Who wears my stripes impress'd on him, th
My beating to his grave) shall join to thrus
The lie unto him.

1 Lord. Peace, both, and bear m

Cor. Cut me to pieces, Volces; men and Stain all your edges on me.—Boy! False h
If you have writ your annals true, 't is the
That like an eagle in a dove-cote, I Flutter'd your Volcians in Corioli:
Alone I did it.—Boy!

Auf. Why, noble lords,
Will you be put in mind of his blind fortune
Which was your shame, by this unholv lea
'Fore your own eyes and ears?

Con. Let him die for 't. [Several spe
Cit. [Speaking promiscuously.] Tear his do it presently. He killed my son;—my d

He killed my cousin Marcus;—He killed m

2 Lord. Peace, ho!—no outrage;—peace
The man is noble, and his fame fills m
This orb o' the earth. His last offences to Shall have judicious * bearing.—Stand, Au
And trouble not the peace.

Cor. O, that I had him
With six Aufidiuses, or more, his tribe,
To use my lawfi sword!

Auf. Insolent villain!

Con. Kill, kil kill, kill, kill him!

[AUFIDIUS and the Conspirators draw CORIOLANUS, who falls, and AUSTIN on him.]

Lords. Hold, hold, h

Auf. My noble masters, hear me speak.

1 Lord. O!

2 Lord. Thou hast done a deed whereof weep.

3 Lord. Tread not upon him.—Masters all,
Put up your swords.

Auf. My lords, when you shall know rage,

Provok'd by him, you cannot) the great dang
Which this man's life did owe you, you'll see That he is thus cut off. Please it your hono
To call me to your senate, I'll deliver Myself your loyal servant, or endure
Your heaviest censure.

1 Lord. Bear from hence his bod

And mourn you for him: let him be regard
As the most noble corse that ever herald
Did follow to his urn.

2 Lord. His own impatience

Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame.
Let's make the best of it.

Auf. My rage is gone,

And I am struck with sorrow.—Take him up
Help, three o' the chieftest soldiers; I'll be us
Beat thou the drum that it speak mournfully:
Trail your steel pikes.—Though in this city he Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury,
Yet he shall have a noble memory.

Assist. [Exeunt, bearing the body of Cori

A dead march sounded.

* Justified—judicial.

H. MILLAR, SC.

G. H. T. DEL.

JULIUS CÆSAR.

to Concord. Her power had increased; her territory had extended. In compounding their differences the patricians and the plebeians had appropriated to themselves all the wealth and honours of the state. There was a neglected class that the social system appeared to reject, as well as to despise. The aristocratic party was again brought into a more terrible conflict with the impoverished and the destitute. Civil war was the natural result. Sulla established a short-lived constitution. The dissolution of the Republic was at hand: the struggle was henceforth to be not between classes, but individuals. The death of Julius Cæsar was soon followed by the final termination of the contest between the republican and the monarchical principle. Shakspeare saw the grandeur of the crisis; and he seized upon it for one of his lofty expositions of political philosophy. He has treated it as no other poet would have treated it, because he saw the exact relations of the contending principle to the future great history of mankind. The death of Cæsar was not his catastrophe: it was the death of the Roman Republic at Philippi.

Of all Shakspeare's characters none require to be studied with more patient attention than those of Brutus and Cassius, that we may understand the resemblances and the differences of each. The leading distinctions between these two remarkable men, as drawn by Shakspeare, appear to us to be these: Brutus acts wholly upon principle; Cassius partly upon impulse. Brutus acts only when he has reconciled the contemplation of action with his speculative opinions; Cassius allows the necessity of some action to run before and govern his opinions. Brutus is a philosopher; Cassius is a partisan. Brutus therefore deliberates and spares; Cassius precipitates and denounces. Brutus is the nobler instructor; Cassius the better politician. Shakspeare, in the first great scene between them, brings out these distinctions of character upon which future events so mainly detect a want of art; and drawn by Shakspeare, has been drawn below the historical colour, but as representing him in that Shakspeare was wholly of the action of this drama of power, was haunted by desiring the title of king. For cause that made him more desire he had to be called upon which the whole act turns. There might have been the subject. The death of the catastrophe. The monarchical principles might have been the subject. The republican principles might have been the subject. The death of Cæsar; and previously held the balance between the two principles. We have claimed, indeed, our principles of Cæsar and his principles of Cæsar's greatness and chose another course. An ready slippancy, of ignorant wanted classical knowledge trouble? "The fault of the plot," says Hazlitt. The truth had he said—the character of the plot. While Cæsar is upon the plot. While Cæsar is upon the poet, largely interpreting the ward workings of "the called king;" and most a notions of characterization together we profess to receive of Cæsar with a perfect character that character upon fixed the prominent character of the plot to be. It is true

JULIUS CÆSAR.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

JULIUS CÆSAR. Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1. SAR, a triumvir after the death of Julius Cæsar. Act IV. sc. 1. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 5. NIUS, a triumvir after the death of Julius Cæsar. Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 4; sc. 5. PIDUS, a triumvir after the death of Julius Cæsar. Act III. sc. 1. Act IV. sc. 1. CICERO, a senator. Act I. sc. 2; sc. 3. PUBLIUS, a senator. Act II. sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1. ILIUS LENA, a senator. Appears, Act III. sc. 1. a conspirator against Julius Cæsar. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 4; sc. 5. inspirator against Julius Cæsar. Act II. sc. 1. Act III. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 3. spirator against Julius Cæsar. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1. conspirator against Julius Cæsar. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1. onspirator against Julius Cæsar. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2. a conspirator against Julius Cæsar. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1. BER, a conspirator against Julius Cæsar. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1. spirator against Julius Cæsar. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act III. sc. 1. LAVIUS, a tribune. Appears, Act I. sc. 1.	MARULLUS, a tribune. Appears, Act I. sc. 1. ARTEMIDORUS, a sophist of Cnidos. Appears, Act II. sc. 3. Act III. sc. 1. A Soothsayer. Appears, Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 4. Act III. sc. 1. CINNA, a poet. Appears, Act III. sc. 3. A Poet. Appears, Act IV. sc. 3. LUCILIUS, a friend to Brutus and Cassius. Appears, Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 3. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 3; sc. 4; sc. 5. TITINIUS, a friend to Brutus and Cassius. Appears, Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 3. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 3. MESSALA, a friend to Brutus and Cassius. Appears, Act IV. sc. 3. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5. Young CATO, a friend to Brutus and Cassius. Appears, Act V. sc. 3; sc. 4. VOLUMNIUS, a friend to Brutus and Cassius. Appears, Act V. sc. 3; sc. 5. VARRO, servant to Brutus. Appears, Act IV. sc. 3. CLITUS, servant to Brutus. Appears, Act V. sc. 5. CLAUDIUS, servant to Brutus. Appears, Act IV. sc. 3. STRATO, servant to Brutus. Appears, Act V. sc. 3; sc. 5. LUCIUS, servant to Brutus. Appears, Act II. sc. 1; sc. 4. Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 3. DARDANIUS, servant to Brutus. Appears, Act V. sc. 5. PINDARUS, servant to Cassius. Appears, Act IV. sc. 2. Act V. sc. 3. CALPHURNIA, wife to Cæsar. Appears, Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2. PORTIA, wife to Brutus. Appears, Act I. sc. 2; Act II. sc. 1; sc. 4. Senators, Citizens, Guards, Attendants, &amp;c.
--	--

A GREAT PART OF THE PLAY AT ROME: AFTERWARDS AT SARDIS; AND NEAR PHILIPPI.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

MARULLUS, and a rabble of Citizens.
Come, you idle creatures, get you

What! know you not,
you ought not walk,
lay, without the sign
—Speak, what trade art thou?
a carpenter.

Why, leather apron, and thy rule?
Is thy best apparel on?—
What art thou?
In respect of a fine workman, I am a cobbler.
What trade art thou? Answer me directly.

2 Cit. A trade, sir, that I hope I may use with a safe conscience; which is, indeed, sir, a mender of bad soles.

Flav. What trade, thou knave? thou naughty knave,
what trade?

2 Cit. Nay, I beseech you, sir, be not out with me:
yet if you be out, sir, I can mend you.

Mar. What meanest thou by that? Mend me, thou saucy fellow!

2 Cit. Why, sir, cobble you.

Flav. Thou art a cobbler, art thou?

* The modern editors give this speech to Marullus; and they propose other changes in the allotment of the speeches to the tribunes. They assume that only one should take the lead; whereas it is clear that the dialogue is more natural, certainly more dramatic, according to the original arrangement, where Flavius and Marullus alternately rate the people, like two smiths smiting on the same anvil.

2 Cit. Truly, sir, all that I live by is with the awl : I meddle with no tradesman's matters, nor women's matters, but with all. I am, indeed, sir, a surgeon to old shoes ; when they are in great danger, I recover them. As proper men as ever trod upon neat's-leather have gone upon my handiwork.

Flav. But wherefore art not in thy shop to-day ? Why dost thou lead these men about the streets ?

2 Cit. Truly, sir, to wear out their shoes, to get myself into more work. But, indeed, sir, we make holiday, to see Cæsar, and to rejoice in his triumph.

Mar. Wherefore rejoice ? What conquest brings he home ?

What tributaries follow him to Rome,
To grace in captive bonds his chariot-wheels ?
You blocks, you stones, you worse than senseless things !
O, you hard hearts, you cruel men of Rome,
Knew you not Pompey ? Many a time and oft
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
To towers and windows, yea, to chimney-tops,
Your infants in your arms, and there have sat
The livelong day, with patient expectation,
To see great Pompey pass the streets of Rome :
And when you saw his chariot but appear,
Have you not made an universal shout,
That Tiber trembled underneath her banks,
To hear the replication of your sounds,
Made in her concave shores ?

And do you now put on your best attire ?
And do you now cull out a holiday ?
And do you now strew flowers in his way,
That comes in triumph over Pompey's blood ?
Be gone !

Run to your houses, fall upon your knees,
Pray to the gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this ingratitude.

Flav. Go, go, good countrymen, and, for this fault,
Assemble all the poor men of your sort ;
Draw them to Tiber banks, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. [Ex. Citizens.]
See, wher their basest metal be not mov'd ;
They vanish tongue-tied in their guiltiness.
Go you down that way towards the Capitol ;
This way will I : Disrobe the images,
If you do find them deck'd with ceremonies.

Mar. May we do so ?
You know it is the feast of Lupercal.

Flav. It is no matter ; let no images
Be hung with Cæsar's trophies. I'll about,
And drive away the vulgar from the streets :
So do you too, where you perceive them thick.
These growing feathers pluck'd from Cæsar's wing
Will make him fly an ordinary pitch ;
Who else would soar above the view of men,
And keep us all in servile fearfulness. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. A public Place.

Enter, in procession, with music, CÆSAR ; ANTONY, for the course ; CALPHURNIA, PORTIA, DECIUS, CICERO, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, and CASCA, a great crowd following ; among them a Soothsayer.

Cæs. Calphurnia,—

Casca. Peace, ho ! Cæsar speaks. [Music ceases.]
Cæs. Calphurnia,—

Cal. Here, my lord.

Cæs. Stand you directly in Antonius' way,
When he doth run his course.—Antonius,—
Ant. Cæsar, my lord.

Cæs. Forget not, in your speed, Antonius,
To touch Calphurnia : for our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Ke off their steril curse.

Ant. I shall remember ;
When Cæsar says " Do this," it is perform'd.

Cæs. Set on ; and leave no ceremony out.

Sooth. Cæsar.

Cæs. Ha ! Who calls ?
Casca. Bid every noise be still :—Peace !

Cæs. Who is it in the press that calls on a
I hear a tongue, shriller than all the music,
Cry, Cæsar : Speak ; Cæsar is turn'd to hear.

Sooth. Beware the ides of March.
Cæs. What are you ?

Bru. A soothsayer bids you beware the ides
Cæs. Set him before me ; let me see his face.

Cæs. Fellow, come from the throng : I Cæsar.

Cæs. What say'st thou to me now ? Speak
Sooth. Beware the ides of March.

Cæs. He is a dreamer ; let us leave him :— [Senet. Exeunt all but Brutus.]

Cæs. Will you go see the order of the court ?
Bru. Not I.

Cæs. I pray you, do.
Bru. I am not gamesome : I do lack some

Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.
Let me not hinder, Cassius, your desires ;
I'll leave you.

Cæs. Brutus, I do observe you now of late
I have not from your eyes that gentleness,
And show of love, as I was wont to have :
You bear too stubborn and too strange a hand
Over your friend that loves you.

Bru. Cassius,
Be not deceiv'd : If I have veil'd my look,
I turn the trouble of my countenance
Merely upon myself. Vexed I am,
Of late, with passions of some difference,
Conceptions only proper to myself,
Which give some soil, perhaps, to my behavior ;
But let not therefore my good friends be grieved (Among which number, Cassius, be you not)
Nor construe any further my neglect,
Than that poor Brutus, with himself at war,
Forgets the shows of love to other men.

Cæs. Then, Brutus, I have much mistook
By means whereof this breast of mine hath Thoughts of great value, worthy cogitations.
Tell me, good Brutus, can you see your face ?

Bru. No, Cassius : for the eye sees not itself,
But by reflection, by some other things.

Cæs. 'T is just :
And it is very much lamented, Brutus,
That you have no such mirrors as will show
Your hidden worthiness into your eye,
That you might see your shadow. I have seen
Where many of the best respect in Rome
(Except immortal Cæsar,) speaking of Brutus,
And groaning underneath this age's yoke,
Have wish'd that noble Brutus had his eyes.

Bru. Into what dangers would you lead me
That you would have me seek into myself
For that which is not in me ?

Cæs. Therefore, good Brutus, be prepar'd to
And, since you know you cannot see yourself,
So well as by reflection, I, your glass,
Will modestly discover to yourself
That of yourself which you yet know not of.
And be not jealous on me, gentle Brutus :
Were I a common laughèr, or did use
To stale with ordinary oaths my love
To every new protestor ; if you know
That I do fawn on men, and hug them hard,
And after scandal them ; or if you know myself in haughting

; then hold me dangerous.
[Flourish and shout. means this shouting? I do fear the le
for their king.

Ay, do you fear it?
sink you would not have it so. ld not, Cassius; yet I love him well:—
do you hold me here so long?
you would impart to me?
oward the general good,
ne eye, and death i' the other,
k on both indifferently:
ls so speed me as I love
onour more than I fear death.
r that virtue to be in you, Brutus,
I know your outward favour.
s the subject of my story.—
hat you and other men
ife; but, for my single self,
it be as live to be a thing as I myself.

as Cæsar; so were you:
fel as well; and we can both iter's cold as well as he:
a raw and gusty day,
Tiber chafing with her shores,
ne, "Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
re into this angry flood,
onder point?"—Upon the word,
was, I plunged in,
follow: so, indeed, he did.
r'd; and we did buffet it ews; throwing it aside
it with hearts of controversy.
ld arrive the point propos'd,
Help me, Cassius, or I sink."

ur great ancestor,
ames of Troy upon his shoulder
es bear, so, from the waves of Tiber Cæsar: And this man a god; and Cassius is ature, and must bend his body,
ssly but nod on him.
when he was in Spain,
fit was on him, I did mark
ake: 't is true, this god did shake:
s did from their colour fly;
eye whose bend doth awe the world
tre: I did hear him groan:
ngue of his that bade the Romans
write his speeches in their books.

"Give me some drink, Titinius."
Ye gods, it doth amaze me, a feeble temper should
of the majestic world, alm alone. [Shout. Flourish.
r general shout!

it these applauses are onours that are heap'd on Cæsar.
man, he doth bestride the narrow world, s; and we petty men
s huge legs, and peep about es dishonourable graves.
me are masters of their fates:
Brutus, is not in our stars,
s, that we are underlings.

rive without the preposition has an example in of Milton:—
"Who shall spread his airy flight, ne with indefatigable wings
he vast abrupt, ere he arrive
appy isle."

Brutus and Cæsar: What should be in that Cæsar?
Why should that name be sounded more than yours?
Write them together, yours is as fair a name;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well;
Weigh them, it is as heavy; conjure with them,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar. [Shout.
Now in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed,
That he is grown so great? Age, thou art sham'd!
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods!
When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man?
When could they say, till now, that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide walks encompass'd but one man?
Now is it Rome indeed, and room enough,
When there is in it but one only man.
O! you and I have heard our fathers say,
There was a Brutus once that would have brook'd
The eternal devil to keep his state in Rome,
As easily as a king.

Bru. That you do love me, I am nothing jealous;
What you would work me to, I have some aim;
How I have thought of this, and of these times,
I shall recount hereafter; for this present,
I would not, so with love I might entreat you,
Be any further mov'd. What you have said,
I will consider; what you have to say,
I will with patience hear: and find a time
Both meet to hear and answer such high things.
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this;
Brutus had rather be a villager,
Than to repute himself a son of Rome
Under these hard conditions as this time
Is like to lay upon us.

Cas. I am glad that my weak words
Have struck but thus much show of fire from Brutus.

Re-enter CÆSAR and his Train.

Bru. The games are done, and Cæsar is returning
Cas. As they pass by, pluck Casca by the sleeve;
And he will, after his sour fashion, tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to-day.

Bru. I will do so:—But, look you, Cassius,
The angry spot doth glow on Cæsar's brow,
And all the rest look like a chidden train:
Calphurnia's cheek is pale; and Cicero
Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes,
As we have seen him in the Capitol,
Being cross'd in conference by some senators.

Cas. Casca will tell us what the matter is.

Cas. Antonius.

Ant. Cæsar.

Cas. Let me have men about me that are fat;
Sleek-headed men, and such as sleep o' nights:
Yond' Cassius has a lean and hungry look;
He thinks too much: such men are dangerous.

Ant. Fear him not, Cæsar, he's not dangerous;
He is a noble Roman, and well given.

Cas. 'Would he were fatter:—But I fear him not Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much;
He is a great observer, and he looks
Quite through the deeds of men: he loves no plays,
As thou dost, Antony; he hears no music;
Seldom he smiles; and smiles in such a sort
As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at anything.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves;
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Than what I fear, for always I am Cæsar.
Come on my right hand, for this ear is deaf.

And tell me truly what thou think'st of him.

[Exeunt CÆSAR and his Train. CASCA stays behind.]

Casca. You pull'd me by the cloak: Would you speak with me?

Bru. Ay, Casca; tell us what hath chanc'd to-day, That Cæsar looks so sad?

Casca. Why, you were with him, were you not?

Bru. I should not then ask Casca what had chanc'd.

Casca. Why, there was a crown offer'd him: and being offer'd him, he put it by with the back of his hand, thus; and then the people fell a' shouting.

Bru. What was the second noise for?

Casca. Why, for that too.

Cas. They shouted thrice: What was the last cry for?

Casca. Why, for that too.

Bru. Was the crown offer'd him thrice?

Casca. Ay, marry was 't, and he put it by thrice, every time gentler than other; and at every putting by, mine honest neighbours shouted.

Cas. Who offer'd him the crown?

Casca. Why, Antony.

Bru. Tell us the manner of it, gentle Casca.

Casca. I can as well be hanged as tell the manner of it: it was mere foolery. I did not mark it. I saw Mark Antony offer him a crown;—yet 't was not a crown neither, 't was one of these coronets;—and, as I told you, he put it by once; but for all that, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Then he offer'd it to him again; then he put it by again: but, to my thinking, he was very loth to lay his fingers off it. And then he offer'd it the third time; he put it the third time by: and still as he refused it, the rabblement hooted, and clapped their chapped hands, and threw up their sweaty nightcaps, and uttered such a deal of stinking breath because Cæsar refused the crown, that it had almost choked Cæsar; for he swooned, and fell down at it: And for mine own part, I durst not laugh, for fear of opening my lips and receiving the bad air.

Cas. But, soft, I pray you: What? Did Cæsar swoon?

Casca. He fell down in the market-place, and foamed at mouth, and was speechless.

Bru. 'T is very like: he hath the falling sickness.

Cas. No, Cæsar hath it not; but you, and I, and honest Casca, we have the falling sickness.

Casca. I know not what you mean by that; but I am sure Cæsar fell down. If the tag-rag people did not clap him, and hiss him, according as he pleased and displeas'd them, as they used to do the players in the theatre, I am no true man.

Bru. What said he, when he came unto himself?

Casca. Marry, before he fell down, when he perceived the common herd was glad he refused the crown, he plucked me ope his doublet, and offer'd them his throat to cut.—An I had been a man of any occupation, if I would not have taken him at a word, I would I might go to hell among the rogues:—and so he fell. When he came to himself again, he said, If he had done or said anything amiss, he desired their worships to think it was his infirmity. Three or four wenches, where I stood, cried "Alas, good soul!"—and forgave him with all their hearts: But there's no heed to be taken of them; if Cæsar had stabbed their mothers they would have done no less.

Bru. And after that he came, thus sad, away?

Casca. Ay.

Did Cicero say anything?

i. Ay, he spoke Greek.

To what effect?

Nay, an I tell you that I'll ne'er look you in the face again: But those that understood him smiled at one another, and shook their heads: mine own part, it was Greek to me. I can give you more news too: Marullus and Flavius, the scarfs off Cæsar's images, are put to silence well. There was more foolery yet, if I can but remember it.

Cas. Will you sup with me to-night, Cæsar?

Casca. No, I am promis'd forth.

Cas. Will you dine with me to-morrow?

Casca. Ay, if I be alive, and your mind be as good as your dinner worth the eating.

Cas. Good; I will expect you.

Casca. Do so: farewell both.

Bru. What a blunt fellow is this grown Cæsar! He was quick mettle when he went to school.

Cas. So he is now, in execution of any bold or noble enterprise, However he puts on this tardy form.

This rudeness is a sauce to his good wit, Which gives men stomach to digest his words With better appetite.

Bru. And so it is. For this time I will leave you.

To-morrow, if you please to speak with me, I will come home to you; or, if you will, come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cas. I will do so:—till then, think of the business. [Exit]

Well, Brutus, thou art noble; yet, I see Thy honourable metal may be wrought From that it is dispos'd: Therefore 't is meet That noble minds keep ever with their likes; For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd? Cæsar doth bear me hard: But he loves Brutus. If I were Brutus now, and he were Cæsar, He should not humour me. I will this night In several hands, in at his windows throw, As if they came from several citizens, Writings, all tending to the great opinion That Rome holds of his name; wherein Cæsar's ambition shall be glanced at: And, after this, let Cæsar seat him sure; For we will shake him, or worse days ensue.

SCENE III.—The same. A Street.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter, from opposite sides, CASCA, with his sword drawn, and CICERO.

Cic. Good even, Casca: Brought you home?

Why are you breathless? and why stare you? Casca. Are not you mov'd, when all the earth

Shakes like a thing unfirm? O Cæsar, I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds Have riv'd the knotty oaks; and I have seen The ambitious ocean swell, and rage, and do, To be exalted with the threatening clouds: But never till to-night, never till now, Did I go through a tempest dropping fire. Either there is a civil strife in heaven; Or else the world, too saucy with the gods, Incenses them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you anything more remarkable?

Casca. A common slave (you know one by sight) Held up his left hand, which did flame and burn Like twenty torches join'd; and yet his hand, Not sensible of fire, remained unscorch'd. Besides, (I have not since put up my sword) Against the Capitol I met a lion,

* To bring one on his way was to seem just.

me, and went surly by me: and there were drawn hundred ghostly women, their fear; who swore they saw folk up and down the streets.
The bird of night did sit,
upon the market-place,
singing. When these prodigies meet, let not men say reasons,—They are natural;”
they are portentous things that they point upon.
It is a strange-disposed time:
Strange things, after their fashion,
in response of the things themselves.
The Capitol to-morrow?
No; for he did bid Antonius that he would be there to-morrow.
What then, Casca: this disturbed sky

Farewell, Cicero. [Exit CICERO.]

Enter CASSIUS.

Where?

A Roman.

What is good. Casca, by your voice.
What is good. Cassius, what night is this?—
Leaving night to honest men.
You never knew the heavens menace so?
It has known the earth so full of

we walk'd about the streets,
into the perilous night;
And, Casca, as you see,
as soon to the thunder-stone:
The red-blue lightning seem'd to open the heaven, I did present myself and very flash of it.
Therefore did you so much tempt the men to fear and tremble, mighty gods, by tokens, send signals to astonish us.

Hail, Casca; and those sparks of life that are a Roman you do want,
do not: You look pale, and gaze,
and cast yourself in wonder,
and impatience of the heavens:
Consider the true cause of this, why all these gliding ghosts, phantoms, from quality and kind;
Sons, and children calculate;
Signs change from their ordinance,
And pre-formed faculties,
And ability,—why, you shall find,
I infus'd them with these spirits, Instruments of fear and warning of your state.
Casca, name to thee a man
of a fearful night;
The lightning opens graves, and roars
in the Capitol:
Louder than thyself, or me,
The earth; yet prodigious grown,
And these strange eruptions are.
What Caesar that you mean: Is it not, Cassius?
Who it is: For Romans now are like to their ancestors, original has glaz'd. A well-known quotation given by Stevens, is decisive as to the word in the passage before us.—

Must no speculation in those eyes bea dost glare with?

But, woe the while! our fathers' minds are dead,
And we are govern'd with our mothers' spirits;
Our yoke and sufferance show us womanish.

Casca. Indeed they say the senators to-morrow
Mean to establish Caesar as a king:
And he shall wear his crown by sea and land,
In every place, save here in Italy.

Cas. I know where I will wear this dagger then;
Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius:
Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most strong;
Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat:
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit:
But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
Never lacks power to dismiss itself.
If I know this, know all the world besides,
That part of tyranny that I do bear
I can shake off at pleasure. [Thunder still.]

Casca. So can I:
So every bondman in his own hand bears
The power to cancel his captivity.

Cas. And why should Caesar be a tyrant then?
Poor man! I know he would not be a wolf,
But that he sees the Romans are but sheep:
He were no lion were not Romans hinds.
Those that with hands will make a mighty fire
Begin it with weak straws: What trash is Rome,
What rubbish, and what offal, when it serves
For the base matter to illuminate
So vile a thing as Caesar! But, O, grief!
Where hast thou led me? I, perhaps, speak this Before a willing bondman: then I know
My answer must be made: But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.

Casca. You speak to Casca; and to such a man
That is no fleeing tell-tale. Hold my hand:
Be factious* for redress of all these griefs;
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest.

Cas. There's a bargain made.
Now know you, Casca, I have mov'd already
Some certain of the noblest-minded Romans,
To undergo with me an enterprise
Of honourable-dangerous consequence;
And I do know by this they stay for me
In Pompey's porch: For now, this fearful night,
There is no stir or walking in the streets;
And the complexion of the element
In favour's like the work we have in hand,
Most bloody, fiery, and most terrible.

Enter CINNA.

Casca. Stand close awhile, for here comes one in haste.

Cas. 'T is Cinna, I do know him by his gait;
He is a friend.—Cinna, where haste you so?

Cin. To find out you: Who's that? Metellus Cimber?

Cas. No, it is Casca; one incorporate
To our attempts. Am I not staid for, Cinna?

Cin. I am glad on't. What a fearful night is this!
There's two or three of us have seen strange sights.

Cas. Am I not staid for? Tell me.

Cin. Yes, you are.
O, Cassius, if you could but win the noble Brutus
To our party—

Cas. Be you content: Good Cinna, take this paper
And look you, lay it in the praetor's chair,
Where Brutus may but find it; and throw this
In at his window: set this up with wax
Upon old Brutus' statue: all this done,

* Factions. To be factious, in its original sense, is to be doing; but Malone suggests that it means "embody a party or faction."

Repair to Pompey's porch, where you shall find us.
Is Decius Brutus, and Trebonius, there?

Cin. All, but Metellus Cimber; and he's gone
To seek you at your house. Well, I will bid,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me.

Cas. That done, repair to Pompey's theatre. [Ex. Cin.]
Come, Casca, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already; and the man entire,

Upon the next encounter, yields him ours.
Casca. O, he sits high in all the people's eyes,
And that which would appear offence in us,
His countenance, like richest alchymy,
Will change to virtue and to worthiness.
Cas. Him, and his worth, and our great
You have right well conceited. Let us go,
For it is after midnight; and ere day
We will awake him, and be sure of him.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The same. Brutus's Orchard.

Enter BRUTUS.

Bru. What, Lucius! ho!—
I cannot, by the progress of the stars,
Give guess how near to day.—Lucius, I say!—
I would it were my fault to sleep so soundly.—
When, Lucius, when!—Awake, I say! What, Lucius!

Enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Call'd you, my lord?
Bru. Get me a taper in my study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Luc. I will, my lord. [Exit.]

Bru. It must be by his death; and, for my part,
I know no personal cause to spurn at him,
But for the general. He would be crown'd:—
How that might change his nature, there's the question.
It is the bright day that brings forth the adder;
And that craves wary walking. Crown him?—That;—
And then, I grant, we put a sting in him,
That at his will he may do danger with.
The abuse of greatness is when it disjoins
Remorse<sup>b</sup> from power: And, to speak truth of Cæsar,
I have not known when his affections sway'd
More than his reason. But 't is a common proof
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber-upward turns his face:
But when he once attains the utmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend: So Cæsar may;
Then, lest he may, prevent. And, since the quarrel
Will bear no colour for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would run to these and these extremities:
And therefore think him as a serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would as his kind grow mischievous;
And kill him in the shell.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. The taper burneth in your closet, sir,
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper, thus seal'd up; and, I am sure,
It did not lie there when I went to bed.

Bru. Get you to bed again, it is not day.
't is not to-morrow, boy, the ides of March?

Luc. I know not, sir.

Bru. Look in the calendar, and bring me word.

Luc. I will, sir. [Exit.]

Bru. The exhalations, whizzing in the air,
Give so much light that I may read by them.

[Opens the letter, and reads.]
"Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake, and see thyself.
Shall Rome, &c. Speak, strike, redress!"

So in 'Richard II.'—

"When, Harry, when!"

<sup>a</sup> A common expression of impatience.

<sup>b</sup> Remorse—i. e. pity tenderness.

Brutus, thou sleep'st; awake!"—
Such instigations have been often dropp'd
Where I have took them up.
"Shall Rome, &c." Thus must I piece it Shall Rome stand under one man's awe? What My ancestors did from the streets of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a king
"Speak, strike, redress!"—Am I entreated
To speak, and strike? O Rome! I make thee
If the redress will follow, thou receivest
Thy full petition at the hand of Brutus!

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Sir, March is wasted fourteen days.

Bru. 'T is good. Go to the gate; some
[Exit.]

Since Cassius first did whet me against Cæsar,
I have not slept.
Between the acting of a dreadful thing
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream:
The genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council; and the state of a man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. Sir, 't is your brother Cassius<sup>b</sup> at the door,
Who doth desire to see you.

Bru. Is he alone?

Luc. No, sir, there are more with him.

Bru. Do you know

Luc. No, sir; their hats are pluck'd about ears,

And half their faces buried in their cloaks,
That by no means I may discover them
By any mark of favour.<sup>c</sup>

Bru. Let them enter. [Exit.]

They are the faction. O Conspiracy!
Sham'st thou to show thy dangerous brow by night,
When evils are most free? O, then, by day,
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage? Seek out spiracy;

Hide it in smiles and affability:
For if thou path,<sup>d</sup> thy native semblance show,
Not Erebus itself were dim enough
To hide thee from prevention.

<sup>a</sup> A man. So the original; but Steevens and other editors omit the article, which clearly explains what he intended it. A man individualizes the description; and the "genius" on the one hand, means the spirit, or the compelling higher power moving the spirit, while the "mortal instruments" has reference to the bodily powers which sets in action.

<sup>b</sup> Cassius had married Junia, the sister of Brutus.

<sup>c</sup> Favour—countenance.

<sup>d</sup> Path—walk on a trodden way—more forward motion.

CASCA, DECIVS, CINNA, METELLUS
IMBRI, and TREBONIUS.

we are too bold upon your rest :
Brutus. Do we trouble you ?
been up this hour ; awake all night.
men that come along with you ?
every man of them ; and no man here is : and every one doth wish at opinion of yourself
ble Roman fears of you
us.

He is welcome hither.
Decius Brutus.

He is welcome too.
Casca ; this, Cinna ; and this, Metellus Imbri.
We are all welcome.
We care do interpose themselves
at night ?
entreat a word ? [ They whisper.
The east : Doth not the day break on, sir, it doth ; and yon grey lines clouds are messengers of day.

I shall confess that you are both deceiv'd.
My sword, the sun arises ;
it way growing on the south,
the fruitful season of the year.
We hence, up higher toward the north his fire ; and the high east
Capitol, directly here.
We your hands all over, one by one.
I us swear our resolution.
I an oath : If not the face of men,
of our souls, the time's abuse,—
We are weak, break off betimes,
I hence to his idle bed ;
I led tyranny range on,
I drop by lottery. But if these,
I they do, bear fire enough
I rid, and to steel with valour
I rits of women ; then, countrymen,
I any spur but our own cause
I address ? what other bond,
I means, that have spoke the word,
I alter ? and what other oath,
I honesty engag'd,
I be, or we will fall for it ?
I and cowards, and men cautious,
I lions, and such suffering souls
I strong ; unto bad causes swear
I as men doubt : but do not stain
I of our enterprise,
I massive metal of our spirits,
I for our cause, or our performance,
I th ; when every drop of blood
I can bears, and nobly bears,
I several bastardy,
I he smallest particle
I that hath pass'd from him.
I at of Cicero ? Shall we sound him ?
I stand very strong with us.
I is not leave him out.

No, by no means.
We have him ; for his silver hairs
We as a good opinion,
I voices to commend our deeds ;
I his judgment rul'd our hands ;
I d wildness, shall no whit appear,
I ed in his gravity.
I e him not ; let us not break with him ;

Cautious—wary, circumspect.

For he will never follow anything
That other men begin.

Casca. Then leave him out.
Casca. Indeed, he is not fit.
Dec. Shall no man else be touch'd but only Cæsar ?
Casca. Decius, well urg'd :—I think it is not meet,
Mark Antony, so well belov'd of Cæsar,
Should outlive Cæsar : We shall find of him
A shrewd contriver ; and you know his means,
If he improve them, may well stretch so far
As to annoy us all : which to prevent,
Let Antony and Cæsar fall together.

Bru. Our course will seem too bloody, Caius Cassius,
To cut the head off, and then hack the limbs ;
Like wrath in death, and envy afterwards :
For Antony is but a limb of Cæsar.
Let us be sacrificers, but not butchers, Caius.
We all stand up against the spirit of Cæsar ;
And in the spirit of men there is no blood ;
O, that we then could come by Cæsar's spirit,
And not dismember Cæsar ! But, alas,
Cæsar must bleed for it ! And, gentle friends,
Let 's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully ;
Let 's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds ;
And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,
Stir up their servants to an act of rage,
And after seem to chide them. This shall make
Our purpose necessary, and not envious :
Which so appearing to the common eyes,
We shall be call'd purgers, not murderers.
And for Mark Antony, think not of him ;
For he can do no more than Cæsar's arm,
When Cæsar's head is off.

Casca. Yet I fear him :
For in the ingrafted love he bears to Cæsar,— Bru. Alas, good Cassius ! do not think of him :
If he love Cæsar, all that he can do
Is to himself,—take thought, and die for Cæsar :
And that were much he should ; for he is given
To sports, to wildness, and much company.
Treb. There is no fear in him ; let him not die ;
For he will live, and laugh at this hereafter.

[ Clock strikes
Bru. Peace ! count the clock.
Casca. The clock hath stricken three.
Treb. 'T is time to part.

Casca. But it is doubtful yet
Whether Cæsar will come forth to-day, or no :
For he is superstitious grown of late ;
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies ;
It may be, these apparent prodigies,
The unaccustom'd terror of this night,
And the persuasion of his augurers,
May hold him from the Capitol to-day.

Dec. Never fear that : If he be so resolv'd
I can o'ersway him : for he loves to hear
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes,
Lions with toils, and men with flatterers :
But when I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does ; being then most flattered.
Let me work :

For I can give his humour the true bent ;
And I will bring him to the Capitol.
Casca. Nay, we will all of us be there to fetch him.
Bru. By the eighth hour : Is that the uttermost ?
Cin. Be that the uttermost, and fail not then.
Met. Caius Ligarius doth bear Cæsar hard,
Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey ;
I wonder none of you have thought of him.
Bru. Now, good Metellus, go along by him ;<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> By him—by his house.

He loves me well, and I have given him reasons;
Send him but tidings, and I'll fashion him.

Cæs. The morning comes upon us: We'll leave you,
Brutus—

And, friends, disperse yourselves; but all remember
What you have said, and show yourselves true Romans.

Bru. Good gentlemen, look fresh and merrily;
Let not our looks put on our purposes;
But bear it as our Roman actors do,
With untir'd spirits and formal constancy:
And so, good morrow to you every one.

[Exeunt all but BRUTUS.]

Boy! Lucius!—Fast asleep! It is no matter;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber:
Thou hast no figures, nor no fantasies,
Which busy care drives in the brains of men:
Therefore thou sleepest so sound.

Enter PORTIA.

Por. Brutus, my lord!

Bru. Portia, what mean you? Wherefore rise you now?

It is not for your health thus to commit
Your weak condition to the raw-cold morning.

Por. Not for yours neither. You have ungently,
Brutus,

Stole from my bed: And yesternight, at supper,
You suddenly arose, and walk'd about,
Musing and sighing, with your arms across;
And when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You star'd upon me with ungentle looks:
I urg'd you further; then you scratch'd your head,
And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot:
Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not;
But, with an angry wafture of your hand,
Gave sign for me to leave you: So I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience
Which seem'd too much enkindled; and, withal,
Hoping it was but an effect of humour,
Which sometime hath his hour with every man.
It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep;
And, could it work so much upon your shape,
As it hath much prevail'd on your condition,
I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Bru. I am not well in health, and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wise, and were he not in health,
He would embrace the means to come by it.

Bru. Why, so I do:—Good Portia, go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sick? and is it physical
To walk unbraced, and suck up the humours
Of the dank morning? What is Brutus sick?
And will he steal out of his wholesome bed,
To dare the vile contagion of the night,
And tempt the rheumy and unpurged air
To add unto his sickness? No, my Brutus;
You have some sick offence within your mind,
Which, by the right and virtue of my place,
I ought to know of: And, upon my knees,
I beseech you, by my once commended beauty,
By all your vows of love, and that great vow
Which did incorporate and make us one,
That you unfold to me, yourself, your half,
Why you are heavy; and what men to-night
Have had resort to you: for here have been Some six or seven, who did hide their faces
From darkness.

Kneel not, gentle Portia.
I would not need, if you were gentle Brutus.
I should know no secrets
of marriage, tell me, Brutus,
I should know no secrets
to you? Am I yourself in sort or limitation;
or at meals, comfort your bed,

And talk to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the
Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus' harlot, not his wife.

Bru. You are my true and honourable wife,
As dear to me as are the ruddy drops
That visit my sad heart.

Por. If this were true, then should I know it
I grant I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman that lord Brutus took to wife:
I grant I am a woman; but, withal,
A woman well-reputed,—Cato's daughter.
Think you I am no stronger than my sex,
Being so father'd, and so husbanded?
Tell me your counsels, I will not disclose them:
I have made strong proof of my constancy,
Giving myself a voluntary wound
Here, in the thigh: Can I bear that with patience
And not my husband's secrets?

Bru. O ye gods,
Render me worthy of this noble wife!

[Knocking.]

Hark, hark! one knocks: Portia, go in awhile;
And by and by thy bosom shall partake
The secrets of my heart.

All my engagements I will construe to thee,
All the character of my sad brows:—
Leave me with haste. [Exit Por.]

Enter LUCIUS and LIGARIUS.

Lucius, who 's that knock?

Luc. Here is a sick man that would speak with Bru. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of—Boy, stand aside.—Caius Ligarius! how?

Lig. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue.
Bru. O, what a time have you chose out, leave
To wear a kerchief! 'Would you were not sick!

Lig. I am not sick, if Brutus have it hand
Any exploit worthy the name of honour.

Bru. Such an exploit have I in hand, Ligarius,
Had you a healthful ear to hear of it.

Lig. By all the gods that Romans bow before,
I here discard my sickness! Soul of Rome!
Brave son, deriv'd from honourable lions!
Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up
My mortified spirit. Now bid me run
And I will strive with things impossible;
Yea, get the better of them. What 's to do?

Bru. A piece of work that will make sick men
Lig. But are not some whole that we must make sick?

Bru. That must be also. What it is, my Caius,
I shall unfold to thee, as we are going
To whom it must be done.

Lig. Set on your foot;
And, with a heart new fir'd, I follow you,
To do I know not what: but it sufficeth
That Brutus leads me on.

Bru. Follow me close. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—The same. A Room in Cæsar's Tent.
Thunder and lightning. Enter CÆSAR, in his night-gown.

Cæs. Nor heaven, nor earth, have been at part
to-night:

Thrice hath Calphurnia in her sleep cried out,
"Help, ho! they murder Cæsar!" Who's within?

Enter a Servant.

Serv. My lord?
Cæs. Go bid the priests do present sacrifices,
And bring me their opinions of success.

Serv. I will, my lord.

Enter CALPURNIA.

Cal. What aery you, Cæsar? Think you
forth?

SCENE III.—The same. A Street near the Capitol.

Enter ARTEMIDORUS, reading a paper.

Art. "CÆSAR, beware of Brutus; take heed of Cassius; come not near Casca; have an eye to Cinna; trust not Trebonius; mark well Metellus Cimber; Decius Brutus loves thee not; thou hast wronged Calpurnius. There is but one mind in all these men, and it is bent against Cæsar. If thou beest not immortal, look about you. Security gives way to conspiracy. The mighty gods defend thee! Thy lover,"

"ARTEMIDORUS"

Here will I stand till Cæsar pass along,
And as a suitor will I give him this.
My heart laments that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.
If thou read this, O Cæsar, thou mayst live:
If not, the Fates with traitors do contrive. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The same. Another part of the same Street, before the House of Brutus.

Enter PORTIA and LUCIUS.

Por. I prithee, boy, run to the senate-house;
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone:
Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand, madam.

Por. I would have had thee there, and here again,
Ere I can tell thee what thou shouldst do there.—
O constancy, be strong upon my side!
Set a huge mountain 'tween my heart and tongue!
I have a man's mind, but a woman's might.
How hard it is for women to keep counsel!—
Art thou here yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?
Run to the Capitol, and nothing else?
And so return to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word, boy, if thy lord look well,
For he went sickly forth: And take good note

What Cæsar doth, what suitors press to him.

Hark, boy! what noise is that?

Luc. I hear none, madam.

Por.

Prithee, listen with

I heard a bustling rumour, like a fay,
And the wind brings it from the Capitol.

Luc. Sooth, madam, I hear nothing.

Enter Soothsayer.

Por.

Come hither, boy

Which way hast thou been?

Sooth. At mine own house, good lady.

Por. What is 't o'clock?

Sooth. About the ninth hour.

Por. Is Cæsar yet gone to the Capitol?

Sooth. Madam, not yet; I go to take my stand
To see him pass on to the Capitol.

Por. Thou hast some suit to Cæsar, hast thou not?

Sooth. That I have, lady: if it will please Cæsar
To be so good to Cæsar as to hear me,
I shall beseech him to befriend himself.

Por. Why, know'st thou any harm's intended wards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be, much that I may chance.

Good morrow to you. Here the street is nam'd:
The throng that follows Cæsar at the heels,
Of senators, of prætors, common suitors,
Will crowd a feeble man almost to death:
I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. [Exit.

Por. I must go in.—Ah me! how weak a thing
The heart of woman is! O Brutus!
The heavens speed thee in thine enterprise!
Sure, the boy heard me:—Brutus hath a suit
That Cæsar will not grant.—O, I grow faint:—
Run, Lucius, and commend me to my lord;
Say I am merry: come to me again,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same. The Capitol; the Senate sitting.

A crowd of people in the street leading to the Capitol; among them ARTEMIDORUS and the Soothsayer. Flourish. Enter CÆSAR, BRUTUS, CASSIUS, CASCA, DECIUS, METELLUS, TREBONIUS, CINNA, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, POPILIUS, PUBLIUS, and others.

Cæs. The ides of March are come.

Sooth. Ay, Cæsar; but not gone.

Art. Hail, Cæsar! Read this schedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to o'er-read,
At your best leisure, this his humble suit.

Art. O, Cæsar, read mine first: for mine's a suit
That touches Cæsar nearer: Read it, great Cæsar.

Cæs. What touches us ourself shall be last serv'd.

Art. Delay not, Cæsar; read it instantly.

Cæs. What, is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirrah, give place.

Cæs. What, urge you your petitions in the street?
Come to the Capitol.

CÆSAR enters the Capitol, the rest following. All the Senators rise.

Pop. I wish your enterprise to-day may thrive.

Cæs. What enterprise, Popilius?

Pop. Fare you well.

[Advances to CÆSAR.]

Bru. What said Popilius Lena?

Cæs. He wish'd, to-day our enterprise might thrive:
I fear our purpose is discovered.

Bru. Look, how he makes to Cæsar: Mark him.

Cæs. Casca, be sudden, for we fear prevention—Brutus, what shall be done? If this be known, Cassius or Cæsar never shall turn back,
For I will slay myself.

Bru. Cassius, be constant:

Popilius Lena speaks not of our purposes;
For, look, he smiles, and Cæsar doth not change.

Cæs. Trebonius knows his time; for, look you, Brutus,
He draws Mark Antony out of the way.

[Exit ANTONY and TREBONIUS. CÆSAR and the Senators take their seats.]

Dec. Where is Metellus Cimber? Let him go,
And presently prefer his suit to Cæsar.

Bru. He is address'd: * press near, and second him.

Cin. Casca, you are the first that rear your hand.

Cæs. Are we all ready? what is now amiss?

That Cæsar, and his senate, must remove?

Met. Most high, most mighty, and most powerful

Cæsar,

Metellus Cimber throws before thy seat

An humble heart:—

Cæs. I must prevent thee, Cimber.

These couchings, and these lowly courtesies,

Might fire the blood of ordinary men;

And turn pre-ordinance, and first decree,

* Address'd—address'd.

of children. Be not fond,
 That Caesar bears such rebel blood,
 That thaw'd from the true quality
 Of such melteth fools; I mean sweet words,
 Flattering, and base spaniel fawning.
 By decree is banished:
 Send, and pray, and fawn, for him,
 Like a cur, out of my way.
 For doth not wrong: nor without cause Justified.

There is no voice more worthy than my own,
 To speak sweetly in great Cæsar's ear,
 To tell of my banish'd brother?
 I'll touch his hand, but not in flattery, Cæsar;
 That Publius Cimber may
 Have free mediation for repeal.
 Enter BRUTUS.

Pardon, Cæsar: Cæsar, pardon:
 Thy foot doth Cassius fall,
 Thy speech doth fire the blood,
 To set on fire the ambition for Publius Cimber.
 It would be well mov'd if I were as you;
 For I would move, and prayers would move me:
 As constant as the northern star,
 So fixed and resting quality
 Have I in the firmament.

Painted with unnumber'd sparks,
 Fire, and every one doth shine;
 But one in all doth hold his place:
 So I will furnish'd well with men,
 With blood, and apprehensive;
 For I do know but one
 That holds on his rank,
 And motion: and, that I am he,
 I'll show it,—even in this,
 That constant Cimber should be banish'd,
 And that I do remain to keep him so.

Enter CÆSAR.—
 Hence! wilt thou lift up Olympus?
 Enter CÆSAR.—

Doth not Brutus bootless kneel?
 Speak, hands, for me.

He stabs CÆSAR in the neck. CÆSAR catches of his arm. He is then stabbed by several conspirators, and at last by MARCUS BRUTUS.

*Brutus falls, Cæsar.
 Dies. The senators and people retire in confusion.*

Freedom! Tyranny is dead!—
 Proclaim, cry it about the streets,
 To the common pulpits, and cry out,
 Liberty, and enfranchisement!
 Senators! be not affrighted;
 And still—ambition's debt is paid.
 To the pulpit, Brutus.

And Cassius too.
 Where's Publius?

Quite confounded with this mutiny.
 Stand fast together, lest some friend of Cæsar's
 Come—
 Not of standing;—Publius, good cheer;
 My arm intended to your person,
 I'll leave you else: so tell them, Publius.
 Leave us, Publius; lest that the people,
 As you should do your age some mischief,
 So—and let no man abide this deed
 Of ours.

Re-enter TREBONIUS.

Where is Antony?
 To his house amaz'd:
 Children stare, cry out, and run,
 As wondrously on a day.
 We'll know your pleasures:—

That we shall die we know; 't is but the time,
 And drawing days out, that men stand upon.

Casca. Why he that cuts off twenty years of life
 Cuts off so many years of fearing death.

Bru. Grant that, and then is death a benefit:
 So are we Cæsar's friends, that have abridg'd
 His time of fearing death.—Stoop, Romans, stoop,
 And let us bathe our hands in Cæsar's blood
 Up to the elbows, and besmear our swords:
 Then walk we forth, even to the market-place;
 And waving our red weapons o'er our heads,
 Let's all cry, Peace, Freedom, and Liberty!

Cas. Stoop then, and wash.—How many ages hence Shall this our lofty scene be acted over,
 In states unborn, and accents yet unknown!

Bru. How many times shall Cæsar bleed in sport,
 That now on Pompey's basis lies along,
 No worthier than the dust!

Cas. So oft as that shall be,
 So often shall the knot of us be call'd
 The men that gave their country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth?

Cas. Ay, every man away:
 Brutus shall lead; and we will grace his heels
 With the most boldest and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Servant.

Bru. Soft, who comes here? A friend of Antony's.

Serv. Thus, Brutus, did my master bid me kneel:
 Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall down;
 And, being prostrate, thus he bade me say:
 Brutus is noble, wise, valiant, and honest;
 Cæsar was mighty, bold, royal, and loving;
 Say, I lov'd Brutus, and I honour him;
 Say, I fear'd Cæsar, honour'd him, and lov'd him.

If Brutus will vouchsafe that Antony
 May safely come to him, and be resolv'd
 How Cæsar hath deserv'd to lie in death,
 Mark Antony shall not love Cæsar dead
 So well as Brutus living; but will follow
 The fortunes and affairs of noble Brutus,
 Thorough the hazards of this untrod state,
 With all true faith. So says my master Antony.

Bru. Thy master is a wise and valiant Roman;
 I never thought him worse.
 Tell him, so please him, come unto this place,
 He shall be satisfied; and, by my honour,
 Depart untouch'd.

Serv. I'll fetch him presently. [Exit Servant]

Bru. I know that we shall have him well to friend.
Cas. I wish we may: but yet have I a mind
 That fears him much; and my misgiving still Falls shrewdly to the purpose.

Re-enter ANTONY.

Bru. But here comes Antony.—Welcome, Mark Antony.

Ant. O mighty Cæsar! dost thou lie so low?
 Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
 Shrunk to this little measure?—Fare thee well.—
 I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,
 Who else must be let blood, who else is rank:
 If I myself, there is no hour so fit
 As Cæsar's death's hour; nor no instrument
 Of half that worth as those your swords, made rich
 With the most noble blood of all this world.
 I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard,
 Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and smoke,
 Fulfill your pleasure. Live a thousand years,
 I shall not find myself so apt to die:
 No place will please me so, no mean of death,
 As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off,
 The choice and master spirits of this age.

Bru. O Antony! beg not your death of us.

Though now we must appear bloody and cruel,
As, by our hands and this our present act,
You see we do, yet see you but our hands,
And this the bleeding business they have done :
Our hearts you see not, they are pitiful ;
And pity to the general wrong of Rome
(As fire drives out fire, so pity, pity)
Hath done this deed on Cæsar. For your part,
To you our swords have leaden points, Mark Antony :
Our arms, in strength of malice, and our hearts,
Of brothers' temper, do receive you in
With all kind love, good thoughts, and reverence.

Cas. Your voice shall be as strong as any man's
In the disposing of new dignities.

Bru. Only be patient, till we have appeas'd
The multitude, beside themselves with fear ;
And then we will deliver you the cause,
Why I, that did love Cæsar when I struck him,
Have thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your wisdom.
Let each man render me his bloody hand :
First, Marcus Brutus, will I shake with you ;
Next, Caius Cassius, do I take your hand ;
Now, Decius Brutus, yours ;—now yours, Metellus ;
Yours, Cinna ;—and, my valiant Casca, yours ;—
Though last, not least in love, yours, good Trebonius.
Gentlemen all,—alas ! what shall I say ?
My credit now stands on such slippery ground,
That one of two bad ways you must conceit me,
Either a coward or a flatterer.—
That I did love thee, Cæsar, O, 't is true :
If then thy spirit look upon us now,
Shall it not grieve thee, dearer than thy death
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy foes,
Most noble ! in the presence of thy corpse ?
Had I as many eyes as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they stream forth thy blood,
It would become me better than to close
In terms of friendship with thine enemies.
Pardon me, Julius !—Here wast thou bay'd, brave hart ;

Here didst thou fall ; and here thy hunters stand,
Sign'd in thy spoil, and crimson'd in thy lethe.
O world ! thou wast the forest to this hart ;
And this, indeed, O world, the heart of thee.—
How like a deer, stricken by many princes,
Dost thou here lie !

Cas. Mark Antony,—
Ant. Pardon me, Caius Cassius ;
The enemies of Cæsar shall say this ;
Then in a friend it is cold modesty.

Cas. I blame you not for praising Cæsar so ;
But what compact mean you to have with us ?
Will you be prick'd in number of our friends ;
Or shall we on, and not depend on you ?

Ant. Therefore I took your hands ; but was, indeed, Sway'd from the point, by looking down on Cæsar.
Friends am I with you all, and love you all ;
Upon this hope, that you shall give me reasons
Why and wherein Cæsar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a savage spectacle.
Our reasons are so full of good regard,
That were you, Antony, the son of Cæsar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That 's all I seek :
And am moreover suitor that I may Produce his body to the market-place ;
And in the pulpit, as becomes a friend,
Speak in the order of his funeral.

Bru. You shall, Mark Antony.

Cas. Brutus, a word with you.—
You know not what you do : Do not consent
That Antony speak in his funeral :

Know you how much the people may be mov'd
By that which he will utter ?

Bru. By your pardon ;—
I will myself into the pulpit first,
And show the reason of our Cæsar's death ;
What Antony shall speak, I will protest
He speaks by leave and by permission,
And that we are contented Cæsar shall
Have all true rites and lawful ceremonies.
It shall advantage more than do us wrong.

Cas. I know not what may fall : I like it not.

Bru. Mark Antony, here, take you Cæsar's body
You shall not in your funeral speech blame us,
But speak all good you can devise of Cæsar ;
And say you do 't by our permission ;
Else shall you not have any hand at all
About his funeral : And you shall speak
In the same pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so ;
I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow us.
[Exeunt all but Antony.]

Ant. O, pardon me, thou bleeding piece of earth,
That I am meek and gentle with these butchers !
Thou art the ruins of the noblest man
That ever lived in the tide of times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly blood !
Over thy wounds now do I prophesy,—
Which, like dumb mouths, do ope their ruby lips,
To beg the voice and utterance of my tongue,—
A curse shall light upon the limbs of men ;
Domestic fury, and fierce civil strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy ;
Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
And dreadful objects so familiar,
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quarter'd with the hands of war ;
All pity chok'd with custom of fell deeds ;
And Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Atë by his side, come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,
Cry "Havock,"<sup>a</sup> and let slip the dogs of war ;
That this foul deed shall smell above the earth
With carrion men groaning for burial.

Enter a Servant.

You serve Octavius Cæsar, do you not ?
Serv. I do, Mark Antony.

Ant. Cæsar did write for him to come to Rome.

Serv. He did receive his letters, and is coming
And bid me say to you by word of mouth,—
O Cæsar !— [Seeing the lord]

Ant. Thy heart is big ; get thee apart and weep.
Passion, I see, is catching ; for mine eyes,
Seeing those beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy master coming ?

Serv. He lies to-night within seven leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post back with speed, and tell him what chanc'd :

Here is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octavius yet ;
Hie hence, and tell him so. Yet stay awhile ;
Thou shalt not back till I have borne this corpse
Into the market-place : there shall I try,
In my oration, how the people take
The cruel issue of these bloody men ;
According to the which thou shalt disclose
To young Octavius of the state of things.
Lend me your hand. [Exeunt, with Cæsar's body]

<sup>a</sup> Havock, according to Sir William Blackstone, was a military operation of ancient times, the word by which you was made that no quarter should be given.

NE II.—The same. The Forum.

us and CASSIUS, and a throng of Citizens.
will be satisfied; let us be satisfied.
follow me, and give me audience, friends—
you into the other street, numbers.—

ill hear me speak, let them stay here;
ill follow Cassius, go with him;
reasons shall be rendered leath.

I will hear Brutus speak.

ill hear Cassius; and compare their reasons,
illy we hear them rendered.

[Exit CASSIUS, with some of the Citizens.

BRUTUS goes into the Rostrum.

e noble Brutus is ascended: Silence!
patient till the last.

untrymen, and lovers! hear me for my be silent, that you may hear: believe me
our; and have respect to mine honour,
y believe: censure me in your wisdom;
e senses, that you may the better judge.
any in this assembly, any dear friend of him I say, that Brutus' love to Cæsar was his. If then that friend demand why Brutus loves Cæsar, this is my answer,—Not that I less, but that I loved Rome more. Had Cæsar were living, and die all slaves; than were dead, to live all free men? As Cæsar weeps for him; as he was fortunate, I rejoice was valiant, I honour him: but, as he was slew him: There is tears, for his love; joy, e; honour, for his valour; and death, for his
Who is here so base that would be a bond-y, speak; for him have I offended. Who ade that would not be a Roman? If any, him have I offended. Who is here so vile love his country? If any, speak; for him led. I pause for a reply.

e, Brutus, none. [Several speaking at once.
none have I offended. I have done no ear than you shall do to Brutus. The his death is enrolled in the Capitol; his tenanted, wherein he was worthy; nor his reed, for which he suffered death.

STONY and others, with CÆSAR'S body.

his body, mourned by Mark Antony: who, had no hand in his death, shall receive the dying, a place in the commonwealth: As shall not? With this I depart: That, as est lover for the good of Rome, I have the for myself, when it shall please my country death.

Brutus, live! live!
ing him with triumph home unto his house.
ve him a statue with his ancestors.
it him be Cæsar.

Cæsar's better parts

would in Brutus.
e'll bring him to his house with shouts and amours.

countrymen,—

Peace; silence! Brutus speaks.

face, ho!

ed countrymen, let me depart alone,
y sake, stay here with Antony:

Cæsar's corpse, and grace his speech
Cæsar's glories; which Mark Antony, mission, is allow'd to make.

t you not a man depart,

ie, till Antony have spoke.

ay, ho! and let us hear Mark Antony.

3 Cit. Let him go up into the public chair;

We'll hear him: Noble Antony, go up.

Ant. For Brutus' sake, I am beholding to you.

4 Cit. What does he say of Brutus?

3 Cit. He says for Brutus' sake.

He finds himself beholding to us all.

4 Cit. 'T were best he speak no harm of Brutus here.

1 Cit. This Cæsar was a tyrant.

3 Cit. Nay, that's certain:

We are bless'd that Rome is rid of him.

2 Cit. Peace; let us hear what Antony can say.

Ant. You gentle Romans,—

Cit. Peace, ho! let us hear him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me your ears;

I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him.

The evil that men do lives after them;

The good is oft interred with their bones;

So let it be with Cæsar. The noble Brutus

Hath told you Cæsar was ambitious;

If it were so, it was a grievous fault;

And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it

Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,

(For Brutus is an honourable man;

So are they all, all honourable men;)

Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.

He was my friend, faithful and just to me.

But Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honourable man.

He hath brought many captives home to Rome,

Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill:

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?

When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept:

Ambition should be made of sterner stuff:

Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And Brutus is an honourable man.

You all did see that on the Lupercal

I thrice presented him a kingly crown,

Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambition?

Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;

And, sure, he is an honourable man

I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,

But here I am to speak what I do know.

You all did love him once, not without cause;

What cause withholds you then to mourn for him?

O judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts,

And men have lost their reason!—Bear with me;

My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,

And I must pause till it come back to me.

1 Cit. Methinks there is much reason in his sayings.

2 Cit. If thou consider rightly of the matter,

Cæsar has had great wrong.

3 Cit. Has he, masters?

I fear there will a worse come in his place.

4 Cit. Mark'd ye his words? He would not take the crown;

Therefore, 't is certain he was not ambitious.

1 Cit. If it be found so, some will dear abide it.

2 Cit. Poor soul! his eyes are red as fire with weeping.

3 Cit. There's not a nobler man in Rome than Antony.

4 Cit. Now mark him, he begins again to speak.

Ant. But yesterday, the word of Cæsar might

Have stood against the world: now lies he there,

And none so poor to do him reverence.

O masters! if I were dispos'd to stir

Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,

I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,

Who, you all know, are honourable men:

I will not do them wrong; I rather choose

To wrong the dead, to wrong myself, and you,

Than I will wrong such honourable men.

But here 's a parchment, with the seal of Cæsar,

III.—The same. A Street.
Enter CINNA, the Poet. to-night that I did feast with Cæsar, kily charge my fantasy:
 wander forth of doors,
 ds me forth.
Enter Citizens.
 your name?
 are you going?
 to you dwell?
 a married man or a bachelor?
 every man directly.
 briefly.
 wisely.
 truly, you were best.
 my name? Whither am I going?
 !? Am I a married man or a bache-answer every man directly, and briefly,
 ; wisely I say, I am a bachelor.
 as much as to say they are fools that marry: You 'll bear me a lang for that, I fear. I roceed; directly.

Cin. Directly, I am going to Cæsar's funeral.
 1 Cit. As a friend, or an enemy?
Cin. As a friend.
 2 Cit. That matter is answered directly.
 4 Cit. For your dwelling,—briefly.
Cin. Briefly, I dwell by the Capitol.
 3 Cit. Your name, sir, truly.
Cin. Truly, my name is Cinna.
 1 Cit. Tear him to pieces, he's a conspirator.
Cin. I am Cinna the poet, I am Cinna the poet.
 4 Cit. Tear him for his bad verses, tear him for his bad verses.
Cin. I am not Cinna the conspirator.
 2 Cit. It is no matter, his name's Cinna; pluck but his name out of his heart, and turn him going.
 3 Cit. Tear him, tear him! Come, brands, ho! fire-brands. To Brutus', to Cassius'; burn all. Some to Decius' house, and some to Casca's; some to Ligarius':
 away; go! [Exeunt.]

ACT IV.

—*A Room in Antony's House.**
Antony, and LEPIDUS, seated at a table.
 any then shall die; their names are other too must die; Consent you,
 I?
 ent—
 Prick him down, Antony.
 addition Publius shall not live,
 r's son, Mark Antony.
 not live: look, with a spot I damn
 you to Cæsar's house;
 ther, and we shall determine me charge in legacies.
 all I find you here?
 r at the Capitol. [Exit LEP.] slight unmeritable man,
 o errands: Is it fit,
 old divided he should stand
 o share it?
 So you thought him;
 e who should be prick'd to die,
 ence and proscription.
 , I have seen more days than you:
 ay these honours on this man,
 of divers slanderous loads,
 r them as the ass bears gold,
 at under the business,
 en, as we point the way;
 ght our treasure where we will,
 wu his load, and turn him off,
 y ass, to shake his ears,
 amons.
 You may do your will;
 and valiant soldier.
 horse, Octavius; and, for that,
 store of provender.
 at I teach to fight,
 to run directly on;
 ion govern'd by my spirit.
 te, is Lepidus but so;

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth:
 A barren-spirited fellow; one that feeds
 On objects, arts, and imitations,<sup>a</sup>
 Which, out of use, and stal'd by other men,
 Begin his fashion: Do not talk of him,
 But as a property. And now, Octavius,
 Listen great things.—Brutus and Cassius
 Are levying powers: we must straight make head:
 Therefore, let our alliance be combin'd,
 Our best friends made, our means stretch'd;
 And let us presently go sit in council,
 How covert matters may be best disclos'd,
 And open perils surest answer'd.
Oct. Let us do so: for we are at the stake,
 And bay'd about with many enemies;
 And some that smile have in their hearts, I fear,
 Millions of mischief. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Before Brutus' Tent, in the Camp near Sardis.

Drum. Enter BRUTUS, LUCILIUS, LUCIUS, and Soldiers: TITINIUS and PINDARUS meeting them.
Bru. Stand, ho!
Luc. Give the word, ho! and stand.
Bru. What now, Lucilius! is Cassius near?
Luc. He is at hand; and Pindarus is come
 To do you salutation from his master.
 [PINDARUS gives a letter to BRUTUS.]
Bru. He greets me well.—Your master, Pindarus,
 In his own change, or by ill officers,
 Hath given me some worthy cause to wish Things done, undone: but if he be at hand
 I shall be satisfied.
Pin. I do not doubt
 But that my noble master will appear
 Such as he is, full of regard and honour.
Bru. He is not doubted.—A word, Lucilius;
 How he receiv'd you, let me be resolv'd.
Luc. With courtesy, and with respect enough
 But not with such familiar instances,
 Nor with such free and friendly conference,
 As he hath used of old.

It is well known, did not meet at Rome to ption. But it is evident that Shakspere Rome, by Lepidus being sent to Cæsar's he shall find his confederates " or here, or * Lepidus is called barren, because, a mere follower of others, he feeds

<sup>a</sup> On objects, arts, and imitations,
 Which, out of use, and stal'd by other men,
 Begin his fashion."

Bru. Thou hast describ'd
A hot friend cooling : Ever note, Lucilius,
When love begins to sicken and decay,
It useth an enforced ceremony.
There are no tricks in plain and simple faith :
But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
Make gallant show and promise of their mettle :
But when they should endure the bloody spur,
They fall their crests, and, like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Comes his army on ?
Luc. They mean this night in Sardis to be quarter'd :
The greater part, the horse in general,
Are come with Cassius. [March within.]

Bru. Hark, he is arriv'd :—
March gently on to meet him.

Enter CASSIUS and Soldiers.

Cas. Stand, ho !
Bru. Stand, ho ! Speak the word along.

Within. Stand.

Within. Stand.

Within. Stand.

Cas. Most noble brother, you have done me wrong.
Bru. Judge me, you gods ! Wrong I mine enemies ?
And, if not so, how should I wrong a brother ?

Cas. Brutus, this sober form of yours hides wrongs ;
And when you do them—

Bru. Cassius, be content ;
Speak your griefs<sup>a</sup> softly,—I do know you well :—
Before the eyes of both our armies here,
Which should perceive nothing but love from us,
Let us not wrangle : Bid them move away ;
Then in my tent, Cassius, enlarge your griefs,
And I will give you audience.

Cas. Pindarus,
Bid our commanders lead their charges off
A little from this ground.

Bru. Lucilius, do you the like ; and let no man
Come to our tent, till we have done our conference.
Let Lucius and Titinius guard our door. [Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Within the Tent of Brutus.

Lucius and Titinius at some distance from it.

Enter BRUTUS and CASSIUS.

Cas. That you have wrong'd me doth appear in this :
You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella,
For taking bribes here of the Sardians ;
Wherein my letters, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man, were slighted off.

Bru. You wrong'd yourself to write in such a case.

Cas. In such a time as this it is not meet
That every nice offence should bear his comment.

Bru. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm ;
To sell and mart your offices for gold
To undeservers.

Cas. I an itching palm ?
You know that you are Brutus that speak this,
Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

Bru. The name of Cassius honours this corruption,
And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cas. Chastisement !
Bru. Remember March, the ides of March remember !
Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake ?
What villain touch'd his body, that did stab,
And not for justice ? What, shall one of us,
That struck the foremost man of all this world
But for supporting robbers, shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes,
And sell the mighty space of our large honours
For so much trash as may be grasped thus ?—
I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
Than such a Roman.

<sup>a</sup> Griefs—grievances.

Cas. Brutus, bait not me ;
I'll not endure it : you forget yourself,
To hedge me in ; I am a soldier, I,
Older in practice, abler than yourself
To make conditions.

Bru. Go to ; you are not, Cassius.

Cas. I am.

Bru. I say you are not.

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself
Have mind upon your health, tempt me no further.

Bru. Away, slight man !

Cas. Is't possible ?

Bru. Hear me, for I will speak
Must I give way and room to your rash choler ?
Shall I be frighted when a madman stares ?

Cas. O ye gods ! ye gods ! Must I endure all this ?

Bru. All this ? ay, more : Fret, till your purple break ;

Go, show your slaves how choleric you are,
And make your bondmen tremble. Must I bear Must I observe you ? Must I stand and crouch
Under your testy humour ? By the gods,
You shall digest the venom of your spleen,
Though it do split you ! for, from this day forth,
I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter,
When you are waspish.

Cas. Is it come to this ?

Bru. You say, you are a better soldier :
Let it appear so ; make your vaunting true,
And it shall please me well : For mine own part,
I shall be glad to learn of noble men.

Cas. You wrong me every way ; you wrong
Brutus ;

I said an elder soldier, not a better :
Did I say better ?

Bru. If you did, I care not.

Cas. When Cassar liv'd he durst not thus mov'd me.

Bru. Peace, peace ! you durst not so have touch'd
him.

Cas. I durst not ?

Bru. No.

Cas. What ? durst not tempt him ?

Bru. For your life you durst not.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love ;
I may do that I shall be sorry for.

Bru. You have done that you should be sorry for :
There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats ;
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty,
That they pass by me as the idle wind,
Which I respect not. I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me :—
For I can raise no money by vile means :
By heaven, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wrap
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection ! I did send
To you for gold to pay my legions,
Which you denied me : Was that done like Cassius ?
Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so ?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,
To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces !

Cas. I denied you not.

Bru. You did.

Cas. I did not :—he was but a fool
That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath heart :

A friend should bear his friend's infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me.

Cas. You love me not.

Bru. I do not like your faults.

dly eye could never see such faults.
 er's would not, though they do appear Olympos.
 Antony, and young Octavius, come,
 lves alone on Cassius,
 weary of the world :
 e loves; brav'd by his brother ;
 bondman; all his faults observ'd,
 ok, learn'd and conn'd by rote, teeth. O, I could weep mine eyes!—There is my dagger, aked breast; within, a heart
 itus' mine, richer than gold :
 t a Roman, take it forth ;
 ee gold, will give my heart :
 lidst at Cæsar; for, I know,
 t hate him worst thou lov'dst him better
 lov'dst Cassius.

Sheath your dagger ;
 you will, it shall have scope ;
 ll, dishonour shall be humour.
 are yoked with a lamb
 er as the flint bears fire ;
 orced, shows a hasty spark,
 cold again.

Hath Cassius liv'd
 and laughter to his Brutus,
 l blood ill-temper'd, vexeth him ?
 spoke that I was ill-temper'd too.
 confess so much? Give me your hand.
 y heart too.

O Brutus!—
 What 's the matter?
 ou not love enough to bear with me,
 humour which my mother gave me
 tful?

Yes, Cassius; and, from henceforth,
 ver-earnest with your Brutus,
 ir mother chides, and leave you so.

[Noise within.
 n.] Let me go in to see the generals.
 radge between them, 't is not meet s.] You shall not come to them.

 n.] Nothing but death shall stay me.

Enter Poet.
 w? What 's the matter?
 me, you generals: What do you mean?
 ends, as two such men should be;
 more years, I am sure, than ye.
 ! how vilely doth this cynic rhyme!
 t hence, sirrah; saucy fellow, hence!
 th him, Brutus; 't is his fashion.
 ve his humour, when he knows his time:
 e wars do with these jiggling fools?
 ce!

Away, away, be gone! [Exit Poet.]

Enter LUCILIUS and TITINIUS.
 s and Titinius, had the commanders
 t their companies to-night.
 me yourselves, and bring Messala with us. [Exit LUCILIUS and TITINIUS.

 Lucius, a bowl of wine.
 t think you could have been so angry.
 us, I am sick of many griefs.
 : philosophy you make no use,
 e to accidental evils.
 n bears sorrow better:—Portia is dead.
 rtia?
 lead.
 ap'd I killing when I cross'd you so!

O insupportable and touching loss!
 Upon what sickness?

Bru. Impatient of my absence;
 And grief, that young Octavius with Mark Antony
 Have made themselves so strong;—for with her death
 That tidings came:—With this she fell distract,
 And, her attendants absent, swallow'd fire.

Cas. And died so?

Bru. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods!

Enter LUCIUS, with wine and tapers

Bru. Speak no more of her.—Give me a bowl o' wine:—

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius. [Drinks.

Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge:—

Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erswell the cup;

I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love. [Drinks.

Re-enter TITINIUS, with MESSALA.

Bru. Come in, Titinius:—Welcome, good Messala.—

Now sit we close about this taper here,

And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Portia, art thou gone?

Bru. No more, I pray you.—

Messala, I have here received letters,

That young Octavius and Mark Antony

Come down upon us with a mighty power,

Bending their expedition toward Philippi.

Mes. Myself have letters of the self-same tenor.

Bru. With what addition?

Mes. That by proscription, and bills of outlawry,

Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,

Have put to death an hundred senators.

Bru. Therein our letters do not well agree;

Mine speak of seventy senators that died

By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cas. Cicero one?

Mes. Cicero is dead,

And by that order of proscription.—

Had you your letters from your wife, my lord?

Bru. No, Messala.

Mes. Nor nothing in your letters writ of her?

Bru. Nothing, Messala.

Mes. That, methinks, is strange.

Bru. Why ask you? Hear you aught of her in yours?

Mes. No, my lord.

Bru. Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true.

Mes. Then like a Roman bear the truth I tell:

For certain she is dead, and by strange manner.

Bru. Why, farewell, Portia.—We must die, Mes-sala:

With meditating that she must die once,

I have the patience to endure it now.

Mes. Even so great men great losses should endure

Cas. I have as much of this in art as you,

But yet my nature could not bear it so.

Bru. Well, to our work alive. What do you think

Of marching to Philippi presently?

Cas. I do not think it good.

Bru. Your reason?

Cas. This it is

'T is better that the enemy seek us:

So shall he waste his means, weary his soldiers,

Doing himself offence; whilst we, lying still,

Are full of rest, defence, and nimbleness.

Bru. Good reasons must, of force, give place to better

The people, 'twixt Philippi and this ground,

Do stand but in a forc'd affection;

For they have grudg'd us contribution:

The enemy, marching along by them,

By them shall make a fuller number up,

Come on refresh'd, new-added, and encourag'd;

Myself have to mine own turn'd enemy :
This ensign here of mine was turning back ;
I slew the coward, and did take it from him.

Tit. O Cassius, Brutus gave the word too early :
Who, having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly : his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony are all enclosed.

Enter PINDARUS.

Pin. Fly further off, my lord, fly further off ;
Mark Antony is in your tents, my lord !
Fly therefore, noble Cassius, fly far off.

Cas. This hill is far enough. Look, look, Titinius :
Are those my tents where I perceive the fire ?

Tit. They are, my lord.

Cas. Titinius, if thou lov'st me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,
Till he have brought thee up to yonder troops,
And here again ; that I may rest assur'd
Whether yond' troops are friend or enemy.

Tit. I will be here again, even with a thought. [Exit.]

Cas. Go, Pindarus, get higher on that hill ;
My sight was ever thick ; regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou not'st about the field.—

[Exit PINDARUS.]

This day I breathed first : time is come round,
And where I did begin there shall I end ;
My life is run his compass.—Sirrah, what news ?

Pin. [Above.] O my lord !

Cas. What news ?

Pin. Titinius is enclosed round about
With horsemen that make to him on the spur ;
Yet he spurs on.—Now they are almost on him ;
Now, Titinius !—Now some 'light :—O, he 'lights too :—
He 's ta'en ;—and hark ! they shout for joy. [Shout.]

Cas. Come down, behold no more.—
O, coward that I am, to live so long,
To see my best friend ta'en before my face !

Enter PINDARUS.

Come hither, sirrah :
In Parthia did I take thee prisoner ;
And then I swore thee, saving of thy life,
That whatsoever I did bid thee do
Thou shouldst attempt it. Come now, keep thine oath !
Now, be a freeman ; and, with this good sword,
That ran through Cæsar's bowels, search this bosom.
Stand not to answer : Here, take thou the hilts ;
And, when my face is cover'd, as 't is now,
Guide thou the sword.—Cæsar, thou art reveng'd,
Even with the sword that kill'd thee. [Dies.]

Pin. So, I am free ; yet would not so have been,
Durst I have done my will. O Cassius !
Far from this country Pindarus shall run,
Where never Roman shall take note of him. [Exit.]

Re-enter TITINIUS, with MESSALA.

Mes. It is but change, Titinius ; for Octavius
Is overthrown by noble Brutus' power,
As Cassius' legions are by Antony.

Tit. These tidings will well comfort Cassius.

Mes. Where did you leave him ?

Tit. All disconsolate,
With Pindarus his bondman, on this hill.

Mes. Is not that he that lies upon the ground ?

Tit. He lies not like the living. O my heart !

Mes. Is not that he ?

Tit. No, this was he, Messala,
But Cassius is no more.—O setting sun !
As in thy red rays thou dost sink to-night,
So his red blood Cassius' day is set ;
The sun of Rome is set ! Our day is gone ;
Our deeds are done ! Our dearest days are done !
Our success hath done this deed

Mes. Mistrust of good success hath done this O hateful error, melancholy's child !

Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not ? O error, soon conceiv'd, Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,
But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee.

Tit. What, Pindarus ! Where art thou, Pindarus ?

Mes. Seek him, Titinius : whilst I go to meet
The noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his ears : I may say, thrusting it ;
For piercing steel, and darts envenom'd,
Shall be as welcome to the ears of Brutus
As tidings of this sight.

Tit. Hie you, Messala,
And I will seek for Pindarus the while.

[Exit Messala.]

Why didst thou send me forth, brave Cassius !
Did I not meet thy friends ? and did not they Put on my brows this wreath of victory,
And bid me give 't thee ? Didst thou not bid me shout ?

Alas, thou hast misconstrued everything.
But hold thee, take this garland on thy brow ;
Thy Brutus bid me give it thee, and I
Will do his bidding.—Brutus, come away,
And see how I regarded Caius Cassius.—
By your leave, gods :—This is a Roman's part :
Come, Cassius' sword, and find Titinius' heart. [Exit.]

Alarum. Re-enter MESSALA, with BRUTUS, CATO, STRATO, VOLUMNIUS, and LUCILIUS.

Bru. Where, where, Messala, doth his body lie ?

Mes. Lo, yonder ; and Titinius mourning it.

Bru. Titinius' face is upward.

Cato. He is slain.

Bru. O Julius Cæsar, thou art mighty yet !
Thy spirit walks abroad, and turns our swords
In our own proper entrails. [Low noise.]

Cato. Brave Titinius !

Look, wher he have not crown'd dead Cassius !

Bru. Are yet two Romans living such as these ?

The last of all the Romans, fare thee well !

It is impossible that ever Rome

Should breed thy fellow.—Friends, I owe some tears

To this dead man than you shall see me pay.—

I shall find time, Cassius, I shall find time.—

Come, therefore, and to Thasos send his body ;

His funerals shall not be in our camp,

Lest it discomfort us.—Lucilius, come.—

And come, young Cato ; let us to the field.—

Labeo, and Flavius, set our battles on.—

'T is three o'clock ; and, Romans, yet we fight.

We shall try fortune in a second flight. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Another Part of the Field.

Alarum. Enter, fighting, Soldiers of both armies,

then BRUTUS, CATO, LUCILIUS, and others.

Bru. Yet, countrymen, O yet hold up your hands.

Cato. What bastard doth not ! Who will not fight
me ?

I will proclaim my name about the field :—

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho !

A foe to tyrants, and my country's friend ;

I am the son of Marcus Cato, ho ! [Charges the army.]

Bru. And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I

Brutus, my country's friend ; know me for Brutus.

[Exit, charging the enemy. Cato is over- powered, and falls.]

Luc. O young and noble Cato, art thou down ?

Why, now thou diest as bravely as Titinius ;

And mayst be honour'd, being Cato's son.

I Sold. Yield, or thou diest.

Luc. Only I yield to thee.

h that thou wilt kill me straight; [Offering money.
 d be honour'd in his death.
 must not.—A noble prisoner!
 a, ho! Tell Antony, Brutus is ta'en. ill the news.—Here comes the general:—

Enter ANTONY.

Brutus is ta'en, my lord.
 is he?
 Antony; Brutus is safe enough;
 ee that no enemy
 alive the noble Brutus:
 d him from so great a shame!
 nd him, or alive, or dead,
 nd like Brutus, like himself.
 not Brutus, friend; but, I assure you,
 in worth: keep this man safe, ndness: I had rather have friends, than enemies. Go on,
 Brutus be alive, or dead:
 ord, unto Octavius' tent,
 ; is chanc'd. [Exeunt.

V.—Another part of the Field.

ES, DARDANIUS, CLITUS, STRATO, and VOLUMNIUS.
 poor remains of friends, rest on this rock.
 e show'd the torchlight; but, my lord,
 ck; he is or ta'en, or slain.
 e down, Clitus: Slaying is the word;
 fashion. Hark thee, Clitus.—

[Whispering.
 , my lord? No, not for all the world.
 then, no words.

I 'll rather kill myself.
 hee, Dardanius.— [Whispers him.
 Shall I do such a deed?
 anius!

us!
 I request did Brutus make to thee?
 him, Clitus. Look, he meditates.
 that noble vessel full of grief,
 er even at his eyes.
 ither, good Volumnius: list a word.
 ays my lord?

Why, this, Volumnius:
 cesar hath appear'd to me
 es by night: at Sardis once;
 ight, here in Philippi fields.
 r is come.

Not so, my lord.
 am sure it is, Volumnius.
 world, Volumnius, how it goes;
 ve beat us to the pit:
 y to leap in ourselves,
 they push us. Good Volumnius, hat we two went to school together;
 ar love of old, I prithee,
 sword-hilts, whilst I run on it.
 not an office for a friend, my lord.
 [Alarum still.

Clit. Fly, fly, my lord; there is no tarrying here.
 Bru. Farewell to you—and you;—and you, Volum-nius.—

Strato, thou hast been all this while asleep;
 Farewell to thee too, Strato.—Countrymen,
 My heart doth joy that yet, in all my life,
 I found no man but he was true to me.
 I shall have glory by this losing day,
 More than Octavius and Mark Antony
 By this vile conquest shall attain unto.
 So, fare you well at once; for Brutus' tongue
 Hath almost ended his life's history:
 Night hangs upon mine eyes; my bones would rest,
 That have but labour'd to attain this hour.

[Alarum. Cry within; Fly fly, fly!
 Clit. Fly, my lord, fly!

Bru. Hence; I will follow.
 [Exeunt CLIT., DARD., and VOL.

I prithee, Strato, stay thou by thy lord:
 Thou art a fellow of a good respect;
 Thy life hath had some smatch of honour in it:
 Hold then my sword, and turn away thy face,
 While I do run upon it. Wilt thou, Strato?

Stra. Give me your hand first: Fare you well, my lord.

Bru. Farewell, good Strato.—Cæsar, now be still:
 I kill'd not thee with half so good a will.
 [He runs on his sword, and dies.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter OCTAVIUS, ANTONY, MESSALA, LUCILIUS, and their army.

Oct. What man is that?
 Mes. My master's man.—Strato, where is thy master?

Stra. Free from the bondage you are in, Messala;
 The conquerors can but make a fire of him;
 For Brutus only overcame himself,
 And no man else hath honour by his death.

Luc. So Brutus should be found.—I thank thee,
 Brutus,

That thou hast prov'd Lucilius' saying true.
 Oct. All that serv'd Brutus, I will entertain them.
 Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me?

Stra. Ay, if Messala will prefer me to you.
 Oct. Do so, good Messala.

Mes. How died my master, Strato?
 Stra. I held the sword, and he did run on it.

Mes. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
 That did the latest service to my master.

Ant. This was the noblest Roman of them all:
 All the conspirators, save only he,
 Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar;
 He only, in a general honest thought,
 And common good to all, made one of them.
 His life was gentle; and the elements
 So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up,
 And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

Oct. According to his virtue let us use him,
 With all respect and rites of burial.
 Within my tent his bones to-night shall lie,
 Most like a soldier, order'd honourably.—
 So call the field to rest: and let 's away,
 To part the glories of this happy day. [Exeunt.

ANTONY
AND CLEOPATRA.

INTRODUCTORY RE

'THE Tragedie of Anthonie and Cleopatra' was first printed in the folio collection of 1623. The play is not divided into acts and scenes in the original; but the stage-directions, like those of the other Roman plays, are very full. The text is, upon the whole, remarkably accurate; although the metrical arrangement is, in a few instances, obviously defective.

The Life of Antonius, in North's 'Plotarch,' has been followed by Shakspeare with very remarkable fidelity; and there is scarcely an incident which belongs to this period of Antony's career which the poet has not engrafted upon, his wonderful performance. The poetical power, subjecting the historical minuteness to an all-pervading harmony, is one of the most remarkable efforts of Shakspeare's genius.

"Of all Shakspeare's historical plays," says Coleridge, "Antony and Cleopatra is by far the most wonderful." He again says, assigning it a place even higher than that of being the most wonderful of the historical plays, "The highest praise, or rather form of praise, of this play, which I can offer in my own mind, is the doubt which the perusal always occasions in me, whether the Antony and Cleopatra is not, in all exhibitions of a giant power in its strength and vigour of maturity, a formidable rival of Macbeth, Lear, Hamlet, and Othello." The epithet "wonderful" is unquestionably the right one to apply to this drama. It is too vast, too gorgeous, to be approached without some prostration of the understanding. It pours such a flood of noonday splendour upon our senses, that we cannot gaze upon it steadily. We have read it again and again; and the impression which it leaves again and again is that of wonder.

The ANTONY of this play is of course the Antony of Julius Cæsar;—not merely the historical Antony, but the dramatic Antony, drawn by the same hand. He is the orator that showed dead Cæsar's mantle to the Roman people; he is the soldier that after his triumph over Brutus said, "This was a man." We have seen something of his character; we have learnt a little of his voluptuousness; we have heard of the "masker and the reveller;" we have beheld the unscrupulous politician. But we cannot think meanly of him. He is one great, either for good or for evil. Since he fought at Philippi Cæsar thus a

Wast beate Hirtius and Did Famin
Though da
Than avag

There came a

Whom ne'
Being barb
And, for hi

This is the A us, brings up

Upton has make Shaks hero of this speak "the l

"Mark Anto

Asiatic man

his own temp

rhodomontad

very artfully speeches." 2

is more elev

Antony was high genius—dramatically

tion because falls upon hi

more and m

But even b

exalted his m things. Whi of Octavia's v

"The April

And these

And, higher

"Her tongue

Her heart

That stand

And neithe

ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

M. ANTONY, a triumvir.

Act I. sc. 2; sc. 3. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 6; sc. 2; sc. 4; sc. 7; sc. 8; sc. 9; sc. 11. Act IV. sc. 5; sc. 7; sc. 8; sc. 10; sc. 12; sc. 13.

TAVIUS CÆSAR, a triumvir.

Act I. sc. 4. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 6; sc. 7; sc. 6; sc. 8; sc. 10. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 6; sc. 1; sc. 2.

ÆMIL LEPIDUS, a triumvir.

Act I. sc. 4. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 4; sc. 6; sc. 7. Act III. sc. 2.

SEXTUS POMPEIUS.

Appears, Act II. sc. 1; sc. 6; sc. 7.

S ENOBARDUS, a friend of Antony.

Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 6; sc. 7. Act III. sc. 2; sc. 8; sc. 11. Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 6; sc. 9.

VITIDIUS, a friend of Antony.

Act II. sc. 2; sc. 3. Act III. sc. 1.

EROS, a friend of Antony.

Act I. sc. 5; sc. 9. Act IV. sc. 4; sc. 5; sc. 7; sc. 12.

CARUS, a friend of Antony.

Act III. sc. 8. Act IV. sc. 7; sc. 8; sc. 10.

BRETAS, a friend of Antony.

Appears, Act IV. sc. 12. Act V. sc. 1.

METRIUS, a friend of Antony.

Appears, Act I. sc. 1.

PHILO, a friend of Antony.

Appears, Act I. sc. 1.

CECENAS, a friend of Cæsar.

Act II. sc. 2; sc. 4; sc. 6; sc. 7. Act III. sc. 6. Act IV. sc. 1. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2.

GRIPPA, a friend of Cæsar.

Act II. sc. 2; sc. 4; sc. 7. Act III. sc. 2; sc. 6. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 6; sc. 7. Act V. sc. 1.

LABELLA, a friend of Cæsar.

Act III. sc. 10. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2.

OCULIUS, a friend of Cæsar.

Appears, Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2.

MYRUS, a friend of Cæsar.

Appears, Act III. sc. 10; sc. 11.

GALLUS, a friend of Cæsar.

Appears, Act V. sc. 1; sc. 2.

MENAS, a friend of Pompey.

Appears, Act II. sc. 1; sc. 6; sc. 7.

MENEGRATES, a friend of Pompey.

Appears, Act II. sc. 1.

VARRIUS, a friend of Pompey.

Appears, Act II. sc. 1.

TAURUS, lieutenant-general to Cæsar.

Appears, Act III. sc. 8.

CANIDIUS, lieutenant-general to Antony.

Appears, Act III. sc. 7; sc. 8.

SILIUS, an officer in Ventidius's army.

Appears, Act III. sc. 1.

EUPHRONIUS, an ambassador from Antony to Cæsar.

Appears, Act III. sc. 10; sc. 11.

ALEXAS, an attendant on Cleopatra.

Appears, Act I. sc. 2; sc. 3. Act II. sc. 5. Act III. sc. 3. Act IV. sc. 2.

MARDIAN, an attendant on Cleopatra.

Appears, Act I. sc. 5. Act II. sc. 5. Act IV. sc. 11; sc. 13.

SELEUCUS, an attendant on Cleopatra.

Appears, Act V. sc. 2.

DIOMEDES, an attendant on Cleopatra.

Appears, Act IV. sc. 12; sc. 13.

A Soothsayer.

Appears, Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 3.

A Clown.

Appears, Act V. sc. 2.

CLEOPATRA, Queen of Egypt.

Appears, Act I. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5. Act II. sc. 5. Act III. sc. 3; sc. 7; sc. 9; sc. 11. Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 4; sc. 8; sc. 10; sc. 11; sc. 13. Act V. sc. 2.

OCTAVIA, sister to Cæsar, and wife to Antony.

Appears, Act II. sc. 5. Act III. sc. 2; sc. 4; sc. 6.

CHARMIAN, an attendant on Cleopatra.

Appears, Act I. sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5. Act II. sc. 5. Act III. sc. 3; sc. 9; sc. 11. Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 4; sc. 11; sc. 13. Act V. sc. 2.

IRAS, an attendant on Cleopatra.

Appears, Act I. sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5. Act II. sc. 5. Act III. sc. 3; sc. 9; sc. 11. Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 11; sc. 13. Act V. sc. 2.

Officers, Soldiers, Messengers, and other Attendants.

SCENE,—DISPERSED; IN SEVERAL PARTS OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE

ACT I.

Alexandria. A Room in Cleopatra's Palace.

Enter DEMETRIUS and PHILO.

but this dotage of our general's measure: those his goodly eyes, files and musters of the war like plated Mars, now bend, now turn, to devotion of their view front: his captain's heart, scuffles of great fights hath burst in his breast, renegues* all temper;

renounces. This is usually spelt reneges. The have adopted gives us the proper pronunciation,

And is become the bellows, and the fan,
To cool a gipsy's lust. Look, where they come!

Flourish. Enter ANTONY and CLEOPATRA, with their Trains; Eunuchs fanning her.

Take but good note, and you shall see in him
The triple* pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's fool: behold and see.

Cleo. If it be love indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.

* Triple is here used in the sense of third, or one of three. So in 'All's Well that Ends Well' we have a triple eye for a third eye. We are not aware that any other author uses triple otherwise than in the ordinary sense of three-fold.

Cleo. I'll set a bourn how far to be belov'd.
Ant. Then must thou needs find out new heaven,
 new earth.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. News, my good lord, from Rome—
Ant. Grates me:<sup>a</sup>—The sum.

Cleo. Nay, hear them, Antony: Fulvia, perchance, is angry; Or, who knows
 If the scarce-bearded Caesar have not sent His powerful mandate to you, "Do this, or this;
 Take in that kingdom, and enfranchise that;
 Perform 't, or else we damn thee."

Ant. How, my love!
Cleo. Perchance,—nay, and most like,
 You must not stay here longer, your dismissal
 Is come from Caesar; therefore hear it, Antony.—
 Where's Fulvia's process?<sup>b</sup> Caesar's, I would say.— Both.—

Call in the messengers.—As I am Egypt's queen,
 Thou blushest, Antony; and that blood of thine
 Is Caesar's homager: else so thy cheek pays shame
 When shrill-tongued Fulvia scolds.—The messengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tiber melt! and the wide arch
 Of the rang'd empire<sup>c</sup> fall! Here is my space.
 Kingdoms are clay: our dungy earth alike
 Feeds beast as man: the nobleness of life
 Is, to do thus; when such a mutual pair,
 And such a twain can do 't, in which I bind,
 On pain of punishment, the world to weat<sup>d</sup>
 We stand up peerless.

Cleo. Excellent falsehood!
 Why did he marry Fulvia, and not love her?
 I'll seem the fool I am not; Antony
 Will be himself—

Ant. But stir'd by Cleopatra.<sup>e</sup>—
 Now, for the love of Love, and her soft hours,
 Let's not confound the time with conference harsh:
 There's not a minute of our lives should stretch
 Without some pleasure now: What sport to-night?

Cleo. Hear the ambassadors.
Ant. Fie, wrangling queen!
 Whom everything becomes, to chide, to laugh,
 To weep; whose every passion fully strives
 To make itself, in thee, fair and admir'd!
 No messenger; but thine and all alone,
 To-night we'll wander through the streets, and note
 The qualities of people. Come, my queen;
 Last night you did desire it:—Speak not to us.

[Exeunt ANT. and CLEO., with their Train.]

Dem. Is Caesar with Antonius priz'd so slight?
Phi. Sir, sometimes, when he is not Antony,
 He comes too short of that great property
 Which still should go with Antony.

Dem. I'm full sorry That he approves the common liar, who Thus speaks of him at Rome: But I will hope
 Of better deeds to-morrow. Rest you happy! [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—The same. Another Room.

Enter CHARMIAN, IRAS, ALEXAS, and a Soothsayer.

Char. Lord ALEXAS, sweet ALEXAS, most anything ALEXAS, almost most absolute ALEXAS, where's the soothsayer that you praised so to the queen? O, that I <sup>a</sup> Grates me—offends me; is grating to me.

<sup>b</sup> Process—summons.
<sup>c</sup> Rang'd empire. Capell properly explains this—"Orderly rang'd—whose parts are now entire and distinct, like a number of built edifices."
<sup>d</sup> Weat—to know.
<sup>e</sup> Anty accepts Cleopatra's belief of what he will be. He himself; but still under the influence of Cleopatra; and what that influence is, he continues, "Now, for the love," &c.

knew this husband, which, you say, must horns with garlands!

Alex. Soothsayer.
Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the man?—Is 't you, sir, things?

Sooth. In nature's infinite book of secrets
 A little I can read.

Alex. Show him your hand.

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. Bring in the banquet quickly; with Cleopatra's health to drink.

Char. Good sir, give me good fortune.
Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray then, foresee me one.
Sooth. You shall be yet far fairer than y

Char. He means in flesh.
Iras. No, you shall paint when you are

Char. Wrinkles forbid!
Alex. Vex not his prescience; be attent

Char. Hush!
Sooth. You shall be more loving than

Char. I had rather heat my liver with Alex. Nay, hear him.

Char. Good now, some excellent jests be married to three kings in a forenoon,

them all: let me have a child at fifty, to w
 of Jewry may do homage: find me to ma

Octavius Caesar, and companion me with m
Sooth. You shall outlive the lady whom

Char. O excellent! I love long life figs.

Sooth. You have seen and prov'd a fa
 fortune

Than that which is to approach.
Char. Then, belike my children shall have Prithoe, how many boys and wenches must I

Sooth. If every of your wishes had a wumb

And fertile every wish, a million.
Char. Out, fool! I forgive thee for a wish.

Alex. You think none but your sheels an your wishes.

Char. Nay, come, tell Iras here.
Alex. We'll know all our fortunes.

Eno. Mine, and most of our fortunes, to-be—drunk to bed.

Iras. There's a palm presages chastity, if else.

Char. Even as the o'erflowing Nilus press mine.

Iras. Go, you wild bedfellow, you cannot see Char. Nay, if an oily palm be not a fruitful nostication, I cannot scratch mine ear. Prit her but a worky-day fortune.

Sooth. Your fortunes are alike.
Iras. But how, but how? give me particulars.

Sooth. I have said.
Iras. Am I not an inch of fortune better than

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of better than I, where would you choose it?

Iras. Not in my husband's nose.
Char. Our worse thoughts heavens mend!

—come, his fortune, his fortune!—O, let him woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee

let her die too, and give him a worse! and let follow worse, till the worst of all follow him to his grave, fifty-fold a cuckold! Good Isis, this prayer, though thou deny me a matter of weight; good Isis, I beseech thee!

Iras. Amen. Dear goddess, hear that praye people! for, as it is a heart-breaking to see a man loose-wived, so it is a deadly sorrow to see

<sup>e</sup> Change—vary, give a different appearance re uncuckolded: Therefore, dear Isis, keep and fortune him accordingly!

Amen.
Now, now! if it lay in their hands to make me lady, they would make themselves whores but not.
Tush! here comes Antony.

Not he; the queen.

Enter CLEOPATRA.

How now my lord?

No, lady.

Was he not here?

No, madam.

He was dispos'd to mirth; but on the sudden thought hath struck him.—Enobarbus,— Madam.

Seek him, and bring him hither. Where's Alexas?

Here, at your service.—My lord approaches.

ANTONY, with a Messenger and Attendants.

We will not look upon him: Go with us.
Enter CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, ALEXAS, IRAS, ARMIAN, Soothsayer, and Attendants.
Fulvia thy wife first came into the field.
Against my brother Lucius?

By:

What war had end, and the time's state ends of them, jointing their force 'gainst Caesar;

Enter issue in the war, from Italy,
first encounter, drave them.

Well, what worst?

The nature of bad news infects the teller.
When it concerns the fool, or coward.—On:
It are past are done with me.—'T is thus:
I am true, though in his tale lie death,
as he flatter'd.

Labiens

(If news) hath, with his Parthian force, Asia from Euphrates; bearing banner shook from Syria
and to Ionia;

Antony, thou wouldst say,—

O, my lord!

Speak to me home, mince not the general consequence;

Cleopatra as she's call'd in Rome:
In Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults with full licence as both truth and malice be to utter. O, then we bring forth weeds that quick winds lie still; and our ills told us, bring us Fare thee well a while.
I do your noble pleasure.

[Exit.

From Sicyon how the news? Speak there.
The man from Sicyon.—Is there such an one?
He stays upon your will.

Let him appear.—

My Egyptian fetters I must break,

Enter another Messenger.

Myself in dotage.—What are you?

Seized upon. Nearly all Shakspeare's contemporaries to the second syllable of Euphrates short.
proposes to read missis instead of winds. Before we reading we must be satisfied that the old one is do we "bring forth weeds?" In a heavy and when there are no "quick winds" to mellow the up the exuberant moisture, to fit it for the plough, ands, then, are the voices which bring us true reports to our inaction. When these winds lie still we seeds. But the metaphor is carried farther: the rendered the soil fit for the plough; but the know-own faults—ills—is as the ploughing itself—the 2 Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant.

Where die she?

2 Mess. In Sicyon:

Her length of sickness, with what else more serious
Importeth thee to know, this bears. [Gives a letter.

Ant.

Forbear me.—

[Exit Messenger

There's a great spirit gone! Thus did I desire it:
What our contempts do often hurl from us,
We wish it ours again; the present pleasure,
By revolution lowering, does become
The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone;
The hand could pluck her back that shov'd her on.
I must from this enchanting queen break off;
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch.—How now! Enobarbus!

Enter ENOBARBUS.

Eno. What's your pleasure, sir?

Ant. I must with haste from hence.

Eno. Why, then, we kill all our women: We see how mortal an unkindness is to them; if they suffer our departure, death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone.

Eno. Under a compelling occasion, let women die:
It were pity to cast them away for nothing; though,
between them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra, catching but the least noise of this, dies instantly; I have seen her die twenty times upon far poorer moment: I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some loving act upon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.

Ant. She is cunning past man's thought.

Eno. Alack, sir, no; her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure love: We cannot call her winds and waters, sighs and tears; they are greater storms and tempests than almanacs can report: this cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a shower of rain as well as Jove.

Ant. 'Would I had never seen her!

Eno. O, sir, you had then left unseen a wonderful piece of work; which not to have been blessed withal, would have discredited your travel.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir?

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia?

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why, sir, give the gods a thankful sacrifice.
When it pleaseth their deities to take the wife of a man from him, it shows to man the tailors of the earth;
comforting therein, that when old robes are worn out there are members to make new. If there were no more women but Fulvia, then had you indeed a cut, and the case to be lamented; this grief is crowned with consolation; your old smock brings forth a new petticoat:—
and, indeed, the tears live in an onion that should water this sorrow.

Ant. The business she hath broached in the state Cannot endure my absence.

Eno. And the business you have broached here cannot be without you; especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.

Ant. No more light answers. Let our officers

Have notice what we purpose. I shall break
The cause of our expellence to the queen,
And get her love to part. For not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak to us; but the letters too
Of many our contriving friends in Rome
Petition us at home: Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Caesar, and commands
The empire of the sea; our slippery people (Whose love is never link'd to the deserv

Till his deserts are past) begin to throw Pompey the great, and all his dignities,
Upon his son; who, high in name and power,
Higher than both in blood and life, stands up
For the main soldier: whose quality, going on,
The sides o' the world may danger: Much is breeding,
Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Say, our pleasure,
To such whose place is under us, requires
Our quick remove from hence.

Eno. I shall do 't.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is, who's with him, what he does:—

I did not send you:—If you find him sad

Say I am dancing; if in mirth, report

That I am sudden sick: Quick, and return.

[Exit ALEXAS.]

Char. Madam, methinks, if you did love him dearly,
You do not hold the method to enforce
The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do I do not?

Char. In each thing give him way, cross him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest like a fool: the way to lose him.

Char. Tempt him not so too far: I wish, forbear;
In time we hate that which we often fear.

Enter ANTONY.

But here comes Antony.

Cleo. I am sick and sullen.

Ant. I am sorry to give breathing to my purpose.—

Cleo. Help me away, dear Charmian, I shall fall;
It cannot be thus long, the sides of nature
Will not sustain it.

Ant. Now, my dearest queen,—

Cleo. Pray you, stand farther from me.

Ant. What's the matter?

Cleo. I know, by that same eye, there's some good news.

What says the married woman?—You may go;

'Would she had never given you leave to come!

Let her not say 't is I that keep you here,

I have no power upon you; hers you are.

Ant. The gods best know,—

Cleo. O, never was there queen
So mightily betray'd! Yet, at the first,
I saw the treasons planted.

Ant. Cleopatra,—

Cleo. Why should I think you can be mine, and true,
Though you in swearing shake the throned gods,
Who have been false to Fulvia? Riotous madness,
To be entangled with those mouth-made vows,
Which break themselves in swearing!

Ant. Most sweet queen,—

Cleo. Nay, pray you, seek no colour for your going,
But bid farewell, and go: when you sued staying,
Then was the time for words: No going then;—
Eternity was in our lips and eyes;
Bliss in our brows' bent; none our parts so poor,
But was a race of heaven: They are so still,
Or thou, the greatest soldier of the world,
Art turn'd the greatest liar.

Ant. How now, lady!

Cleo. I would I had thy inches; thou shouldst know
There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Hear me, queen:

The strong necessity of time commands
Our services a while; but my full heart

Remains in use with you. Our Italy Shines o'er with civil swords: Sextus Pompeius
Makes his approaches to the port of Rome:
Equality of two domestic powers
Breeds scrupulous faction: The hated, grown to strength,
Are newly grown to love: the condemn'd Pompey,
Rich in his father's honour, creeps apace
Into the hearts of such as have not thriv'd
Upon the present state, whose numbers threaten;
And quietness, grown sick of rest, would purge
By any desperate change: My more particular,
And that which most with you should safe my going
Is Fulvia's death.

Cleo. Though age from folly could not give me freedom,

It does from childishness:—Can Fulvia die?

Ant. She's dead, my queen:

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read

The garboils<sup>b</sup> she awak'd; at the last, best;

See when and where she died.

Cleo. O most false love!

Where be the sacred vials thou shouldst fill

With sorrowful water? Now I see, I see,

In Fulvia's death how mine receiv'd shall be.

Ant. Quarrel no more, but be prepar'd to know

The purposes I bear; which are, or cease,

As you shall give the advice: By the fire

That quickens Nilus' slime, I go from hence,

Thy soldier, servant; making peace or war

As thou affect'st.

Cleo. Cut my lace, Charmian, come;—

But let it be.—I am quickly ill, and well,

So Antony loves.

Ant. My precious queen, forbear;

And give true evidence to his love, which stands

An honourable trial.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.

I prithee, turn aside, and weep for her;

Then bid adieu to me, and say the tears

Belong to Egypt: ° Good now, play one scene

Of excellent dissembling; and let it look

Like perfect honour.

Ant. You'll heat my blood; no more.

Cleo. You can do better yet; but this is wretchedly.

Ant. Now, by my sword,—

Cleo. And target,—Still he mends!

But this is not the best: Look, prithee, Charmian,

How this Herculean Roman does become

The carriage of his chafe.

Ant. I'll leave you, lady.

Cleo. Courteous lord, one word.

Sir, you and I must part,—but that's not it;

Sir, you and I have lov'd,—but there's not it;

That you know well: Something it is I would,—

O, my oblivion is a very Antony,

And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your royalty

Holds idleness your subject, I should take you

For idleness itself.

Cleo. 'T is sweating labour

To bear such idleness so near the heart

As Cleopatra this. But, sir, forgive me;

Since my becomings kill me, when they do not

Eye well to you: Your honour calls you hence;

Therefore be deaf to my unpitied folly,

And all the gods go with you! Upon your sword

Sit laurel<sup>d</sup> victory, and smooth success

Be strew'd before your feet!

Ant. Let us go. Come:

<sup>a</sup> Safe—render safe.

<sup>b</sup> Garboils—disorders, commotions.

<sup>c</sup> Egypt—the queen of Egypt.

<sup>d</sup> Laurel. The use of the substantives adjectively was a peculiarity of the poetry of Shakespeare's time, which has been revived with advantage in our own day.

so abides, and flies,
ling here, go'st yet with me,
ecting, here remain with thee.

[Exeunt.]

—Rome. An Apartment in Cæsar's House.

Enter CÆSAR, LEPIDUS, and Attendants.

ay see, Lepidus, and henceforth know, s natural vice to hate etitor: from Alexandria
s: He fishes, drinks, and wastes ight in revel: is not more manlike
; nor the queen of Ptolemy than he: hardly gave audience, to think he had partners: You shall here
be abstract of all faults allow.

I must not think there are arken all his goodness:
im, seem as the spots of heaven,
ight's blackness; hereditary,
rebas'd; what he cannot change,
chooses.
e too indulgent: Let's grant it is not on the bed of Ptolemy;
lom for a mirth; to sit
um of tipping with a slave;
sts at noon, and stand the buffet at smell of sweat; say, this becomes re must be rare indeed ngs cannot blemish,) yet must Antony his soils,* when we do bear in his lightness. If he fill'd
th his voluptuousness,
d the dryness of his bones,
't: but, to confound such time.
y from his sport, and speaks as loud
, and ours,—'t is to be chid
; who, being mature in knowledge, rience to their present pleasure, judgment.

Enter a Messenger.

Here's more news.
ddings have been done; and every hour,
ar, shalt thou have report
l. Pompey is strong at sea
e is belov'd of those fear'd Cæsar: to the ports repair, and men's reports wrong'd.

I should have known no less:—
ght us from the primal state,
y was wish'd, until he were:
an, ne'er lov'd till ne'er worth love,
being lack'd. This common body,
nd flag upon the stream,
k, lackeying the varying tide,
motion.

Cæsar, I bring thee word,
Menas, famous pirates,
ve there; which they ear and wound
ery kind: Many hot inroads aly; the borders maritime ink on 't, and flush youth revolt:
ep forth but 't is as soon for Pompey's name strikes more air resisted.

Antony,

Soils—delicaments, taints.

Leave thy lascivious vassals.* When thou once
Wast beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtius and Pansa, consuls, at thy heel
Did famine follow; whom thou fought'st against,
Though daintily brought up, with patience more Than savages could suffer: Thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at: thy palate then did deign

The roughest berry on the rudest hedge;
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture sheets,
The barks of trees thou browsed'st; on the Alps
It is reported thou didst eat strange flesh,
Which some did die to look on: And all this
(It wounds thine honour that I speak it now)
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Lep. 'T is pity of him.

Cæs. Let his shames quickly
Drive him to Rome: 'T is time we twain
Did show ourselves i' the field; and, to that end, Assemble me immediate council: Pompey
Thrives in our idleness.

Lep. To-morrow, Cæsar,
I shall be furnish'd to inform you rightly Both what by sea and land I can be able,
To front this present time.

Cæs. Till which encounter,
It is my business too. Farewell.

Lep. Farewell, my lord: What you shall know meantime

Of stirs abroad, I shall beseech you, sir,
To let me be partaker.

Cæs. Doubt not, sir;
I knew it for my bond.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and MARDIAN

Cleo. Charmian,—

Char. Madam.

Cleo. Ha, ha!—

Give me to drink mandragora.

Char. Why, madam?

Cleo. That I might sleep out this great gap of time
My Antony is away.

Char. You think of him too much.

Cleo. O, 't is treason!

Char. Madam, I trust not so.

Cleo. Thou, eunuch! Mardian!

Mar. What's your highness' pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to hear thee sing; I take no pleasure
In aught an eunuch has: 'T is well for thee,
That, being unseminar'd, thy freer thoughts
May not fly forth of Egypt. Hast thou affections?

Mar. Yes, gracious madam.

Cleo. Indeed?

Mar. Not in deed, madam; for I can do nothing
But what indeed is honest to be done:

Yet I have fierce affections, and think

What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. O Charmian,

Where think'st thou he is now? Stands he, or sits he?

Or does he walk? or is he on his horse?

O happy horse, to bear the weight of Antony!

Do bravely, horse! for wot'st thou whom thou mov'st?

* Vassals. The spelling of the original is vassals. The modern reading is vassals. Now, in three other passages of the original, where the old English word vassal is used, it is vassal. Vassal is employed by Shakespeare in the strict meaning of drunken revelry; and that could scarcely be called "lascivious." On the contrary, "leave thy lascivious vassals" expresses Cæsar's contempt for Cleopatra and her minions, who were strictly the vassals of Antony, the queen being one of his tributaries.

[Faint, illegible text in the top left column, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.]

[Faint, illegible text in the top right column, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.]

[Faint, illegible text in the middle left column, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.]

[Faint, illegible text in the middle right column, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.]

n to use our strongest hands.

[Exeunt.

l.—Rome. A Room in the House of Lepidus.

Enter ENOBARBUS and LEPIDUS.

Enobarbus, 't is a worthy deed, come you well, to entreat your captain's gentle speech.

I shall entreat himself: if Cæsar move him, look over Cæsar's head, loud as Mars. By Jupiter, thearer of Antonius' beard, have 't to-day!

'T is not a time smaching.

Every time matter that is then born in it. small to greater matters must give way. of the small come first.

Your speech is passion: stir no embers up. Here comes Antony.

Enter ANTONY and VENTIDIUS.

And yonder Cæsar.

CÆSAR, MECÆNAS, and AGRIPPA. compose<sup>a</sup> well here, to Parthia: us.

not know, Mecænas; ask Agrippa: friends, unbin'd us was most great, and let not us rend us. What 's amiss, tly heard: When we debate ference loud, we do commit ailing wounds: Then, noble partners, or I earnestly beseech,) : sourest points with sweetest terms, grow to the matter.

'T is spoken well: e our armies, and to fight, us. come to Rome.

Thank you.

Sit.

Sit, sir.

Nay, then. n, you take things ill which are not so; discern you not.

I must be laugh'd at, ing, or a little, I yself offended; and with you world: more laugh'd at, that I should in derogately, when to sound your name 'd me.

My being in Egypt, Cæsar, o you? ore than my residing here at Rome u in Egypt: Yet if you there n my state, your being in Egypt question.

How intend you, practis'd? may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent here befall me. Your wife and brother on me; and their contestation r you, you were the word of war. lo mistake your business; my brother never n his act: I did inquire it; learning from some true reports, ir swords with you. Did he not rather authority with yours; impose—agree, come to agreement.

And make the wars alike against my stomach, Having alike your cause? Of this, my letters Before did satisfy you. If you 'll patch a quarrel, As matter whole you have to make it with,<sup>a</sup> It must not be with this.

Cæs. You praise yourself by laying defects of judgment to me; but you patch'd up your excuses.

Ant. Not so, not so;

I know you could not lack, I am certain on 't, Very necessity of this thought, that I, Your partner in the cause gainst which he fought, Could not with graceful eyes attend those wars Which fronted mine own peace. As for my wife, I would you had her spirit in such another: The third o' the world is yours; which with a snaffle You may pace easy, but not such a wife.

Eno. 'Would we had all such wives, that the men might go to wars with the women!

Ant. So much uncurbable, her garboils, Cæsar, Made out of her impatience, (which not wanted Shrewdness of policy too,) I grieving grant Did you too much disquiet: for that you must But say I could not help it.

Cæs. I wrote to you When rioting in Alexandria; you Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts Did gibe my missive out of audience.

Ant. Sir, He fell upon me, ere admitted; then Three kings I had newly feasted, and did want Of what I was i' the morning: but, next day, I told him of myself; which was as much As to have ask'd him pardon: Let this fellow Be nothing of our strife; if we contend, Out of our question wipe him.

Cæs. You have broken The article of your oath; which you shall never Have tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft, Cæsar.

Ant. No, Lepidus, let him speak; The honour is sacred which he talks on now, Supposing that I lack'd it: But on, Cæsar; The article of my oath,—

Cæs. To lend me arms and aid when I requir'd them: The which you both denied.

Ant. Neglected, rather; And then, when poison'd hours had bound me up From mine own knowledge. As nearly as I may, I 'll play the penitent to you: but mine honesty Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my power Work without it: Truth is, that Fulvia, To have me out of Egypt, made wars here; For which myself, the ignorant motive, do So far ask pardon as belitts mine honour To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'T is noble spoken.

Mec. If it might please you, to enforce no further The griefs between ye: to forget them quite, Were to remember that the present need Speaks to atone you.

Lep. Worthily spoken, Mecænas.

Eno. Or, if you borrow one another's love for the instant, you may, when you hear no more words of Pompey, return it again: you shall have time to wrangle in when you have nothing else to do.

Ant. Thou art a soldier only; speak no more.

Eno. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot.

Ant. You wrong this presence, therefore speak no more.

Eno. Go on then; your considerate stone.<sup>b</sup>

<sup>a</sup> The meaning appears to us—if you 'll patch a quarrel so as to seem the whole matter you have to make it with, you must not patch it with this complaint. Whole is opposed to patch.

<sup>b</sup> This is most probably an allusion to the old saying, "as silent as a stone."

Cæs. I do not much dislike the matter, but
The manner of his speech: for it cannot be
We shall remain in friendship, our conditions
So differing in their acts. Yet, if I knew What hoop should hold us stanch, from edge to edge
O' the world I would pursue it.

Agr. Give me leave, Cæsar,—

Cæs. Speak, Agrippa.

Agr. Thou hast a sister by the mother's side, Admir'd Octavia: great Mark Antony
Is now a widower.

Cæs. Say not so, Agrippa;
If Cleopatra heard you, your reproof
Were well deserv'd of rashness.<sup>a</sup>

Ant. I am not married, Cæsar: let me hear Agrippa further speak.

Agr. To hold you in perpetual amity,
To make you brothers, and to knit your hearts
With an unslipping knot, take Antony
Octavia to his wife: whose beauty claims
No worse a husband than the best of men;
Whose virtue, and whose general graces, speak
That which none else can utter. By this marriage,
All little jealousies, which now seem great,
And all great fears, which now import their dangers,
Would then be nothing: truths would be tales,
Where now half tales be truths: her love to both
Would, each to other, and all loves to both,
Draw after her. Pardon what I have spoke:
For 't is a studied, not a present thought,
By duty ruminated.

Ant. Will Cæsar speak?

Cæs. Not till he hears how Antony is touch'd
With what is spoke already.

Ant. What power is in Agrippa,
If I would say, "Agrippa, be it so,"
To make this good?

Cæs. The power of Cæsar,
And his power unto Octavia.

Ant. May I never
To this good purpose, that so fairly shows,
Dream of impediment!—Let me have thy hand:
Further this act of grace; and, from this hour,
The heart of brothers govern in our loves,
And sway our great designs!

Cæs. There's my hand.
A sister I bequeath you, whom no brother
Did ever love so dearly: Let her live
To join our kingdoms, and our hearts; and never Fly off our loves again!

Lep. Happily, amen!

Ant. I did not think to draw my sword 'gainst Pompey;
For he hath laid strange courtesies, and great,
Of late upon me: I must thank him only,
Leat my remembrance suffer ill report;
At heel of that, defy him.

Lep. Time calls upon us:
Of us must Pompey presently be sought,
Or else he seeks out us.

Ant. Where lies he?

Cæs. About the Mount Misenum.

Ant. What is his strength by land?

Cæs. Great and increasing:

But by sea he is an absolute master.

Ant. So is the fame.

"Would we had spoke together! Hasten we for it:
Yet, ere we put ourselves in arms, despatch we
The business we have talk'd of.

Cæs. With most gladness;
And do invite you to my sister's view,
Whither straight I'll lead you.

Ant. Let us, Lepidus.
Not lack your company.

<sup>a</sup> Of rashness—on account of rashness.

Lep.
Not sickness

Mec. Wel
Eno. Hall
my honourab

Agr. Goo
Mec. We well digested

Eno. Ay, and made th
Mec. Eigt
and but twel

Eno. Thi much more i deserved noti

Mec. She square to her
Eno. Wh
up his heart,

Agr. The devised well
Eno. I wi

The barge sh
Burnt on the s
Purple the s

The winds
sil

Which to th
The water, w
As amorous

It beggar'd s
In her pavili
O'er-picturir

The fancy ou Stood pretty
With divers

To glow the
And what th
Agr.

Eno. Her
So many me
And made t

A seeming r
Swell with t
That yarely

A strange in
Of the adjac
Her people

Enthron'd ir Whistling to Had gone to

And made s
Agr.
Eno. Up

Invited her
It should be
Which she

Whom ne'en
Being barbe
And, for his

For what hi
Agr.
She made g

He plough'd
Eno.
Hop forty p

And having
That she di
And, breath

<sup>a</sup> The pun love-sick. Th
with them.

Now Antony must leave her utterly.
Never; he will not;
not wither her, nor custom stale
its variety: Other women cloy tastes they feed; but she makes hungry what she satisfies. For vilest things humble themselves in her; that the holy priests
when she is riggish.
Of beauty, wisdom, modesty, can settle of Antony, Octavia is lottery to him.

Let us go.—
Cicero, make yourself my guest,
and abide here.

Humbly, sir, I thank you. [Exeunt.]

III.—The same. A Room in Cæsar's House.

CÆSAR, ANTONY, OCTAVIA between them,
Attendants, and a Soothsayer.

The world, and my great office, will sometimes come from your bosom.

All which time
the gods my knee shall bow my prayers for you.

Good night, sir.—My Octavia,
my blemishes in the world's report:
I kept my square; but that to come shall be done by the rule. Good night, dear lady.—

Good night, sir.

Good night. [Exeunt CÆSAR and OCTAVIA.]

Now, sirrah! you do wish yourself in Egypt?
'Would I had never come from thence, nor er!

If you can, your reason?

I see it in my motion, have it not in my
But yet bid you to Egypt again.

May I say to me,
the tunes shall rise higher, Cæsar's or mine?
Cæsar's.

O Antony, stay not by his side:
I am (that thy spirit which keeps thee) is irragious, high, unmatchable, Cæsar's is not; but near him thy angel a Fear, as being o'erpower'd; therefore peace enough between you.

Speak this no more.

To none but thee; no more, but when to
thee.

Do not play with him at any game,
sure to lose; and, of that natural luck,
thee 'gainst the odds: thy lustre thickens shines by: I say again, thy spirit aid to govern thee near him;
way, 't is noble.

Get thee gone:
ventidius I would speak with him:—

[Exit Soothsayer.]

to Parthia.—Be it art, or hap, spoken true: The very dice obey him;
our sports my better cunning faints chance: if we draw lots, he speeds:
I do win the battle still of mine,
is all to nought; and his quails ever are, in hoop'd, at odds. I will to Egypt:
though I make this marriage for my peace,

Enter VENTIDIUS.

That my pleasure lies:—O, come, Ventidius, that to Parthia; your commission's ready:
I see, and receive it [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—The same. A Street.

Enter LEPIDUS, MÆCENAS, and AGRIPPA.

Lep. Trouble yourselves no further: pray you, hasten
Your generals after.

Agr. Sir, Mark Antony
Will e'en but kiss Octavia, and we'll follow.

Lep. Till I shall see you in your soldier's dress,
Which will become you both, farewell.

Mec. We shall,
As I conceive the journey, be at the Mount*
Before you, Lepidus.

Lep. Your way is shorter,
My purposes do draw me much about;
You'll win two days upon me.

Mec., Agr. Sir, good success!

Lep. Farewell. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Give me some music; music, moody food
Of us that trade in love.

Attend. The music, ho!

Enter MARDIAN.

Cleo. Let it alone; let us to billiards:
Come, Charmian.

Char. My arm is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an eunuch play'd
As with a woman:—Come, you'll play with me, sir?

Mar. As well as I can, madam.

Cleo. And when good will is show'd, though 't come too short,

The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now:—
Give me mine angle,—we'll to the river: there,
My music playing far off, I will betray Tawny-finn'd fishes; my bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,
And say, Ah, ha! you're caught.

Char. 'T was merry when
You wager'd on your angling; when your diver Did hang a salt-fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.

Cleo. That time!—O times!—
I laugh'd him out of patience; and that night
I laugh'd him into patience; and next morn,
Ere the ninth hour, I drunk him to his bed;
Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan. O! from Italy;

Enter a Messenger.

Ram thou thy fruitful tidings in mine ears,
That long time have been barren.

Mess. Madam, madam,—

Cleo. Antony's dead?—
If thou say so, villain, thou kill'st thy mistress:
But well and free,

If thou so yield him, there is gold, and here
My bluest veins to kiss; a hand that kings
Have lipp'd, and trembled kissing.

Mess. First, madam, he's well.

Cleo. Why, there's more gold. But, sirrah, mark:
we use

To say the dead are well: bring it to that,
The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat.

Mess. Good madam, hear me.

Cleo. Well, go to, I will;
But there's no goodness in thy face, if Antony
Be free and healthful:—so tart a favour

* At the Mount. This no doubt means at Mount Misenum.

To trumpet such good tidings! If not well,
Thou shouldst come like a fury crown'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man.

Mess. Will 't please you hear me?

Cleo. I have a mind to strike thee ere thou speak'st:
Yet, if thou say Antony lives, is well,
Or friends with Cæsar, or not captive to him,
I 'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail Rich pearls upon thee.

Mess. Madam, he 's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mess. And friends with Cæsar.

Cleo. Thou 'rt an honest man.

Mess. Cæsar and he are greater friends than ever.

Cleo. Make thee a fortune from me.

Mess. But yet, madam,—

Cleo. I do not like "but yet," it does allay
The good precedence; fie upon "but yet!"
"But yet" is as a gaoler to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Prithce, friend,
Pour out the pack of matter to mine ear,
The good and bad together: He 's friends with Cæsar;
In state of health thou say'st; and thou say'st free.

Mess. Free, madam! no; I made no such report:
He 's bound unto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turn?

Mess. For the best turn i' the bed.

Cleo. I am pale, Charmian.

Mess. Madam, he 's married to Octavia.

Cleo. The most infectious pestilence upon thee!
[Strikes him down.]

Mess. Good madam, patience.

Cleo. What say you?—Hence, [Strikes him again.]

Horrible villain! or I 'll spurn thine eyes
Like balls before me; I 'll unhair thy head;
[She hales him up and down.]
Thou shalt be whipp'd with wire, and stew'd in brine,
Smarting in ling'ring pickle.

Mess. Gracious madam,
I that do bring the news made not the match.

Cleo. Say, 't is not so, a province I will give thee,
And make thy fortunes proud: the blow thou hadst
Shall make thy peace for moving me to rage;
And I will boot thee with what gift beside Thy modesty can beg.

Mess. He 's married, madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liv'd too long.
[Draws a dagger.]

Mess. Nay, then I 'll run:—
What mean you, madam? I have made no fault. [Ex.]
Char. Good madam, keep yourself within yourself:
The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some innocents 'scape not the thunderbolt.—
Melt Egypt into Nile! and kindly creatures
Turn all to serpents!—Call the slave again;
Though I am mad, I will not bite him:—Call.

Char. He is afraid to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him:—
These hands do lack nobility, that they strike
A meaner than myself; since I myself
Have given myself the cause.—Come hither, sir.

Re-enter Messenger.

Though it be honest, it is never good
To bring bad news: Give to a gracious message
An host of tongues; but let ill tidings tell Themselves, when they be felt.

Mess. I have done my duty

Cleo. Is he married?
I cannot hate thee worse than I do
If thou again say, Yes.

Mess. He is married, madam.

Cleo. The gods confound thee! dost thou hold still?

Mess. Should I lie, madam?

Cleo. O, I would thou did
So half my Egypt were submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scald snakes! Go, get thee hence;
Hadst thou Narcissus in thy face, to me
Thou wouldst appear most ugly. He is married?

Mess. I crave your highness' pardon.

Cleo. He is married?

Mess. Take no offence that I would not offend y
To punish me for what you make me do Seems much unequal: he is married to Octavia.

Cleo. O, that his fault should make a knave of h
That art not what thou 'rt sure of!—Get thee hence
The merchandise which thou hast brought from Rome
Are all too dear for me; lie they upon thy hand,
And be undone by 'em!

[Exit Mess.]

Char. Good your highness, patience
Cleo. In praising Antony, I have disprais'd Cæsar
Char. Many times, madam.

Cleo. I am paid for 't now

Lead me from hence;
I faint; O Iras, Charmian.—'T is no matter:—
Go to the fellow, good Alexas; bid him
Report the feature of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination; let him not leave out
The colour of her hair:—bring me word quickly.—

[Exit Alex.]

Let him for ever go:—Let him not—Charmian,
Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,
'T other way he 's a Mars:—Bid you Alexas

[To MARRIUS]
Bring me word how tall she is.—Pity me, Charmian
But do not speak to me.—Lead me to my chamber.
[Exit]

SCENE VI.—Near Misenum.

*Enter POMPEY and MENAS at one side, with drum and trumpet: at another, CÆSAR, LEPIDUS, AN TONY, ENOBARBUS, MÆCENAS, with Soldiers march
ing.*

Pom. Your hostages I have, so have you mine;
And we shall talk before we fight.

Cæs. Most meet
That first we come to words; and therefore have we
Our written purposes before us sent;
Which, if thou hast consider'd, let us know
If 't will tie up thy discontented sword;
And carry back to Sicily much tall youth,
That else must perish here.

Pom. To you all three,
The senators alone of this great world,
Chief factors for the gods,—I do not know
Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son, and friends; since Julius Cæsar,
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. What was it That mov'd pale Cassius to conspire? And what Made all-honour'd, honest, Roman Brutus,
With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom,
To drench the Capitol; but that they would Have one man but a man? And that is it Hath made me rig my navy; at whose burden
The anger'd ocean foams; with which I meant
To scourge the ingratitude that spiteful Rome
Cast on my noble father.

Cæs. Take your time.

Ant. Thou canst not fear us, Pompey, with d

* The passage is somewhat obscure, but it has been explained:—"Thou art not an honest man, of which thyself assured, because thy master's fault has made of thee."

ee at sea: at land, thou know'st circumt thee.

At land, indeed,
me of my father's house;
o builds not for himself,
t mayst.

Be pleas'd to tell us present) how you take ent you.

There's the point.
ot be entreated to, but weigh brac'd.

And what may follow,
ne.

You have made me offer
and I must rates; then, to send Rome: This 'greed upon,
'd edges, and bear back

That's our offer.
Know then,
ere, a man prepar'd
But Mark Antony
atience:—Though I lose
elling, you must know,
ur brother were at blows,
's Sicily, and did find
y.

I have heard it, Pompey;
d for a liberal thanks,

Let me have your hand:
to have met you here.
he east are soft; and thanks to you,
dier than my purpose, hither;
t it.
Since I saw you last,
son you.

Well, I know not fortune casts upon my face;
all she never come,
er vassal.

Well met here.
Lepidus.—Thus we are agreed:
ion may be written,
as.

That's the next to do.
each other ere we part; and let us begin.

That will I, Pompey.
t, take the lot: but, first
gyptian cookery

I have heard that Julius Cæsar
g there.

You have heard much.
meanings, sir.

And fair words to them.
ch have I heard:—
pollodoros carried—that:—He did so.

What, I pray you?
een to Cæsar in a mattress.
now: How far'st thou, soldier?

Well;
do; for I perceive
d.

Let me shake thy hand;
I have seen thee fight,
thy behaviour.

Sir,
sch; but I have prais'd you, deserv'd ten times as much lid.

Pom. Enjoy thy plainness
It nothing ill becomes thee.—

Aboard my galley I invite you all:
Will you lead, lords?

Cæs., Ant., Lep. Show us the way, sir.

Pom. Come. [Exeunt POM., CÆS., ANT., LEP., Soldiers, and Attendants.]

Men. Thy father, Pompey, would ne'er have made this treaty.—[Aside.—] You and I have known, sir.

Eno. At sea, I think.

Men. We have, sir.

Eno. You have done well by water.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. I will praise any man that will praise me;
though it cannot be denied what I have done by land.

Men. Nor what I have done by water.

Eno. Yes, something you can deny for your own safety: you have been a great thief by sea.

Men. And you by land.

Eno. There I deny my land service. But give me your hand, Menas: If our eyes had authority, here they might take two thieves kissing.

Men. All men's faces are true, whatsoe'er their hands are.

Eno. But there is never a fair woman has a true face.

Men. No slander; they steal hearts.

Eno. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his fortune.

Eno. If he do, sure he cannot weep it back again.

Men. You have said, sir. We looked not for Mark Antony here. Pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Eno. Cæsar's sister is call'd Octavia.

Men. True, sir; she was the wife of Caius Marcellus.

Eno. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius.

Men. Pray you, sir?

Eno. 'T is true.

Men. Then is Cæsar and he for ever knit together.

Eno. If I were bound to divine of this unity, I would not prophesy so.

Men. I think the policy of that purpose made more in the marriage than the love of the parties.

Eno. I think so too. But you shall find the band that seems to tie their friendship together will be the very strangler of their amity: Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conversation.

Men. Who would not have his wife so?

Eno. Not he, that himself is not so; which is Mark Antony. He will to his Egyptian dish again: then shall the sighs of Octavia blow the fire up in Cæsar;
and, as I said before, that which is the strength of their amity shall prove the immediate author of their variance. Antony will use his affection where it is; he married but his occasion here.

Men. And thus it may be. Come, sir, will you aboard? I have a health for you.

Eno. I shall take it, sir: we have used our throats in Egypt.

Men. Come; let's away. [Exeunt]

SCENE VII.—On board Pompey's Galley, lying near Misenum.

Music. Enter Two or Three Servants, with a banquet

1 Serv. Here they 'll be, man: Some o' their plants are ill-rooted already, the least wind i' the world will blow them down.

2 Serv. Lepidus is high-coloured.

1 Serv. They have made him drink alms-drink.

2 Serv. As they pinch one another by the disposition, he cries out "no more;" reconciles them to his entreaty, and himself to the drink.

1 Serv. But it raises the greater war between him and his discretion.

2 Serv. Why this it is to have a name in great men's fellowship: I had as lief have a reed that will do me no service, as a partizan I could not heave.

1 Serv. To be called into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in 't, are the holes where eyes should be, which pitifully disaster the cheeks.

A sennet sounded. Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, POMPEY, LEPIDUS, AGRIPPA, MENEAS, ENOBARBUS, MENAS, with other captains.

Ant. Thus do they, sir: [To Cæs.] They take the flow o' the Nile

By certain scales i' the pyramid; they know, By the height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth Or foison follow: The higher Nilus swells, The more it promises: as it ebbs, the seedsman Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain, And shortly comes to harvest.

Lep. You have strange serpents there.

Ant. Ay, Lepidus.

Lep. Your serpent of Egypt is bred now of your mud by the operation of your sun: so is your crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sit,—and some wine.—A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be, but I 'll ne'er out.

Eno. Not till you have slept; I fear me you 'll be in till then.

Lep. Nay, certainly, I have heard the Ptolemies' pyramids are very goodly things; without contradiction, I have heard that.

Men. Pompey, a word.

[Aside.

Pom. Say in mine ear: what is 't?

Men. Forsake thy seat, I do beseech thee, captain,

[Aside.

And hear me speak a word.

Pom. Forbear me till anon,—

This wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o' thing is your crocodile?

Ant. It is shaped, sir, like itself; and it is as broad as it hath breadth: it is just so high as it is, and moves with its own organs; it lives by that which nourisheth it: and the elements once out of it, it transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of its own colour too.

Lep. 'T is a strange serpent.

Ant. 'T is so. And the tears of it are wet.

Cæs. Will this description satisfy him?

Ant. With the health that Pompey gives him; else he is a very epicure.

Pom. [To MEN. aside.] Go hang, sir, hang! Tell me of that? away!

Do as I bid you—Where 's this cup I call'd for?

Men. If for the sake of merit thou wilt hear me, Rise from thy stool. [Aside.

Pom. I think thou 'rt mad. The matter? [Rises, and walks aside.

Men. I have ever held my cap off to thy fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast serv'd me with much faith. What 's else to say?

Be jolly, lords.

Ant. These quicksands, Lepidus,

Keep off them, for you sink.

Men. Wilt thou be lord of all the world?

Pom. What say'st thou?

Men. Wilt thou be lord of the whole world? That 's twice.

Pom. How should that be?

Men. But entertain it, And though thou think me poor, I am the man Will give thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunk well?

Men. No, Pompey, I have kept me from the cup.

Thou art, if thou dar'st be, the earthly Jew Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips, Is thine, if thou wilt have 't.

Pom. Show me which

Men. These three world-sharers, these are in thy vessel: Let me cut the cable; And, when we are put off, fall to their throats: All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou should'st ha' And not have spoke on 't! In me, 't is still in thee, it had been good service. Thou 'st not my profit that does lead mine loss: Mine honour, it. Repent, that e'er thy an' Hath so betray'd thine act: Being done as I should have found it afterwards well done, But must condemn it now. Desist, and bid 'em hold.

Men. For this, I 'll never follow thy pall'd fortunes more— Who seeks, and will not take, when once he Shall never find it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus

Ant. Bear him ashore.—I 'll pledge it to him.

Eno. Here 's to thee, Menas.

Men. Enobarbus, ay.

Pom. Fill till the cup be hid.

Eno. There 's a strong fellow, Menas. [To the Attendant who carries off the cups.

Men. Why?

Eno. A bears the third part of the weight. Seest not?

Men. The third part then is drunk: Would all, that it might go on wheels!

Eno. Drink thou; increase the wheel.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it.—Strike the vessels here is to Caesar.

Cæs. I could well forbear it. It 's monstrous labour when I wash my brain And it grows fouler.

Ant. Be a child o' the time.

Cæs. Possess it, I 'll make answer: But I had rather fast from all four days, Than drink so much in one.

Eno. Ha, my brave emperor! Shall we dance now the Egyptian Bacchanals?

And celebrate our drink?

Pom. Let 's ha' 't, good soldiers.

Ant. Come, let us all take hands; Till that the conquering wine hath steep'd us In soft and delicate Lethe.

Eno. All take hands.— Make battery to our ears with the loud music: The while, I 'll place you. Then the boy shall

The holding* every man shall bear, as loud As his strong sides can volley. [Music plays, and places them hand to hand.

SONG.

Come, thou monarch of the vine,
Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyes:
In thy vats our cares be drown'd;
With thy grapes our hairs be crown'd.
Cup us, till the world go round;
Cup us, till the world go round!

Cæs. What would you more?—Pompey, Good brother,

Let me request you off: our graver business frowns at this levity.—Gentle lords, let 's go: You see we have burnt our cheeks: strong drink is weaker than the wine; and mine own tongue splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath antic'd us all. What needs more words! Good Antony, your hand.

* Holding—the burden of the song.

I'll try you o' the shore.
 sir; give 's your hand.
 ky, you have my father-house,—
 friends: Come, down into the boat.
 I you fall not.—Menas, I'll not on [Exeunt POM., CÆS., ANT.,
 and Attendants.

Men. No, to my cabin.—
 These drums!—these trumpets, flutes! what!—
 Let Neptune hear we bid a loud farewell To these great fellows: sound, and be hang'd, sound out! [A flourish of trumpets, with drums.
 Eno. Ho, says a!—There 's my cap.
 Men. Ho!—noble captain! Come. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

E 1.—A Plain in Syria.

as it were in triumph, with SILIUS, ans, Officers, and Soldiers; the dead is borne before him.

ing Parthia, art thou struck; and es of Marcus Crassus' death

 —Bear the king's son's body
 Thy Pacorus, Orodes, us Crassus.

Noble Ventidius,
 arthian blood thy sword is warm,
 ians follow; spur through Media,
 the shelters whither thy grand captain Antony triumphant chariots, and y head.

O Silius, Silius,
 h: A lower place, note well,
 at an act: For learn this, Silius, lone, than by our deed
 fame, when him we serve 's away.
 r, have ever won
 r than person: Sossius,
 a Syria, his lieutenant,
 lation of renown,
 l by the minute, lost his favour.
 us more than his captain can in's captain: and ambition, s, rather makes choice of loss,
 darkens him.
 do Antonius good,
 d him; and in his offence
 nance perish.

Thou hast, Ventidius, that,
 a soldier, and his sword,
 nction. Thou wilt write to Antony?
 ly signify what in his name,
 l of war, we have effected;
 ners, and his well-paid ranks,
 m horse of Parthia
 o' the field.

Where is he now?
 eth to Athens: whither with what st convey with us will permit,

 fore him.—On, there; pass along.
 [Exeunt.

me. An Ante-Chamber in Cæsar's House.

PA, and ENOBARBUS, meeting.

the brothers parted?
 despatch'd with Pompey, he is gone;
 sealing. Octavia weeps
 e; Cæsar is sad; and Lepidus, st, as Menas says, is troubled kness.

'T is a noble Lepidus.
 e one: O, how ne loves Cæsar!

Agr. Nay, but how dearly he adores Mark Antony!

Eno. Cæsar? Why, he 's the Jupiter of men.

Agr. What 's Antony? The god of Jupiter.

Eno. Spake you of Cæsar? How? the nonpareil!

Agr. O Antony! O thou Arabian bird!

Eno. Would you praise Cæsar, say,—Cæsar;—go no further.

Agr. Indeed, he plied them both with excellent praises.

Eno. But he loves Cæsar best:—Yet he loves
 Antony:

Ho! hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho, his love
 To Antony. But as for Cæsar, Kneel down, kneel down, and wonder.

Agr. Both he loves.

Eno. They are his shards, and he their beetle. So,— [Trumpets.

This is to horse—Adieu, noble Agrippa.

Agr. Good fortune, worthy soldier; and farewell.

Enter CÆSAR, ANTONY, LEPIDUS, and OCTAVIA.

Ant. No further, sir.

Cæs. You take from me a great part of myself;
 Use me well in it.—Sister, prove such a wife
 As my thoughts make thee, and as my farthest band
 Shall pass on thy approval.—Most noble Antony,
 Let not the piece of virtue which is set Betwixt us, as the cement of our love,
 To keep it builded, be the ram to batter
 The fortress of it: for better might we Have loved without this mean, if on both parts
 This be not cherish'd.

Ant. Make me not offended

In your distrust.

Cæs. I have said.

Ant. You shall not find,
 Though you be therein curious, the least cause
 For what you seem to fear: So, the gods keep you,
 And make the hearts of Romans serve your ends!
 We will here part.

Cæs. Farewell, my dearest sister, fare thee well.

The elements be kind to thee, and make

Thy spirits all of comfort! fare thee well.

Octa. My noble brother!—

Ant. The April 's in her eyes: It is love's spring,

And these the showers to bring it on.—Be cheerful.

Octa. Sir, look well to my husband's house; and—

Cæs. What,

Octavia?

Octa. I'll tell you in your ear.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can
 Her heart inform her tongue: the swan's down feather,
 That stands upon the swell at the full of tide,
 And neither way inclines.

Eno. Will Cæsar weep? [Aside to AGrippa.

Agr. He has a cloud in 's face.

Eno. He were the worse for that, were he a horse;

So is he, being a man.*

* Stevens says that "a horse is said to have a cloud in his face when he has a black or dark-coloured spot in his forehead between his eyes."

Agr. Why, Enobarbus?
When Antony found Julius Cæsar dead,
He cried almost to roaring: and he wept,
When at Philippi he found Brutus slain.

Eno. That year, indeed, he was troubled with a rheum;
What willingly he did confound<sup>a</sup> he wail'd:
Believe 't, till I weep too.

Cæs. No, sweet Octavia,
You shall hear from me still; the time shall not
Out-go my thinking on you.

Ant. Come, sir, come;
I'll wrestle with you in my strength of love:
Look, here I have you; thus I let you go,
And give you to the gods.

Cæs. Adieu; be happy!
Lep. Let all the number of the stars give light
To thy fair way!

Cæs. Farewell, farewell! [Kisses OCTAVIA.]
Ant. Farewell!

[Trumpets sound. Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and ALEXAS.

Cleo. Where is the fellow?
Alex. Half afraid to come.
Cleo. Go to, go to:—Come hither, sir.

Enter a Messenger.

Alex. Good majesty, Herod of Jewry dare not look upon you,
But when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head
I'll have: But how? when Antony is gone Through whom I might command it.—Come thou near.

Mess. Most gracious majesty,—
Cleo. Didst thou behold
Octavia?

Mess. Ay, dread queen.
Cleo. Where?
Mess. Madam, in Rome
I look'd her in the face; and saw her led Between her brother and Mark Antony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?
Mess. She is not, madam.
Cleo. Didst hear her speak? Is she shrill-tongu'd, or low?

Mess. Madam, I heard her speak; she is low-voic'd.
Cleo. That 's not so good:—he cannot like her long.
Char. Like her? O Isis! 't is impossible.
Cleo. I think so, Charmian: Dull of tongue, and dwarfish!—

What majesty is in her gait? Remember,
If e'er thou look'dst on majesty.

Mess. She creeps:
Her motion and her station<sup>b</sup> are as one:
She shows a body rather than a life;
A statue, than a breather.

Cleo. Is this certain?
Mess. Or I have no observance.
Char. Three in Egypt
Cannot make better note.

Cleo. He 's very knowing,
I do perceive 't:—There 's nothing in her yet:—
The fellow has good judgment.

Char. Excellent.
Cleo. Guess at her years, I prithee.
Mess. Madam,

She was a widow.
Char. Widow?—Charmian, hark.
Ant. And I do think she 's thirty.

<sup>a</sup> found—destroy.

<sup>b</sup> station is the act of standing, as motion is the act of moving.

Cleo. Bear'st thou her face in mind? is 't round?

Mess. Round even to faultiness.

Cleo. For the most part too, they are foolish
so.

Her hair, what colour?

Mess. Brown, madam: And her forehead
As low as she would wish it.

Cleo. There 's gold for d
Thou must not take my former sharpness ill:—
I will employ thee back again; I find thee
Most fit for business: Go, make thee ready;
Our letters are prepar'd. [Exit M.]

Char. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed, he is so: I repent me much That so I harried<sup>a</sup> him. Why, methinks, by This creature 's no such thing.

Char. Nothing, madam.
Cleo. The man hath seen some majesty, and know.

Char. Hath he seen majesty? Isis else defend
And serving you so long!

Cleo. I have one thing more to ask him yet,
Charmian:

But 't is no matter; thou shalt bring him to me
Where I will write: All may be well enough.
Char. I warrant you, madam. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Athens. A Room in Antony's Palace.

Enter ANTONY and OCTAVIA.

Ant. Nay, nay, Octavia, not only that,—
That were excusable, that, and thousands more
Of semblable import,—but he hath wag'd
New wars 'gainst Pompey; made his will, and To public ear:

Spoke scantily of me: when perforce he could not
But pay me terms of honour, cold and sickly
He vented them; most narrow measure lent me,
When the best hint was given him: he not look'd
Or did it from his teeth.<sup>b</sup>

Octa. O my good lord,
Believe not all; or, if you must believe,
Stomach not all. A more unhappy lady,
If this division chance, ne'er stood between,
Praying for both parts:
The good gods will mock me presently,
When I shall pray, "O, bless my lord and husband,
Undo that prayer, by crying out as loud,
"O, bless my brother!" Husband win, win husband Prays, and destroys the prayer; no midway
Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia,
Let your best love draw to that point which would Best to preserve it: If I lose mine honour,
I lose myself: better I were not yours,
Than yours so branchless. But, as you request,
Yourself shall go between us: The mean time,
I'll raise the preparation of a war
Shall stain your brother: Make your sweetest love
So your desires are yours.

Octa. Thanks to my lord,
The Jove of power make me most weak, most Your reconciler! Wars 'twixt you twain would
As if the world should cleave, and that cleave
Should solder up the rift.

Ant. When it appears to you where this begins
Turn your displeasure that way; for our families
Can never be so equal, that your love

<sup>a</sup> Harried. To harry is to vex, to torment, to weary same as harass.

<sup>b</sup> He look'd not upon the people as one who is them with sincerity—he spoke from his teeth, and not full utterance of the heart.

move with them. Provide your going ;
own company, and command what cost mind to. [Exeunt.

The same. Another Room in the same.

ENOBARRBUS and EROS, meeting.

now, friend Eros ?
's strange news come, sir.
man ?
r and Lepidus have made wars upon old : What is the success ?

r, having made use of him in the wars y, presently denied him rivalry ; would take in the glory of the action : and not accuses him of letters he had formerly pey ; upon his own appeal, seizes him :
rd is up, till death enlarge his confine.

world, thou hast a pair of chaps, no
;
ween them all the food thou hast,
the one the other. Where 's Antony ?
; walking in the garden — thus ; and
as lies before him ; cries, " Fool, Lepidus !"
e throat of that his officer,
l Pompey.

Our great navy 's rigged. taly, and Caesar. More, Domitius ;
as you presently : my news
old hereafter.

"T will be nought :
—Bring me to Antony.

; sir. [Exeunt.

—Rome. A Room in Caesar's House.

CAESAR, AGRIPPA, and MEOBURNAS.

gning Rome, he has done all this : And —here 's the manner of it,— place, on a tribunal silver'd, himself in chairs of gold enthron'd : at the feet, sat

m they call my father's son ;
lawful issue, that their lust made between them. Unto her abishment of Egypt ; made her Cyprus, Lydia,

This in the public eye ?
common show-place, where they exer-

re proclaim'd, The kings of kings :
Parthia, and Armenia, xander ; to Ptolemy he assign'd and Phœnicia : She ents of the goddess Isis ar'd ; and oft before gave audience, s, so.

Let Rome be thus inform'd.
queasy with his insolence already,
l thoughts call from him.
ople know it ; and have now receiv'd

Whom does he accuse ?
: and that, having in Sicily us spoil'd, we had not rated him isle : then does he say, he lent me unrestor'd : lastly, he frets, of the triumvirate
w'd ; and, being, that we detain

Agr. Sir, this should be answer'd.

Cæs. 'T is done already, and the messenger gone.

I have told him, Lepidus was grown too cruel ;
That he his high authority abus'd,
And did deserve his change ; for what I have conquer'd,
I grant him part ; but then, in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd kingdoms, I Demand the like.

Mec. He 'll never yield to that.

Cæs. Nor must not then be yielded to in this.

Enter OCTAVIA.

Octa. Hail, Caesar, and my lord ! hail, most dear
Caesar !

Cæs. That ever I should call thee, cast-away !

Octa. You have not call'd me so, nor have you cause.

Cæs. Why have you stolen upon us thus ? You come not

Like Caesar's sister : The wife of Antony Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appear ; the trees by the way
Should have borne men ; and expectation fainted, Longing for what it had not : nay, the dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven
Rais'd by your populous troops : But you are come
A market-maid to Rome ; and have prevented
The ostentation of our love, which, left unshown
Is often left unlov'd : we should have met you
By sea and land ; supplying every stage
With an augmented greeting.

Octa. Good my lord,

To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free-will. My lord, Mark Antony, Hearing that you prepar'd for war, acquainted
My grieved ear withal : whereon, I begg'd
His pardon for return.

Cæs. Which soon he granted,
Being an abstract 'tween his lust and him.

Octa. Do not say so, my lord.

Cæs. I have eyes upon him,
And his affairs come to me on the wind.
Where is he now ?

Octa. My lord, in Athens.

Cæs. No, my most wronged sister ; Cleopatra Hath nodded him to her. He hath given his empire
Up to a whore ; who now are levying
The kings o' the earth for war : He hath assembled Bocchus, the king of Libya ; Archelaus,
Of Cappadocia ; Philadelphos, king
Of Paphlagonia ; the Thracian king, Adallas :
King Malchus of Arabia ; king of Pont ;
Herod of Jewry ; Mithridates, king
Of Comagene ; Polemon and Amintas,
The kings of Mede, and Lycaonia,
With a more larger list of sceptres.

Octa. Ah me, most wretched,
That have my heart parted betwixt two friends,
That do afflict each other !

Cæs. Welcome hither :
Your letters did withhold our breaking forth !
Till we perceiv'd, both how you were wrong led,
And we in negligent danger. Cheer your heart :
Be you not troubled with the time, which drives
O'er your content these strong necessities ;
But let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way. Welcome to Rome :
Nothing more dear to me. You are abus'd
Beyond the mark of thought : and the high gods.
To do you justice, make their ministers
Of us, and those that love you. Best of comfort ;
And ever welcome to us.

Agr. Welcome, lady.

Mec. Welcome, dear madam.
Each heart in Rome does love and pity you.
Only the adulterous Antony, most large
In his abominations, turns you off;
And gives his potent regiment* to a trull,
That noises it against us.

Octa. Is it so, sir?
Cæs. Most certain. Sister, welcome; Pray you,
Be ever known to patience: My dearest sister! [Exeunt.]

SCENE VII.—Antony's Camp, near to the Promontory of Actium.

Enter CLEOPATRA and ENOBARBUS.

Cleo. I will be even with thee, doubt it not.
Eno. But, why, why, why?
Cleo. Thou hast forsok<sup>b</sup> my being in these wars;
And say'st, it is not fit.
Eno. Well, is it, is it?
Cleo. If not denounc'd against us, why should not we
Be there in person?
Eno. [Aside.] Well, I could reply:—
If we should serve with horse and mares together,
The horse were merely<sup>c</sup> lost; the mares would bear
A soldier, and his horse.

Cleo. What is't you say?
Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Antony;
Take from his heart, take from his brain, from his time,
What should not then be spar'd. He is already Traduc'd for levity; and 't is said in Rome,
That Photinus an eunuch, and your maids,
Manage this war.

Cleo. Sink Rome; and their tongues rot,
That speak against us! A charge we bear i' the war,
And, as the president of my kingdom, will Appear there for a man. Speak not against it;
I will not stay behind.

Eno. Nay, I have done:
Here comes the emperor.

Enter ANTONY and CANIDIUS.

Ant. Is it not strange, Canidius,
That from Tarentum, and Brundisium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian sea,
And take in<sup>d</sup> Tornyne?—You have heard on 't, sweet?
Cleo. Celerity is never more admir'd
Than by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might have well becom'd the best of men,
To taunt at slackness.—Canidius, we Will fight with him by sea.

Cleo. By sea! What else?
Ant. Why will my lord do so?

Ant. For that he dares us to 't.
Eno. So hath my lord dar'd him to single fight.

Can. Ay, and to wage this battle at Pharsalia,
Where Cæsar fought with Pompey: But these offers,
Which serve not for his vantage, he shakes off;
And so should you.

Eno. Your ships are not well mann'd:
Your mariners are muliters, reapers, people
Ingross'd by swift impress: in Cæsar's fleet
Are those that often have 'gainst Pompey fought:
Their ships are yare: yours, heavy. No disgrace Shall fall you for refusing him at sea,
Being prepar'd for land.

Ant. By sea, by sea.
Eno. Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen; leave unexecuted
Your own renowned knowledge; quite forego

* Regiment—government, authority.
<sup>b</sup> He—spoken against. <sup>c</sup> Merely—entirely.
<sup>d</sup> Take in—gain by conquest.

The way which promises assurance, and Give up yourself merely to chance and hazard
From firm security.

Ant. I'll fight at sea.
Cleo. I have sixty sails, Cæsar none better.
Ant. Our overplus of shipping will we beat
And, with the rest full-mann'd, from the Actium

Beat the approaching Cæsar. But if we fail,
Enter a Messenger.

We then can do 't at land.—Thy business?
Mess. The news is true, my lord; he is dead
Cæsar has taken Tornyne.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 't is impossible
Strange that his power should be.—Canidius,
Our nineteen legions thou shalt hold by land,
And our twelve thousand horse—We'll to sea

Enter a Soldier.

Away, my Thetis!—How now, worthy soldier?
Sold. O noble emperor, do not fight by sea;
Trust not to rotten planks: Do you miscount
This sword, and these my wounds! Let the Egyptians And the Phœnicians go a ducking; we Have used to conquer, standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well, away.
[Exeunt ANTONY, CLEOPATRA
ENOBARBUS.]

Sold. By Hercules, I think, I am i' the right.
Can. Soldier, thou art: but his whole action Not in the power on 't: So our leader's led,
And we are women's men.

Sold. You keep by land
The legions and the horse whole, do you not?
Can. Marcus Octavius, Marcus Junius, Publicola, and Cælius, are for sea:
But we keep whole by land. This speed of Cæsar Carries beyond belief.

Sold. While he was yet in Rome
His power went out in such distractions,<sup>e</sup>
As beguil'd all spies.

Can. Who's his lieutenant, here?
Sold. They say, one Taurus.
Can. Well, I know the

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The emperor calls Canidius.
Can. With news the time's with labour: and forth,
Each minute, some.

SCENE VIII.—A Plain near Actium.

Enter CÆSAR, TAURUS, Officers, and others.

Cæs. Taurus,— Taur. My lord.
Cæs. Strike not by land; keep Provoke not battle, till we have done at sea.
Do not exceed the prescript of this scroll:
Our fortune lies upon this jump.

Enter ANTONY and ENOBARBUS.

Ant. Set we our squadrons on you side o' the
In eye of Cæsar's battle: from which place
We may the number of the ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly.

Enter CANIDIUS, marching with his land army way over the stage; and TAURUS, the Lieutenant CÆSAR, the other way. After their going heard the noise of a sea-fight.

Alarum. Re-enter ENOBARBUS.
Eno. Naught, naught, all naught! I can hold longer:

<sup>e</sup> Distractions—distractions.

ed, the Egyptian admiral,
 in sixty, fly, and turn the rudder :
 mine eyes are blasted.

Enter SCARUS.

Gods, and goddesses,
 the synod of them !

What 's thy passion ?
 the greater cante<sup>a</sup> of the world is lost in Rome ; we have kiss'd away our provinces.

How appears the fight ?
 our side like the token'd pestilence,<sup>b</sup>
 is sure. Yon' ribald-rid nag of Egypt, thy o'ertake ! i' the midst o' the fight,—
 he goes like a pair of twins appear'd,
 one lame, or rather ours the elder,
 upon her, like a cow in June,
 and flies.
 If I beheld :
 I sicken at the sight, and could not bear the view.

She once being loof'd,
 in of her magic, Antony,
 sea-wing, and like a doting mallard, fight in height, flies after her :
 an action of such shame ;
 manhood, honour, ne'er before so itself.

Alack, alack !

Enter CANIDIUS.

Fortune on the sea is out of breath, most lamentably. Had our general known himself, it had gone well :
 an example for our flight,
 by his own.

Are you thereabouts ? Why then, good friend, indeed. [Aside.]
 Are the Peloponnesus are they fled so easy to't ;
 will attend what further comes.
 Caesar will I render and my horse ; six kings already in way of yielding.

I'll yet follow
 the chance of Antony, though my reason is against me. [Exeunt.]

[Enter ANTONY and ATTENDANTS.]

Enter ANTONY and ATTENDANTS.

The land bids me tread no more upon't,
 to bear me !—Friends, come hither,
 in the world, that I
 my way for ever :—I have a ship sold ; take that, divide it ; fly,
 our peace with Cæsar.

Fly ! not we.
 I fled myself ; and have instructed cowards to show their shoulders.—Friends, be gone ;
 I resolv'd upon a course,
 I need of you ; be gone :
 in the harbour, take it.—O,
 if I blush to look upon :
 do mutiny, for the white grown for rashness, and they them doting.—Friends, be gone ; you shall from me to some friends, that will say for you. Pray you, look not sad,

and sentence—the pestilence which is mortal, when set on the skin which are called God's tokens.
 the god fly.

Nor make replies of loathness : take the hint
 Which my despair proclaims ; let that be left
 Which leaves itself : to the sea-side straightway :
 I will possess you of that ship and treasure.
 Leave me, I pray, a little : pray you now :—
 Nay, do so ; for, indeed, I have lost command.
 Therefore I pray you :—I'll see you by and by.

[Sits down.]

Enter EROS and CLEOPATRA, led by CHARMIAN and IRAS.

Eros. Nay, gentle madam, to him :—Comfort him.
Iras. Do, most dear queen.

Char. Do ! why, what else ?

Cleo. Let me sit down. O Juno !

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you here, sir ?

Ant. O fie, fie, fie !

Char. Madam,—

Iras. Madam ; O good empress !—

Eros. Sir, sir,—

Ant. Yes, my lord, yes :—He, at Philippi, kept His sword even like a dancer ;<sup>a</sup> while I struck
 The lean and wrinkled Cassius ; and 't was I
 That the mad Brutus ended : he alone Dealt on lieutenantry,<sup>b</sup> and no practice had
 In the brave squares of war : Yet now—No matter.

Cleo. Ah, stand by.

Eros. The queen, my lord, the queen.

Iras. Go to him, madam, speak to him ;
 He is unqualified with very shame.

Cleo. Well then,—Sustain me :—O !

Eros. Most noble sir, arise ; the queen approaches ;
 Her head 's declin'd, and death will seize her ; but Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I have offended reputation ;
 A most un noble swerving.

Eros. Sir, the queen.

Ant. O, whither hast thou led me, Egypt ? See,
 How I convey my shame out of thine eyes
 By looking back on what I have left behind
 'Stroy'd in dishonour.

Cleo. O my lord, my lord !
 Forgive my fearful sails ; I little thought
 You would have follow'd.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well
 My heart was to thy rudder tied by the strings,
 And thou shouldst tow me after : O'er my spirit
 Thy full supremacy thou knew'st ; and that Thy beck might from the bidding of the gods Command me.

Cleo. O, my pardon.

Ant. Now I must
 To the young man send humble treaties, dodge
 And palter in the shifts of lowness ; who
 With half the bulk o' the world play'd as I pleas'd, Making and marring fortunes. You did know How much you were my conqueror ; and that My sword, made weak by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. Pardon, pardon.

Ant. Fall not a tear, I say ; one of them rates
 All that is won and lost : Give me a kiss :
 Even this repays me.—We sent our schoolmaster,
 Is he come back ?—Love, I am full of lead :—
 Some wine, within there, and our viands :—Fortune knows

We scorn her most when most she offers blows.

[Exeunt.]

<sup>a</sup> A passage in "All's Well that Ends Well" explains this allusion :—

"Till honour be bought up, and so swayed down,
 But one to dance with."

<sup>b</sup> Made war by lieutenants.

SCENE X.—Cæsar's Camp, in Egypt.Enter CÆSAR, DOLABELLA, THYREUS, and others.

Cæs. Let him appear that's come from Antony.—
Know you him?

Dol. Cæsar, 't is his schoolmaster :
An argument that he is pluck'd, when hither
He sends so poor a pinion of his wing,
Which had superfluous kings for messengers,
Not many moons gone by.

Enter EUPHRONIUS.

Cæs. Approach, and speak.

Eup. Such as I am, I come from Antony :
I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the morn-dew on the myrtle-leaf
To his grand sea.

Cæs. Be it so : Declare thine office.
Eup. Lord of his fortunes he salutes thee, and Requires to live in Egypt : which not granted,
He lessens his requests ; and to thee sues
To let him breathe between the heavens and earth,
A private man in Athens : This for him.
Next, Cleopatra does confess thy greatness ;
Submits her to thy might ; and of thee craves
The circle of the Ptolemies for her heirs,
Now hazarded to thy grace.

Cæs. For Antony,
I have no ears to his request. The queen
Of audience, nor desire, shall fail ; so she
From Egypt drive her all-disgraced friend,
Or take his life there : This if she perform,
She shall not sue unheard. So to them both.

Eup. Fortune pursue thee !

Cæs. Bring him through the bands.

[Exit EUPHRONIUS.]

To try thy eloquence, now 't is time : Despatch ;
From Antony win Cleopatra : promise,

[To THYREUS.]

And in our name, what she requires ; add more,
From thine invention, offers : women are not
In their best fortunes strong ; but want will perjure
The ne'er-touch'd vestal : Try thy cunning, Thyreus, Make thine own edict for thy pains, which we Will answer as a law.

Thyr. Cæsar, I go.

Cæs. Observe how Antony becomes his flaw ;
And what thou think'st at his very action speaks
In every power that moves.

Thyr. Cæsar, I shall. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XI.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.Enter CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus ?

Eno. Think, and die.

Cleo. Is Antony, or we, in fault for this ?

Eno. Antony only, that would make his will Lord of his reason. What although you fled
From that great face of war, whose several ranges
Frighted each other ? why should he follow ?
The itch of his affection should not then
Have nick'd his captainship ; at such a point,
When half to half the world oppos'd, he being
The mered<sup>a</sup> question : 'T was a shame no less Than was his loss, to course your flying flags,
And leave his navy gazing.

Cleo. Prithee, peace.

Enter ANTONY, with EUPHRONIUS.

Ant. Is that his answer ?

<sup>a</sup> Mered. Mere is a boundary ; and to mere is to mark, to "vit."

Eup. Ay, my lord.

Ant. The queen shall then have courtesy, so yield

Us up.

Eup. He says so.

Ant. Let her know it.—

To the boy Cæsar send this grizzled head,
And he will fill thy wishes to the brim
With principalities.

Cleo. That head, my lord ?

Ant. To him again : Tell him, he wears the
Of youth upon him ; from which the world shows
Something particular : his coins, ships, legions,
May be a coward's ; whose ministers would prove Under the service of a child, as soon
As i' the command of Cæsar : I dare him then
To lay his gay comparisons apart,
And answer me declin'd,* sword against sword,
Ourselves alone : I 'll write it ; follow me.

[Exeunt ANT. and

Eno. Yes, like enough, high-battled Cæsar will Unstate his happiness, and be stag'd to the show, Against a sworder.—I see, men's judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes ; and things outward
Do draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. That he should dream, Knowing all measures, the full Cæsar will Answer his emptiness !—Cæsar, thou hast addid
His judgment too.

Enter an Attendant.

Att. A messenger from Cæsar.

Cleo. What, no more ceremony !—See, my women
Against the blown rose may they stop their noses,
That kneel'd unto the buds.—Admit him, sir.

Eno. Mine honesty and I begin to squand. [Exit
The loyalty, well held to fools, does make
Our faith mere folly :—Yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fallen lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer,
And earns a place i' the story.

Enter THYREUS.

Cleo. Cæsar's will !

Thyr. Hear it apart.

Cleo. None but friends ; say boldly.

Thyr. So, haply, are they friends to Antony.

Eno. He needs as many, sir, as Cæsar has ;
Or needs not us. If Cæsar please, our master
Will leap to be his friend : For us, you know,
Whose he is, we are ; and that is Cæsar's.

Thyr. So—

Thus then, thou most renown'd : Cæsar entreats
Not to consider in what case thou stand'st,
Further than he is Cæsar.

Cleo. Go on : Right royal.

Thyr. He knows that you embrace not Antony
As you did love, but as you fear'd him.

Cleo. O !

Thyr. The scars upon your honour, therefore, it Does pity, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserv'd.

Cleo. He is a god, and knows
What is most right : Mine honour was not yielded,
But conquer'd merely.

Eno. To be sure of that,
I will ask Antony.—Sir, sir, thou art so bold,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking, for Thy dearest quit thee.

Thyr. Shall I say to Cæsar
What you require of him ? for as partly beg

* Johnson explains the passage thus : "I require of thee not to depend on that superiority which the conquest of different fortunes may exhibit to him, but to answer as such man, in this decline of my age or power."

o give. It much would please him, times you should make a staff
 but it would warm his spirits,
 ne you had left Antony,
 elf under his shroud,
 landlord.

What's your name?
 name is Thyreus.

Most kind messenger,
 esar this, In disputation u'ring hand: tell him, I am prompt wn at 's feet, and there to kneel:
 his all-obeying breath I hear gypt.

'T is your noblest course.
 ortune combating together,
 ner dare but what it can,
 y shake it. Give me grace to lay our hand.

Your Caesar's father,
 ath mus'd of taking kingdoms in,
 ps on that unworthy place,
 ses.

Enter ANTONY and ENOBARBUS.

Favours, by Jove that thunders!— fellow?

One, that but performs
 f the fullest man, and worthiest and obey'd.

You will be whipp'd.
 ach, there:—Ay, you kite!—Now gods devils!
 ts from me: Of late, when I cried "ho!"
 o a muss,* kings would start forth, ur will?" Have you no ears?

Enter Attendants.

yet. Take hence this Jack, and whip etter playing with a lion's whelp, old one dying.

Moon and stars!
 Were 't twenty of the greatest tributaries wledge Caesar, should I find them
 the hand of she here, (What's her name, Cleopatra?)—Whip him, fellows,
 y, you see him cringe his face,
 and for mercy: Take him hence.
 Antony.—

Tug him away: being whipp'd, in:—The Jack of Caesar's shall and to him.

[Exit Attendants, with THYREUS.
 blasted ere I knew you:—Ha!
 flow left unpress'd in Rome,
 setting of a lawful race,
 of women, to be abus'd oks on feeders?]

Good my lord,— ave been a boggler ever:—
 n our viciousness grow hard,
 t!) the wise gods seal our eyes
 th; drop our clear judgments; make us us; laugh at us, while we strut
 on.

O, is it come to this?
 d you as a morsel cold upon trencher: nay, you were a fragment ppey's; besides what hotter hours, vulgar fame, you have trouble.

 oks on feeders" is one that bestows favours

Luxuriously pick'd out: For, I am sure,
 Though you can guess what temperance should be,
 You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a fellow that will take rewards,
 And say, "God quit you!" be familiar with My playfellow, your hand; this kingly seal,
 And plighter of high hearts!—O, that I were Upon the hill of Basan, to outroar
 The horned herd! for I have savage cause;
 And to proclaim it civilly, were like
 A halter'd neck, which does the hangman thank,
 For being yare* about him.—Is he whipp'd?

Re-enter Attendants, with THYREUS.

1 Att. Soundly, my lord.

Ant. Cried he? and begg'd he pardon?

1 Att. He did ask favour.

Ant. If that thy father live, let him repent
 Thou wast not made his daughter; and be thou sorry
 To follow Caesar in his triumph, since Thou hast been whipp'd for following him: henceforth
 The white hand of a lady fever thee,
 Shake thou to look on 't.—Get thee back to Caesar,
 Tell him thy entertainment: Look, thou say,
 He makes me angry with him: for he seems Proud and disdainful; harping on what I am,
 Not what he knew I was: He makes me angry;
 And at this time most easy 't is to do 't;
 When my good stars, that were my former guides,
 Have empty left their orbs, and shot their fires
 Into the abysm of hell. If he mislike
 My speech, and what is done, tell him, he has Hipparchus, my enfranchis'd bondman, whom
 He may at pleasure whip, or hang, or torture,
 As he shall like, to quit me: Urge it thou:
 Hence, with thy stripes, begone. [Exit THYREUS.]

Cleo. Have you done yet?

Ant. Alack, our terrene moon
 Is now eclipsed; and it portends alone
 The fall of Antony!

Cleo. I must stay his time.

Ant. To flatter Caesar, would you mingle eyes
 With one that ties his points?

Cleo. Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah, dear, if I be so,
 From my cold heart let heaven engender hail,
 And poison it in the source; and the first stone
 Drop in my neck: as it determines, so Dissolve my life! The next Caesarian smite!
 Till, by degrees, the memory of my womb,
 Together with my brave Egyptians all,
 By the discandring<sup>b</sup> of this pelleted storm,
 Lie graveless; till the flies and gnats of Nile
 Have buried them for prey!

Ant. I am satisfied.

Caesar sits down in Alexandria; where
 I will oppose his fate. Our force by land
 Hath nobly held: our sever'd navy too
 Have knit again, and fleet,<sup>c</sup> threat'ning most sea-like.
 Where hast thou been, my heart?—Dost thou hear, lady!
 If from the field I shall return once more
 To kiss these lips, I will appear in blood;
 I and my sword will earn our chronicle;
 There's hope in 't yet.

Cleo. That's my brave lord!

Ant. I will be treble-sinew'd, hearted, breath'd,
 And fight maliciously: for when mine hours
 Were nice and lucky, men did ransom lives
 Of me for jests: but now, I'll set my teeth,

* Yare—nimble.

<sup>b</sup> Discandring. To dis-candring is to dis-quander, to scatter.

<sup>c</sup> Fleet—the old word for fleet.

And send to darkness all that stop me.—Come,
Let 's have one other gaudy night :<sup>a</sup> call to me
All my sad captains ; fill our bowls once more ;
Let 's mock the midnight bell.

Cleo. It is my birthday :
I had thought to have held it poor ; but, since my lord
Is Antony again, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We will yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his noble captains to my lord.

Ant. Do so, we 'll speak to them ; and to-night I 'll force
The wine peep through their scars.—Come on, my queen ;

There 's as I 'll make Even with

Eno. N
Is to be fri
The dove
A diminut
Restores hi
It eats the
Some way

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Cæsar's Camp at Alexandria.

Enter CÆSAR, reading a letter ; AGRIPPA, MÆCENAS, and others.

Cæs. He calls me boy ; and chides, as he had power
To beat me out of Egypt : my messenger
He hath whipp'd with rods ; dares me to personal combat,

Cæs. Let the old ruffian know,
I have many other ways to die ; mean time,
Laugh at his challenge.

Mec. Cæsar must think,
When one so great begins to rage, he 's hunted Even to falling. Give him no breath, but now Make boot of his distraction : Never anger
Made good guard for itself.

Cæs. Let our best heads
Know, that to-morrow the last of many battles
We mean to fight :—Within our files there are
Of those that serv'd Mark Antony but late,
Enough to fetch him in. See it done ;
And feast the army : we have store to do 't,
And they have earn'd the waste. Poor Antony !

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter ANTONY, CLEOPATRA, ENOBARBUS, CHARMIAN, IRAB, ALEXAS, and others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitius ?

Eno. No.

Ant. Why should he not ?

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better fortune,
He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To-morrow, soldier,
By sea and land I 'll fight : or I will live,
Or bathe my dying honour in the blood
Shall make it live again. Woo 't thou fight well ?

Eno. I 'll strike ; and cry, " Take all."

Ant. Well said ; come on.— Call forth my household servants ; let 's to-night

Enter Servants.

Be bounteous at our meal.—Give me thy hand,
Thou hast been rightly honest ;—so hast thou ;—
Thou,—and thou,—and thou :—you have serv'd me
well,

And kings have been your fellows.

Cleo. What means this ?

Eno. 'T is one of those odd tricks which sorrow shoots
Out of the mind. [ Aside. ]

Ant. And thou art honest too.
I wish I could be made so many men ;
And all of you clapp'd up together in <sup>a</sup> Gaudy night—a night of rejoicing.

An Anton
So good as Serv.

Ant. W
Scant not
As when n
And suffer
Cleo.

Eno. T
Ant.

May be, it
Haply, yo
A man's le

You 'll see
As one tha
I turn you

Married to Tend me t
And the g

Eno.

To give th
And I, an Transform

Ant.

Now the w
Grace grov
You take

For I spak
To burn t
I hope wel

Where rat
Than deat
And drow

SCEN

1

1 Sold.

2 Sold.

Heard you

1 Sold.

2 Sold.

Good nigh

1 Sold.

2 Sold.

Have care

3 Sold.

[

4 Sold.

]

<sup>a</sup> In ' At

<sup>b</sup> God 'll d )

reward you.

<sup>c</sup> These i

y thrive, I have an absolute hope dmen will stand up.
 T is a brave army,
 of purpose. [Music of hautboys under the stage.]
 Peace, what noise?
 List, list!
 Hark!
 Music i' the air.
 Under the earth.
 It signs well,
 not?
 No.
 Peace, I say. What should this mean?
 T is the god Hercules, whom Antony lov'd, ves him.
 Walk; let 's see if other watchmen
 what we do. [They advance to another post.]
 How now, masters?
 How now?
 do you hear this? [Several speaking together.]
 Ay: Is 't not strange?
 Do you hear, masters? do you hear?
 Follow the noise so far as we have quarter;
 e how 't will give off.
 [Several speaking.] Content: 'T is strange.
 [Exeunt.]

E IV.—The same. A Room in the Palace.

ANTONY and CLEOPATRA; CHARMIAN, and others, attending.

Eros! mine armour, Eros!
 Sleep a little.
 No, my chuck.—Eros, come; mine armour,
 Eros!

Enter Eros, with armour.

Good fellow, put thine iron on:— e be not ours to-day, it is we brave her.—Come.

Nay, I 'll help too.
 this for?

Ah, let be, let be! thou art
 ourer of my heart;—False, false; this, this.
 Sooth, la, I 'll help: Thus it must be.

Well, well!
 I thrive now.—Seest thou, my good fellow?
 an thy defences.

Briefly, sir.
 Is not this buckled well?

Rarely, rarely;
 unbuckles this, till we do please
 t for our repose, shall hear a storm.—
 nblest, Eros; and my queen 's a squire ut at this than thou: Despatch.—O love,
 u couldst see my wars to-day, and knew'st
 I occupation! thou shouldst see

Enter an Officer, armed.

an in 't.—Good morrow to thee; welcome:
 k'st like him that knows a warlike charge:
 eas that we love we rise betime,
 o 't with delight.

A thousand, sir,
 ough 't be, have on their riveted trim,
 he port expect you.

[Shout. Trumpets. Flourish.]

Enter other Officers, and Soldiers.

The morn is fair.—Good morrow, general.
 Good morrow, general.

'T is well blown, lads,
 ning, like the spirit of a youth uns to be of note, begins betimes.—

So, so; come, give me that: this way; well said.
 Fare thee well, dame, whate'er becomes of me,
 This is a soldier's kiss: rebukable, [Kisses her.]
 And worthy shameful check it were, to stand
 On more mechanic compliment; I 'll leave thee
 Now, like a man of steel,—You that will fight
 Follow me close; I 'll bring you to 't.—Adieu.
 [Exeunt ANTONY, EROS, Officers, and Soldiers.]
 Char. Please you, retire to your chamber?
 Cleo. Lead me.
 He goes forth gallantly. That he and Cæsar might Determine this great war in single fight!
 Then, Antony,—But now,—Well, on. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—Antony's Camp near Alexandria.

Trumpets sound. Enter ANTONY and EROS; a Soldier meeting them.

Sold. The gods make this a happy day to Antony!
 Ant. 'Would thou, and those thy scars, had once prevail'd

To make me fight at land!
 Sold. Hadst thou done so,
 The kings that have revolted, and the soldier
 That has this morning left thee, would have still Follow'd thy heels.

Ant. Who 's gone this morning?
 Sold. Wh?

One ever near thee: Call for Enobarbus,
 He shall not hear thee; or from Cæsar's camp
 Say, "I am none of thine."

Ant. What say'st thou?
 Sold. Sir,

He is with Cæsar.
 Eros. Sir, his chests and treasure

He has not with him.
 Ant. Is he gone?

Sold. Most certain.
 Ant. Go, Eros, send his treasure after; do it;

Detain no jot, I charge thee; write to him
 (I will subscribe) gentle adieus, and greetings;
 Say, that I wish he never find more cause
 To change a master.—O, my fortunes have Corrupted honest men;—despatch: Enobarbus!*
 [Exeunt.]

SCENE VI.—Cæsar's Camp before Alexandria.

Flourish. Enter CÆSAR, with AGRIPPA, ENOBARBUS, and others.

Cæs. Go forth, Agrippa, and begin the fight,
 Our will is Antony be took alive;
 Make it so known.

Agr. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit AGRIPPA.]

Cæs. The time of universal peace is near:
 Prove this a prosperous day, the three-nook'd world
 Shall bear the olive freely.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Antony
 Is come into the field.

Cæs. Go, charge Agrippa:
 Plant those that have revolted in the van,
 That Antony may seem to spend his fury
 Upon himself. [Exeunt CÆSAR and his Train.]

Eno. Alexas did revolt; and went to Jewry,
 On affairs of Antony; there did persuade Great Herod to incline himself to Cæsar,
 And leave his master Antony: for this pains,

* We follow the words of the original, but not the punctuation. That reading is "despatch Enobarbus." It may possibly mean despatch the business of Enobarbus; but it is more probable that Antony, addressing Eros, says "despatch!" and then, thinking of his revolted friend, pronounces his name.

Cæsar hath hang'd him. Canidius, and the rest
That fell away, have entertainment, but
No honourable trust. I have done ill:
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will joy no more.

Enter a Soldier of Cæsar's.

Sold. Enobarbus, Antony Hath after thee sent all thy treasure, with His bounty overplus: The messenger
Came on my guard; and at thy tent is now
Unloading of his mules.

Eno. I give it you.

Sold. Mock not, Enobarbus.
I tell you true: Best you saf'd* the bringer
Out of the host; I must attend mine office,
Or would have done 't myself. Your emperor Continues still a Jove. [Exit Soldier.]

Eno. I am alone the villain of the earth,
And feel I am so most. O Antony,
Thou mine of bounty, how wouldst thou have paid
My better service, when my turpitude Thou dost so crown with gold! This blows<sup>b</sup> my heart:

If swift thought break it not, a swifter mean
Shall outstrike thought: but thought will do 't, I feel.
I fight against thee!—No: I will go seek
Some ditch wherein to die; the foul'st best fits
My latter part of life. [Exit.]

SCENE VII.—Field of battle between the Camps.

Alarum. Drums and trumpets. Enter AGRIPPA, and others.

Agr. Retire, we have engag'd ourselves too far:
Cæsar himself has work, and our oppression
Exceeds what we expected. [Exeunt]

Alarum. Enter ANTONY and SCARUS, wounded.

Scar. O my brave emperor, this is fought indeed!
Had we done so at first, we had driven them home
With clouts about their heads.

Ant. Thou bleed'st apace.

Scar. I had a wound here that was like a T,
But now 't is made an H.

Ant. They do retire.

Scar. We 'll beat 'em into bench-holes; I have yet Room for six scotches more.

Enter EROS.

Eros. They are beaten, sir; and our advantage serves
For a fair victory.

Scar. Let us score their backs,
And snatch 'em up, as we take hares, behind;
'T is sport to maul a runner.

Ant. I will reward thee
Once for thy spritely comfort, and ten-fold
For thy good valour. Come thee on.

Scar. I 'll halt after. [Exeunt.]

SCENE VIII.—Under the Walls of Alexandria.

Alarum. Enter ANTONY, marching; SCARUS, and Forces.

Ant. We have beat him to his camp: Run one before,
And let the queen know of our guests.—To-morrow,
Before the sun shall see us, we 'll spill the blood
That has to-day escap'd. I thank you all;
For doughty-handed are you; and have fought
Not as you serv'd the cause, but as 't had been
Each man's like mine; you have shown all Hectors.
Enter the city, clip your wives, your friends,
Tell them your feats; whilst they with joyful tears

* Saf'd—made safe.

<sup>b</sup> Blows—swells.

Wash the congealment from your wounds, and let
The honour'd gashes whole.—Give me thy hand;
[To SCARUS.]

Enter CLEOPATRA, attended.

To this great fairy I 'll commend thy acts,
Make her thanks bless thee.—O thou day o' the world,
Chain mine arm'd neck; leap thou, attire and all,
Through proof of harness to my heart, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo. Lord of lords!

O, infinite virtue! com'st thou smiling from
The world's great snare uncaught?

Ant. My nightgown.

We have beat them to their beds. What, girl! thou grey

Do something mingle with our younger laws;
Yet ha' we a brain that nourishes our nerves,
And can get goal for goal of youth. Behold this man Commend unto his lips thy favouring hand;—
Kiss it, my warrior:—He hath fought to-day
As if a god, in hate of mankind, had Destroy'd in such a shape.

Cleo. I 'll give thee, friend,

An armour all of gold; it was a king's.

Ant. He has deserv'd it, were it cast-uncle
Like holy Phœbus' car.—Give me thy hand;
Through Alexandria make a jolly march;
Bear our back'd targets like the men that owe them;
Had our great palace the capacity
To camp this host, we all would sup together,
And drink carouses to the next day's fate,
Which promises royal peril.—Trumpeters,
With brazen din blast you the city's ear;
Make mingle with our rattling tabourines;
That heaven and earth may strike their sounds together
Applauding our approach. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IX.—Cæsar's Camp.

Sentinels on their post. Enter ENOBARBUS

1 Sold. If we be not reliev'd within this hour,
We must return to the court of guard: The night
Is shiny; and, they say, we shall embattle
By the second hour i' the morn.

2 Sold. This last day was a shrewd one to us.

Eno. O, bear me witness, night,—

3 Sold. What man is this?

2 Sold. Stand close, and let him

Eno. Be witness to me, O thou blessed moon,
When men revolted shall upon record
Bear hateful memory, poor Enobarbus did Before thy face repent!—

1 Sold. Enobarbus!

3 Sold. Peace;

Hark further.
Eno. O sovereign mistress of true melancholy,
The poisonous damp of night dispose upon me;

That life, a very rebel to my will,
May hang no longer on me: Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault;

Which, being dried with grief, will break to powder,
And finish all foul thoughts. O Antony,
Nobler than my revolt is infamous,

Forgive me in thine own particular;
But let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive:

O Antony! O Antony! [Exit.]

2 Sold. Let 's speak to him.

1 Sold. Let 's hear him, for the things he would concern Cæsar.

3 Sold. Let 's do so. But he sleeps.

1 Sold. Swoons rather; for so had a page was never yet for sleep.

Id. Go we to him.
Id. Awake, sir, awake; speak to us.
Id. Hear you, sir?
Id. The hand of death hath raught him. Hark, the drums [Drums afar off.] rely wake the sleepers. Let us bear him court of guard; he is of note: our hour
y out.
Id. Come on then;
y recover yet. [Exeunt with the body.]

SCENE X.—Between the two Camps.

ANTONY and SCARUS, with Forces marching.

Their preparation is to-day by sea;
ease them not by land.
For both, my lord.
I would they 'd fight i' the fire, or in the air;
fight there too. But this it is: Our foot,
the hills adjoining to the city,
stay with us:—order for sea is given;
save put forth the haven:—
their appointment we may best discover, ok on their endeavour. [Exeunt.]

Enter CÆSAR, and his Forces marching.

But being charg'd, we will be still by land,
as I take 't, we shall; for his best force to man his galleys. To the vales, old our best advantage. [Exeunt.]

Re-enter ANTONY and SCARUS.

Yet they are not join'd: Where yond pine does stand,
discover all; I 'll bring thee word it, how 't is like to go. [Exit.] Swallows have built opatra's sails their nests: the augurers
ey know not,—they cannot tell;—look grimly, are not speak their knowledge. Antony ant and dejected; and, by starts,
sted fortunes give him hope, and fear,
at he has, and has not.

Alarum afar off, as at a sea-fight.

Re-enter ANTONY

All is lost;
aul Egyptian hath betrayed me: et hath yielded to the foe; and yonder
east their caps up, and carouse together friends long lost.—Triple-turn'd whore! 't is thou
old me to this novice; and my heart only wars on thee.—Bid them all fly;
en I am reveng'd upon my charm, done all:—Bid them all fly, be gone.
[Exit SCARUS.]

thy uprise shall I see no more:
e and Antony part here; even here shake hands.—All come to this?—The hearts paniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave wishes, do discandy, melt their sweets ssoming Cæsar; and this pine is bark'd, vertopp'd them all. Betray'd I am:
false soul of Egypt! this grave charm, eye beck'd forth my wars, and call'd them home;
bosom was my crownet, my chief end,

entence—
"Order for sea is given;
They have put forth the haven" rhetical. Omit it, and Antony says, that the foot soldiers ay with him, upon the hills adjoining to the city Where their appointment we may best discover

Like a right gipsy, nath, at fast and loose,
Beguil'd me to the very heart of loss.—
What, Eros, Eros!

Enter CLEOPATRA.

Ah, thou spell! Avaunt.
Cleo. Why is my lord enrag'd against his love?
Ant. Vanish; or I shall give thee thy deserving,
And blemish Cæsar's triumph. Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to the shouting plebeians
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex: most monster-like, be shown For poor'st diminutives, for dolts;<sup>a</sup> and let Patient Octavia plough thy visage up With her prepared nails. [Exit CLEO.] 'T is well thou 'rt gone,
If it be well to live: But better 't were Thou fell'st into my fury, for one death
Might have prevented many.—Eros, hoa!
The shirt of Nessus is upon me: Teach me,
Alcides, thou mine ancestor, thy rage:
Let me lodge Lichas on the horns o' the moon;
And with those hands, that grasp'd the heaviest club,
Subdue my worthiest self. The witch shall die;
To the young Roman boy she hath sold me, and I fall
Under this plot: she dies for 't.—Eros, hoa! [Exit.]

SCENE XI.—Alexandria. A Room in the Palace.

Enter CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, IRAS, and MARDIAN.

Cleo. Help me, my women! O, he is more mad Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Thessaly
Was never so emboss'd.
Char. To the monument;
There lock yourself, and send him word you are dead.
The soul and body rive not more in parting,
Than greatness going off.
Cleo. To the monument:—
Mardian, go tell him I have slain myself;
Say that the last I spoke was, Antony,
And word it, prithee, piteously: Hence, Mardian,
And bring me how he takes my death.—
To the monument. [Exeunt.]

SCENE XII.—The same. Another Room.

Enter ANTONY and EROS.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?
Eros. Ay, noble lord.
Ant. Sometime we see a cloud that 's dragonish:
A vapour, sometime, like a bear, or lion,
A tower'd citadel, a pendant rock,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon 't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air: thou hast seen these signs;
They are black vesper's pageants.
Eros. Ay, my lord.
Ant. That which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack displimbs; and makes it indistinct,
As water is in water.
Eros. It does, my lord.
Ant. My good knave, Eros, now thy captain is Even such a body; here I am Antony;
Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave.
I made these wars for Egypt; and the queen,—
Whose heart I thought I had, for she had mine;
Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto 't
A million more, now lost,—she, Eros, has <sup>a</sup> We follow the original. We believe that the "poor'st diminutives" are the lowest of the populace, as the "dolts" are the most stupid. We must therefore understand for to mean for the gratification of.

Pack'd cards with Cæsar, and false-play'd my glory
 Unto an enemy's triumph.—
 Nay, weep not, gentle Eros; there is left us
 Ourselves to end ourselves.—O, thy vile lady!

Enter MARDIAN.

She has robb'd me of my sword.

Mar. No, Antony;
 My mistress lov'd thee, and her fortunes mingled
 With thine entirely.

Ant. Hence, saucy eunuch; peace;
 She hath betray'd me, and shall die the death.

Mar. Death of one person can be paid but once;
 And that she has discharg'd: What thou wouldst do
 Is done unto thy hand; the last she spake
 Was, Antony! most noble Antony!
 Then in the midst a tearing groan did break
 The name of Antony; it was divided Between her heart and lips; she render'd life,
 Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead then?

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Unarm, Eros; the long day's task is done,
 And we must sleep:—That thou depart'st hence safe,
 Does pay thy labour richly; Go.—O, pluck off;—

[Exit MARDIAN.]

The seven-fold shield of Ajax cannot keep
 The battery from my heart. O, cleave, my sides!
 Heart, once be stronger than thy continent;
 Crack thy frail case!—Apace, Eros, apace.—
 No more a soldier:—Bruised pieces, go;
 You have been nobly borne.—From me a while.—

[Exit EROS.]

I will o'ertake thee, Cleopatra, and Weep for my pardon. So it must be, for now
 All length is torture:—Since the torch is out,
 Lie down and stray no farther: Now all labour
 Mars what it does; yea, very force entangles
 Itself with strength: Seal then, and all is done.*—
 Eros!—I come, my queen:—Eros!—Stay for me:
 Where souls do couch on flowers, we'll hand in hand,
 And with our sprightly port make the ghosts gaze:
 Dido and her Æneas shall want troops,
 And all the haunt be ours.—Come, Eros, Eros!

Re-enter EROS.

Eros. What would my lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra died,
 I have liv'd in such dishonour, that the gods
 Detest my baseness. I, that with my sword Quarter'd the world, and o'er green Neptune's back With ships made cities, condemn myself, to lack
 The courage of a woman; less noble mind
 Than she, which, by her death, our Cæsar tells,
 "I am conqueror of myself." Thou art sworn, Eros,
 That, when the exigent should come, (which now
 Is come, indeed,) when I should see behind me
 Th' inevitable prosecution of disgrace
 And horror, that, on my command, thou then Wouldst kill me: do 't; the time is come:
 Thou strik'st not me, 't is Cæsar thou defeat'st.
 Put colour in thy cheek.

Eros. The gods withhold me!
 Shall I do that which all the Parthian darts,
 Though enemy, lost aim, and could not?

Ant. Eros,
 Wouldst thou be window'd in great Rome, and see Thy master thus with pleach'd<sup>b</sup> arms, bending down
 His corrigible neck, his face subdued

* The passage may be illustrated by a corresponding image in 'King Henry V.':—

"And so espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd
 A testament of noble-ending love."

<sup>b</sup> Pleach'd—folded.

To penetrativ
 Of fortunate
 His baseness
Eros.

Ant. Com
 Draw that th
 Most useful:

Eros.
Ant. Wbe
 To do this w
 Or thy prece
 But accidnt

Eros. Tur Wherein the Ant. Lo t
Eros. My

Ant.
 The thing w
Eros.

My captain,
 Before I stri
Ant. T i
Eros. Fa
Ant.

Eros. Wh
 I c

Of Antony's
Ant.

Thou teache
 I should, an
 Have, by th
 A nobleness
 A bridegroo
 As to a love
 Thy master

I learn'd of
 The guard—

1 Guard.
Ant. I h en

Of what I h
 2 Guard.

1 Guard.
All.

Ant. Let
 1 Guard.

2 Guard.
 3 Guard.

Der. Thy
 This sword

Shall enter:

Dio. Wh
Der.

Dio.
 Wilt thou n

Ant. Art
 g!

Sufficing st
Dio.

My mistress
Ant. Wh

Dio.
Ant.

Dio. Loc sy

Of what hat (Which nev
 She had dis

not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead ;
 saying since how it might work, hath sent proclaim the truth ; and I am come, too late.
 Too late, good Diomed :—Call my guard, I prithee.
 What, ho ! the emperor's guard ! The guard, what, ho !
 your lord calls.

Enter some of the Guard.

Bear me, good friends, where Cleopatra bides ;
 the last service that I shall command you.
 Woe, woe are we, sir, you may not live to wear
 our true followers out.

Most heavy day !
 Nay, good my fellows, do not please sharp fate to see it with your sorrows : bid that welcome comes to punish us, and we punish it to bear it lightly. Take me up :
 led you off ; carry me now, good friends,
 give my thanks for all. [Exeunt, bearing ANT.]

SCENE XIII.—The same. A Monument.

Enter above, CLEOPATRA, CHARMIAN, and IRAS.

O Charmian, I will never go from hence.
 Be comforted, dear madam.

No, I will not.
 Change and terrible events are welcome,
 comforts we despise ; our size of sorrow, proportion'd to our cause, must be as great

Enter DIOMEDES.

Which makes it.—How now ? is he dead ?
 His death 's upon him, but not dead.
 Out o' the other side your monument,
 and have brought him thither.

Enter ANTONY, borne by the Guard.

O sun,
 the great sphere thou mov'st in !—dar'ling
 stand
 on the burning shore o' the world !—O Antony !
 O Antony !—Help, Charmian ; help, Iras, help ; friends below ; let 's draw him hither.

Peace :
 Caesar's valour hath o'erthrown Antony,
 Antony's hath triumph'd on itself.
 So it should be, that none but Antony conquer Antony ; but woe 't is so !
 I am dying, Egypt, dying ; only a moment's death a while, until my thousand kisses the poor last from thy lips.—

I dare not, dear,
 my lord, pardon ; I dare not,
 being taken : not the imperious show of full-fortun'd Caesar ever shall be lov'd with me ; if knife, drugs, serpents, have power, or operation, I am safe :
 I will be Octavia, with her modest eyes and quietude, shall acquire no honour
 by my conclusion.—But come, come, Antony,—
 O, my women,—we must draw thee up ;—
 O, good friends.

O, quick, or I am gone.
 Here 's sport, indeed !—How heavy weighs my
 lord !

*Iras dares not come down out of the monument, to kiss the poor last kiss.
 I'd—adorned, as with a brooch.*

Our strength is all gone into heaviness ;
 That makes the weight : Had I great Juno's power,
 The strong-wing'd Mercury should fetch thee up,
 And set thee by Jove's side. Yet come a little.—
 Wishers were ever fools ;—O, come, come, come ;
 [They draw ANT up]

And welcome, welcome ! die where thou hast liv'd :
 Quicken with kissing ; had my lips that power,
 Thus would I wear them out.

All. A heavy sight !

Ant. I am dying, Egypt, dying :
 Give me some wine, and let me speak a little.

Cleo. No, let me speak ; and let me rail so high,
 That the false housewife Fortune break her wheel,
 Provok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word, sweet queen
 Of Caesar seek your honour, with your safety.—O

Cleo. They do not go together.

Ant. Gentle, hear me ;
 None about Caesar trust, but Proculeius.

Cleo. My resolution, and my hands, I 'll trust ;
 None about Caesar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end,
 Lament nor sorrow at ; but please your thoughts,
 In feeding them with those my former fortunes
 Wherein I liv'd, the greatest prince o' the world,
 The noblest : and do now not basely die,
 Nor cowardly put off my helmet to My countryman,—a Roman, by a Roman Valiantly vanquish'd. Now, my spirit is going :
 I can no more. [Dies.]

Cleo. Noblest of men, woo 't die ?

Hast thou no care of me ? shall I abide
 In this dull world, which in thy absence is No better than a sty ?—O, see, my women,
 The crown o' the earth doth melt :—My lord !—
 O, wither'd is the garland of the war,
 The soldier's pole is fallen ; young boys and girls
 Are level now with men : the odds is gone,
 And there is nothing left remarkable Beneath the visiting moon. [She faints.]

Char. O, quietness, lady !

Iras. She is dead too, our sovereign.

Char. Lady,—

Iras. Madam,—

Char. O madam, madam, madam !

Iras. Royal Egypt !

Empress !

Char. Peace, peace, Iras.

Cleo. No more, but e'en a woman ; and commanded
 By such poor passion as the maid that milks,
 And does the meanest chares.*—It were for me
 To throw my sceptre at the injurious gods ;
 To tell them that this world did equal theirs,
 Till they had stolen our jewel. All 's but naught ;
 Patience is scottish ; and impatience does
 Become a dog that 's mad : Then is it sin
 To rush into the secret house of death,
 Ere death dare come to us ?—How do you, women ?
 What, what ? good cheer ! Why, how now, Charmian ?
 My noble girls !—Ah, women, women ! look,
 Our lamp is spent, it 's out :—Good sirs, take heart :—
 [To the Guard below.]

We 'll bury him ; and then, what 's brave, what 's noble,

Let 's do it after the high Roman fashion,
 And make Death proud to take us. Come, away :
 This case of that huge spirit now is cold.
 Ah, women, women ! come ; we have no friend
 But resolution, and the briefest end.

[Exeunt ; those above bearing off ANTONY'S body]

* Chares. A chare, or char, is a single act, or piece of work
 —a turn, or bout of work, from the Anglo-Saxon cyras, to turn Hence, a charwoman.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Cæsar's Camp before Alexandria.

Enter CÆSAR, AGRIPPA, DOLABELLA, MÆCENAS,
GALLUS, PROCULIUS, and others.

Cæs. Go to him, Dolabella, bid him yield;
Being so frustrate, tell him, he mocks [us by<sup>a</sup>]
The pauses that he makes.

Dol. Cæsar, I shall. [Exit DOLABELLA.]

Enter DERCEIAS, with the sword of ANTONY.

Cæs. Wherefore is that? and what art thou that dar'st Appear thus to us?

Der. I am call'd Dercetas;
Mark Antony I serv'd, who best was worthy
Best to be serv'd: whilst he stood up, and spoke,
He was my master; and I wore my life
To spend upon his haters: If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him
I'll be to Cæsar; if thou pleasest not,
I yield thee up my life.

Cæs. What is 't thou say'st?

Der. I say, O Cæsar, Antony is dead.

Cæs. The breaking of so great a thing should make A greater crack: The round world
Should have shook lions into civil streets,
And citizens to their dens:<sup>b</sup>—The death of Antony
Is not a single doom; in the name lay
A moiety of the world.

Der. He is dead, Cæsar;
Not by a public minister of justice,
Nor by a hired knife; but that self hand,
Which writ his honour in the acts it did,
Hath, with the courage which the heart did lend it,
Splitted the heart.—This is his sword;
I robb'd his wound of it; behold it stain'd
With his most noble blood.

Cæs. Look you sad, friends?
The gods rebuke me, but it is tidings
To wash the eyes of kings.

Agr. And strange it is That nature must compel us to lament
Our most persisted deeds.

Mec. His taints and honours
Wag'd equal with him.

Agr. A rarer spirit never Did steer humanity: but you, gods, will give us
Some faults to make us men. Cæsar is touch'd.

Mec. When such a spacious mirror's set before him,
He needs must see himself.

Cæs. O Antony!
I have follow'd thee to this:<sup>c</sup>—But we do lance Diseases in our bodies: I must perforce
Have shown to thee such a declining day,
Or look on thine; we could not stall together
In the whole world: but yet let me lament,
With tears as sovereign as the blood of hearts,
That thou, my brother, my competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire,
Friend and companion in the front of war,
The arm of mine own body, and the heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle,—that our stars, Unreconcilable, should divide

<sup>a</sup> The words in brackets are not in the original. Malone supplied them.

<sup>b</sup> The commentators make a great difficulty with this passage; but surely nothing can more forcibly express the idea of a general convulsion than that the wild beasts of the forest should have been hurled into the streets where men abide, and the inhabitants of cities as forcibly thrown into the lions' dens.

<sup>c</sup> Follow'd thee to this—driven thee to this.

Our equalness
But I will tell

The business
We'll hear h
Mess. A p
Confin'd in a
Of thy intent
That she prep
To the way a Cæs.

She soon shall
How honoura
Determine fo
To be ungent
Mess.

Cæs. Com
We purpose t
The quality c
Least, in her g
She do defeat
Would be ete
And, with yo
And how you Pro.

Cæs. Gall
To second P

Agr., Mec
Cæs. Let

How he's em
Go with me t
How hardly
How calm ar
In all my wr
What I can s

SCENE II

Enter

Cleo. My
A better life:
Not being Fe
A minister of
To do that th
Which shack
Which sleeps
The beggar's

Enter, to th

Pro. Cæsa
And bids the Thou mean'st

Cleo. [Wi

Pro. My

Cleo. [Wi

Did tell me c

I do not grea

That have no

Would have

That majesty

No less beg

To give me c

He gives me

Will kneel to

<sup>a</sup> The beggar is not, as Johnson nourishes the

Be of good cheer ;
 e fallen into a princely hand ; fear nothing :
 our full reference freely to my lord,
 so full of grace that it flows over that need : Let me report to him weet dependency : and you shall find ueror that will pray in aid for kindness, he for grace is kneel'd to.
 [Within.] Pray you, tell him is fortune's vassal, and I send him ratness he has got. I hourly learn rine of obedience ; and would gladly im i' the face.

This I'll report, dear lady.
 omfort ; for I know your plight is pitied that caus'd it.

You see how easily she may be surpris'd ;
Enter PROCULIUS and two of the Guard ascend the Monument by a ladder placed against a window, and, having descended, come behind CLEOPATRA. Some of the Guard unbar and open the gates.

her till Caesar come.

[To PRO. and the Guard. Exit GALLUS.
 Royal queen !
 O Cleopatra ! thou art taken, queen !—
 Quick, quick, good hands.

[Drawing a dagger.
 Hold, worthy lady, hold :
 [Seizes and disarms her.
 yourself such wrong, who are in this
 d, but not betray'd.

What, of death too
 ds our dogs of languish ?

Cleopatra,
 abuse my master's bounty by doing of yourself : let the world see bleness well acted, which your death ver let come forth.

Where art thou, Death ?
 ither, come ! come, come, and take a queen
 many babes and beggars !

O, temperance, lady !
 Sir, I will eat no meat, I'll not drink, sir ;
 talk will once be necessary,
 sleep neither : This mortal house I'll ruin, ar what he can. Know, sir, that I ot wait pinion'd at your master's court ;
 se be chastis'd with the sober eye Octavia. Shall they hoist me up, ow me to the shouting varletry uring Rome ? Rather a ditch in Egypt le grave unto me ! rather on Nilus' mud
 e stark naked, and let the water-flies e into abhorring ! rather make ntry's high pyramids' my gibbet, ng me up in chains !

You do extend thoughts of horror further than you shall ause in Caesar.

Enter DOLABELLA.

Proculeius,
 hou hast done thy master Caesar knows,
 hath sent for thee : for the queen,
 ce her to my guard.

So, Dolabella,
 content me best : be gentle to her.—

son explains this, we think correctly, " I will not eat, t will be necessary now for once to waste a moment in of my purpose, I will not sleep neither."
 yramids—the Latin plural of pyramid : used as a qua
 dr.

To Caesar I will speak what you shall please.

If you'll employ me to him. [To CLEOPATRA.

Cleo. Say, I would die.

[Exit PROCULIUS and Soldiers.

Dol. Most noble empress, you have heard of me ?

Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly, you know me.

Cleo. No matter, sir, what I have heard or known.

You laugh, when boys or women tell their dreams ;

Is 't not your trick ?

Dol. I understand not, madam.

Cleo. I dreamt there was an emperor Antony ;—

O, such another sleep, that I might see

But such another man !

Dol. If it might please you,—

Cleo. His face was as the heavens ; and therein stuck
 A sun and moon, which kept their course, and lighted
 The little O, the earth.

Dol. Most sovereign creature,—

Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean : his rear'd arm

Crested the world : his voice was propertied

As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends ;

But when he meant to quail and shake the orb,

He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty,

There was no winter in 't ; an autumn 't was,

That grew the more by reaping : His delights

Were dolphin-like ; they show'd his back above

The element they liv'd in : In his livery

Walk'd crowns and crownets ; realms and islands were

As plates* dropp'd from his pocket.

Dol. Cleopatra,—

Cleo. Think you there was, or might be, such a man

As this I dreamt of ?

Dol. Gentle madam, no.

Cleo. You lie, up to the hearing of the gods.

But, if there be, or ever were, one such,

It's past the size of dreaming : Nature wants stuff

To vie strange forms with fancy ; yet, to imagine

An Antony, were nature's piece 'gainst fancy,

Condemning shadows quite.

Dol. Hear me, good madam :

Your loss is as yourself, great ; and you bear it

As answering to the weight : 'Would I might never O'ertake pursued success, but I do feel,

By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots

My very heart at root.

Cleo. I thank you, sir.

Know you what Caesar means to do with me

Dol. I am loth to tell you what I would you knew

Cleo. Nay, pray you, sir,—

Dol. Though he be honourable,—

Cleo. He'll lead me then in triumph ?

Dol. Madam, he will ;

I know it.

Within. Make way there,—Caesar !

Enter CESAR, GALLUS, PROCULIUS, MECENAS, SELEUCUS, and Attendants.

Ces. Which is the queen of Egypt ?

Dol. 'T is the emperor, madam. [CLEOPATRA kneels.

Ces. Arise, you shall not kneel :—

I pray you, rise ; rise, Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the gods

Will have it thus ; my master and my lord

I must obey.

Ces. Take to you no hard thoughts :

The record of what injuries you did us,

Though written in our flesh, we shall remember

As things but done by chance.

Cleo. Sole sir o' the world,

I cannot project mine own cause so well

* Plates. Pieces of silver money were called plates.

To make it clear; but do confess, I have Been laden with like frailties, which before
Have often sham'd our sex.

Cæs. Cleopatra, know,
We will extenuate rather than enforce:
If you apply yourself to our intents,
(Which towards you are most gentle,) you shall find
A benefit in this change; but if you seek To lay on me a cruelty, by taking Antony's course, you shall bereave yourself
Of my good purposes, and put your children
To that destruction which I'll guard them from,
If thereon you rely. I'll take my leave.

Cleo. And may, through all the world: 't is yours;
and we

Your 'scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall Hang in what place you please. Here, my good lord.

Cæs. You shall advise me in all for Cleopatra.

Cleo. This is the brief of money, plate, and jewels,
I am possess'd of: 't is exactly valued;
Not petty things admitted.—Where's Seleucus?

Sel. Here, madam.
Cleo. This is my treasurer; let him speak, my lord,
Upon his peril, that I have reserv'd
To myself nothing. Speak the truth, Seleucus.

Sel. Madam,
I had rather seal my lips, than, to my peril,
Speak that which is not.

Cleo. What have I kept back?
Sel. Enough to purchase that you have made known.

Cæs. Nay, blush not, Cleopatra; I approve
Your wisdom in the deed.

Cleo. See, Cæsar! O, behold,
How pomp is follow'd! mine will now be yours;
And should we shift estates yours would be mine.
The ingratitude of this Seleucus does Even make me wild: O slave, of no more trust
Than love that's hir'd!—What, goest thou back? thou shalt

Go back, I warrant thee; but I'll catch thine eyes,
Though they had wings: Slave, soulless villain, dog!
O rarely base!

Cæs. Good queen, let us entreat you.
Cleo. O Cæsar, what a wounding shame is this;
That thou, vouchsafing here to visit me,
Doing the honour of thy lordliness
To one so meek, that mine own servant should Parcel the sum of my disgraces by Addition of his envy! Say, good Cæsar,
That I some lady trifles have reserv'd,
Immoment toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern* friends withal; and say,
Some nobler token I have kept apart
For Livia, and Octavia, to induce
Their mediation; must I be unfolded
With one that I have bred? The gods! It smites me Beneath the fall I have. Prithee, go hence;

[To SELEUCUS.
Or I shall show the cinders of my spirits
Through the ashes of my chance:—Wert thou a man,
Thou wouldst have mercy on me.

Cæs. Forbear, Seleucus.
[Exit SELEUCUS.

Cleo. Be it known that we, the greatest, are mis-thought

For things that others do; and, when we fall,
We answer others' merits in our name,
Are therefore to be pitied.

Cæs. Cleopatra,
Not what you have reserv'd, nor what acknowledg'd
Put we it the roll of conquest: still be it yours, Bestow it at your pleasure; and believe Cæsar's no merchant, to make prize with you

* M. dem.—common.

Of things th
Make not yo
For we inter
Yourself sha
Our care an
That we ren
Cleo. My
Cæs.

Cleo. He
no
Be noble to:

Iras. Fin
And we are
Cleo.
I have spoke Go, put it to
Char.

Dol. Whe
Char.
Cleo.

Dol. Mad Which my I
I tell you th
Intends his j
You with yo
Make your t
Your pleasur
Cleo.

I shall remai
Dol.

Adieu, good
Cleo. Fare
wh

Thou, an Eg
In Rome, as
With greasy Uplift us to Rank of gros
And forc'd t
Iras.

Cleo. Nay
Will catch a Ballad us ou
Extemporall
Our Alexanc
Shall be brot
Some squeak
I' the posture
Iras.

Cleo. Nay
Iras. I'll

Are stronger
Cleo.

To fool their
Their most a

Show me, my
My best attir
To meet Ma
Now, noble t
And, when t lea
To play till Wherefore's

Guard.
That will ne
He brings yc

him come in. What poor an instrument [Exit Guard.]
le deed! he brings me liberty.
's plac'd, and I have nothing me: Now from head to foot onstant: now the fleeting moon
f mine.

ard, with a Clown bringing a basket.

This is the man.
and leave him. [Exit Guard.]
pretty worm of Nilus there, pains not?
ly I have him: but I would not be the ld desire you to touch him, for his biting hose that do die of it do seldom or never umber'st thou any that have died on 't? y many, men and women too. I heard no longer than yesterday: a very honest ne thing given to lie; as a woman should the way of honesty: how she died of the at pain she felt.—Truly, she makes a t o' the worm: But he that will believe ay, shall never be saved by half that his is most fallible, the worm 's an odd ee hence; farewell.

sh you all joy of the worm.
ell. [Clown sets down the basket.]
must think this, look you, that the worm
l.

; farewell.
k you, the worm is not to be trusted, but of wise people: for, indeed, there is no worm.

hou no care; it shall be heeded.
good: give it nothing, I pray you, for he feeding.

t eat me?
must not think I am so simple, but I himself will not eat a woman: I know a dish for the gods, if the devil dress truly, these same whoreson devils do the m in their women; for in every ten that devils mar five.

get thee gone; farewell.
forsooth; I wish you joy of the worm.
[Exit.]

er IRAS, with a robe, crown, &c.

ie my robe, put on my crown; I have ags in me: Now no more ypt's grape shall moist this lip:—
I Iras; quick.—Methinks I hear see him rouse himself oble act; I hear him mock sar, which the gods give men after wrath: Husband, I come:
ne my courage prove my title!
r; my other elements
life.—So,—have you done?
take the last warmth of my lips.
Charmian;—Iras, long farewell.

[Kisses them. IRAS falls and dies.]
e in my lips? Dost fall?
ire can so gently part,
ath is as a lover's pinch, ed is desir'd. Dost thou lie still?
ishest, thou tell'st the world ave-taking.
e, thick cloud, and rain; that I may say,
sires do weep!

This proves me base:

If she first meet the curled Antony,
He'll make demand of her; and spend that kiss
Which is my heaven to have. Come, thou mortal wretch, [To the asp, which she applies to her breast.]

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsicate
Of life at once untie: poor venomous fool,
Be angry, and despatch. O, couldst thou speak!
That I might hear thee call great Cæsar, ass Unpolicied!

Char. O eastern star!
Cleo. Peace, peace!
Dost thou not see my baby at my breast,
That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char. O, break! O, break!
Cleo. As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as gentle,—
O Antony!—Nay, I will take thee too:—

[Applying another asp to her arm.]
What should I stay— [Falls on a bed, and dies.]
Char. In this wild world?—So, fare thee well.—
Now boast thee, Death! in thy possession lies
A lass unparallel'd.—Downy windows, close;
And golden Phæbus never be beheld
Of eyes again so royal! Your crown 's awry;
I'll mend it, and then play.

Enter the Guard, rushing in.

1 Guard. Where is the queen?
Char. Speak softly, wake her not.
1 Guard. Cæsar hath sent—Char. Too slow a messenger.

[Applies the asp.]
O, come; apace, despatch: I partly feel thee.
1 Guard. Approach, ho! All 's not well: Cæsar 's beguill'd.

2 Guard. There 's Dolabella sent from Cæsar:— call him.
1 Guard. What work is here?—Charmian, is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a princess Descended of so many royal kings.
Ah, soldier! [Dies.]

Enter DOLABELLA.

Dol. How goes it here?
2 Guard. All dead.
Dol. Cæsar, thy thoughts

Touch their effects in this: Thyself art coming
To see perform'd the dreaded act which thou
So sought'st to hinder.

Within. A way there, a way for Cæsar!

Enter CÆSAR and Attendants.

Dol. O, sir, you are too sure an augurer;
That you did fear is done.

Cæs. Bravest at the last:
She leav'd at our purposes, and, being royal,
Took her own way.—The manner of their deaths?
I do not see them bleed.

Dol. Who was last with them?
1 Guard. A simple countryman, that brought her figs.

This was his basket.
Cæs. Poison'd then.
1 Guard. O Cæsar,
This Charmian liv'd but now; she stood, and spake:
I found her trimming up the diadem
On her dead mistress; tremblingly she stood,
And on the sudden dropp'd.

Cæs. O noble weakness!—
If they had swallow'd poison 't would appear
By external swelling: but she looks like sleep,
As she would catch another Antony
In her strong toil of grace.

Dol. Here, on her breast,

There is a vent of blood, and something blown :
The like is on her arm.

I Guard. This is an aspic's trail : and these fig-
leaves

Have slime upon them, such as the aspic leaves
Upon the caves of Nile.

Cæs. Most probable,
That so she died ; for her physician tells me
She hath pursued conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed ;

And bear her women from the monument :—

She shall be buried by her Antony :

No grave upon the earth shall clip in it

A pair so famous. High events as these

Strike those that make them ; and their story is

No less in pity than his glory, which

Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall,

In solemn show, attend this funeral ;

And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see

High order in this great solemnity.

Levul

TITUS
ANDRONICUS.

There is a vent of blood, and something blown :
The like is on her arm.

I Guard. This is an asp's trail : and these fig-
leaves

Have slime upon them, such as the asp's leaves
Upon the caves of Nile.

Cæs. Most probable,
That so she died ; for her physician tells me
She hath pursued conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die.—Take up her bed ;

And bear her women from the monument :—

She shall be buried by her Antony :

No grave upon the earth shall clip in it

A pair so famous. High events as these

Strike those that make them ; and their story is

No less in pity than his glory, which

Brought them to be lamented. Our army shall

In solemn show, attend this funeral ;

And then to Rome.—Come, Dolabella, see

High order in this great solemnity. Exit

TITUS
ANDRONICUS.

INTRODUCTORY REM

THE earliest edition, of which any copy is at present known, of 'Titus Andronicus,' appeared in quarto, in 1600, under the following title:—'The most lamentable Romaine Tragedie of Titus Andronicus. As it hath sundry times been playde by the Right Honourable the Earle of Pembroke, the Earle of Darbie, the Earle of Sussex, and the Lord Chamberlaine theyre Servants. At London, printed by J. R. for Edward White, 1600.'

In the folio collection of 1623 it appears under the title of 'The lamentable Tragedy of Titus Andronicus.' It follows 'Coriolanus,' and precedes 'Romeo and Juliet.'

The external evidence that bears upon the authorship of 'Titus Andronicus' is of two kinds:—

1. The testimony which assigns the play to Shakspeare, wholly or in part.
2. The testimony which fixes the period of its original production.

The direct testimony of the first kind is unimpeachable: Francis Meres, a contemporary, and probably a friend of Shakspeare—a man intimately acquainted with the literary history of his day—not writing even in the later period of Shakspeare's life, but as early as 1598,—compares, for tragedy, the excellence of Shakspeare among the English, with Seneca among the Latins, and says, witness, "for tragedy, his 'Richard II.,' 'Richard III.,' 'Henry IV.,' 'King John,' 'Titus Andronicus,' and his 'Romeo and Juliet.'"

The indirect testimony is nearly as important. The play is printed in the first folio edition of the poet's collected works—an edition published within seven years after his death by his intimate friends and "fellows;" and that edition contains an entire scene not found in either of the previous quarto editions which have come down to us. That edition does not contain a single other play upon which a doubt of the authorship has been raised; for even those who deny the entire authorship of 'Henry VI.' to Shakspeare, have no doubt as to the partial authorship.

We now come to the second point—the testimony which fixes the date of the original production of 'Titus Andronicus.'

Ben Jonson, in the Induction to his 'Bartholomew Fair,' first acted in 1614, says—"He that will swear 'Jeronimo,' or 'Andronicus,' are the best plays yet, shall pass unexcepted at here, as a man whose judgment shows it is constant, and hath stood still these five-and-twenty or thirty years. Though it be an ignorance, it is a virtuous and staid ignorance; and, next to truth, a confirmed error does well." Percy offers the following comment upon this passage, in his 'Reliques of Ancient Poetry':—"There is reason to conclude that this play was rather improved by Shakespeare with a few fine touches of his pen, than originally written by him; for, not to mention that the style is less figurative than his others generally are, this tragedy is mentioned with discredit in tholomew Fair,' libited 'five-an take the lowest r at which time S than can be fou scarcely necessa have uniformly Shakspeare's car against his auth forward by Perc reasons for not b not its author. ship, and the authorship, enti The continuati early date of th evidence of its r is indisputable. to the inferiori spere's undoubt the same way, a not have reject spere, at the pe labours which v of materials th basest purposes not voluntarily ness that lay l success,—ignor depth of his ow dimly seeing, elevate and pu drama about hi of fearful blood thing that he the dumb show contemporaries. create the trag described Webs "to move a h quick, to lay up and weary a lif in with mortal Lamb adds, "w for quality." T of the higher people have les stimulant. Be of Malfi' and produced 'Lea not of inferior g take as the auth as they would theatre." Nees and Kyd?

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

PERSONS REPRESENTED.

SRNINUS, son to the late Emperor of Rome. Act I. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 4. Act IV. sc. 4. Act V. sc. 3.	DEMETRIUS, son to Tamora. Appears , Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5. Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 4. Act V. sc. 1.
BASSIANUS, brother to Saturninus. Appears , Act I. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 3.	AARON, a Moor. Appears , Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 3; sc. 4. Act III. sc. 1. Act IV. sc. 2. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 3.
TITUS ANDRONICUS, a noble Roman. Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 4. Act III. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 3. Act V. sc. 2; sc. 3.	A Captain. Appears , Act I. sc. 2.
MARCUS ANDRONICUS, brother to Titus. Act I. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 3. Act III. sc. 1; 2. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 3. Act V. sc. 2; sc. 3.	A Tribune. Appears , Act V. sc. 3.
LUCIUS, son to Titus Andronicus. Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 4. Act III. sc. 1. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 3.	A Messenger. Appears , Act III. sc. 1.
QUINTUS, son to Titus Andronicus. Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 4. Act III. sc. 1.	A Clown. Appears , Act IV. sc. 3; sc. 4.
MARTIUS, son to Titus Andronicus. Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 4. Act III. sc. 1.	Goths. Appear , Act V. sc. 1; sc. 3.
MUTIUS, son to Titus Andronicus. Appears , Act I. sc. 2.	Romans. Appear , Act I. sc. 1; sc. 2.
YOUNG LUCIUS, a boy, son to Lucius. Act III. sc. 2. Act IV. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3. Act V. sc. 3.	TAMORA, Queen of the Goths. Appears , Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 4. Act IV. sc. 4. Act V. sc. 2; sc. 3.
PUBLIUS, son to Marcus the tribune. Appears , Act V. sc. 2.	LAVINIA, daughter to Titus Andronicus. Appears , Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5. Act III. sc. 1; sc. 2. Act IV. sc. 1. Act V. sc. 2; sc. 3.
ÆMILIUS, a noble Roman. Appears , Act IV. sc. 4. Act V. sc. 1; sc. 3.	A Nurse. Appears , Act IV. sc. 2.
ALARBUS, son to Tamora. Appears , Act I. sc. 2.	A Black Child. Appears , Act IV. sc. 2. Act V. sc. 1.
CHIRON, son to Tamora. Act I. sc. 2. Act II. sc. 1; sc. 2; sc. 3; sc. 5. Act IV. sc. 2; sc. 4. Act V. sc. 2.	Kinsmen of Titus, Senators, Tribunes, Officers, Soldiers, and Attendants.

SCENE,—ROME, AND THE COUNTRY NEAR IT.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rome.

Enter the Tribunes and Senators, aloft; then enter SATURNINUS and his Followers at the door, and BASSIANUS and his Followers at the side, with drum and colours.

Noble patricians, patrons of my right,
 In justice of my cause with arms;
 My countrymen, my loving followers,
 My successive title with your swords:
 My first-born son, that was the last
 Of the imperial diadem of Rome:
 My father's honours live in me,
 And mine age with this indignity.
 Romans, friends, followers, favourers of my right,
 Bassianus, Cæsar's son,
 Famous in the eyes of royal Rome,
 In this passage to the Capitol;
 Or not dishonour to approach
 My trial seat; to virtue consecrate,
 To chastity, and nobility:
 Desert in pure election shine;
 Romans, fight for freedom in your choice.

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, aloft, with the crown.
 Marc. Princes, that strive by factions and by friends
 Ambitiously for rule and empery,
 Know that the people of Rome, for whom we stand
 A special party, have by common voice,
 In election for the Roman empery, Chosen Andronicus, surnamed Pius,
 For many good and great deserts to Rome:
 A nobler man, a braver warrior,
 Lives not this day within the city walls.
 He by the senate is accited home,
 From weary wars against the barbarous Goths,
 That with his sons, a terror to our foes,
 Hath yok'd a nation strong, train'd up in arms.
 Ten years are spent, since first he undertook
 This cause of Rome, and chastised with arms
 Our enemies' pride: five times he hath return'd
 Bleeding to Rome, bearing his valiant sons
 In coffins from the field;
 And now at last, laden with honour's spoils,
 Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
 Renowned Titus, flourishing in arms.
 Let us entreat,—by honour of his name,
 Whom worthily you would have now succeed,

And in the Capitol and senate's right,
Whom you pretend to honour and adore,—
That you withdraw you, and abate your strength;
Dismiss your followers, and, as suitors should,
Plead your deserts in peace and humbleness.

Sat. How fair the tribune speaks to calm my thoughts!

Bass. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affy
In thy uprightness and integrity,
And so I love and honour thee and thine,
Thy noble brother Titus and his sons,
And her to whom my thoughts are humbled all,
Gracious Lavinia, Rome's rich ornament,
That I will here dismiss my loving friends;
And to my fortunes and the people's favour Commit my cause in balance to be weigh'd.

[Exeunt Followers of BASSIANUS.]

Sat. Friends, that have been thus forward in my right,

I thank you all, and here dismiss you all;
And to the love and favour of my country
Commit myself, my person, and the cause.

[Exeunt Followers of SATURNINUS.]

Rome, be as just and gracious unto me,
As I am confident and kind to thee.
Open the gates and let me in.

Bass. Tribunes, and me, a poor competitor.

[Flourish. They go up into the Senate-house.]

SCENE II.—The same.

Enter a Captain, and others.

Cap. Romans, make way: the good Andronicus,
Patron of virtue, Rome's best champion,
Successful in the battles that he fights,
With honour and with fortune is return'd,
From where he circumscrib'd with his sword,
And brought to yoke, the enemies of Rome.

[Sound drums and trumpets, and then enter two of Titus' Sons. After them two Men bearing a coffin covered with black: then two other Sons. After them TITUS ANDRONICUS; and then TAMORA, the Queen of Goths, and her two Sons, CHIRON and DEMETRIUS, with AARON the Moor, and others, as many as can be. They set down the coffin, and TITUS speaks.]

Tit. Hail, Rome, victorious in thy mourning weeds!
Lo, as the bark that hath discharg'd her freight,
Returns with precious lading to the bay
From whence at first she weigh'd her anchorage, Cometh Andronicus, bound with laurel boughs,
To re-salute his country with his tears,
Tears of true joy for his return to Rome.
Thou great defender of this Capitol,
Stand gracious to the rites that we intend!
Romans, of five-and-twenty valiant sons,
Half of the number that king Priam had,
Behold the poor remains, alive, and dead!
These that survive, let Rome reward with love:
These that I bring unto their latest home,
With burial amongst their ancestors.
Here Goths have given me leave to sheath my sword.
Titus, unkind, and careless of thine own,
Why suffer'st thou thy sons, unburied yet,
To hover on the dreadful shore of Styx?
Make way to lay them by their brethren.

[They open the tomb.]

There greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace, slain in your country's wars:
O sacred receptacle of my joys,
Sweet cell of virtue and nobility,
How many sons of mine hast thou in store,
That thou wilt never render to me more!

Luc. Gi
That we m
Ad manes
Before this
That so the Nor we dis

Tit. I gi

The eldest

Tam. St

Victorious

A mother's

And if thy

O think my

Sufficieth n

To beautify

Captive to t

But must n

For valiant

O, if to figl

Were piety

Andronicus

Wilt thou c

Draw near

Sweet merc

Thrice-nob

Tit. Pat

These are t

Alive and Religiously

To this yo

T' appease

Luc. Av

And with

Let 's hew

Tam. O

Chi. W

Demet.

Alarbus go

To tremble

Then, mad

The self-sa

With oppo

Upon the

May favou

(When Go

To quit th

Er

Luc. Se

Our Roma

And entrai

Whose sm

Remaineth

And with

Tit. Le

Make this

[J]

In peace a

Rome's res

Secure fro

Here lurks

Here grow

No noise,

In peace a

Lav. Ir

My noble

Lo, at this

I render ft

And at th

the earth for thy return to Rome.
 Be here with thy victorious hand,
 And let Rome's best citizens applaud.
 And Rome, thou hast thus lovingly reserv'd
 All of mine age to glad my heart!
 Live; outlive thy father's days,
 And live his eternal date, for virtue's praise.

Enter MARCUS ANDRONICUS, SATURNINUS,
 BASSIANUS, and others.

Long live lord Titus, my beloved brother,
 Triumpher in the eyes of Rome!
 Thanks, gentle tribune, noble brother Marcus.
 And welcome, nephews, from successful wars,
 Survive, and you that sleep in fame:
 Your fortunes are alike in all,
 Your country's service drew your swords.
 Your triumph is this funeral pomp,
 Aspir'd to Solon's happiness,
 Aspires ever chance in honour's bed.
 Andronicus, the people of Rome,
 Demand in justice thou hast ever been,
 By me, their tribute and their trust,
 A garment* of white and spotless hue,
 As thee in election for the empire,
 As our late deceased emperor's sons:
 Latus then, and put it on,
 To set a head on headless Rome.
 A better head her glorious body fits,
 That shakes for age and feebleness.
 Would I don this robe, and trouble you?
 I with proclamations to-day,
 I yield up rule, resign my life,
 I brood new business for you all?
 I have been thy soldier forty years,
 My country's strength successfully,
 And one-and-twenty valiant sons,
 In field, slain manfully in arms,
 And service of their noble country;
 A staff of honour for mine age,
 A sceptre to control the world!
 He held it, lords, that held it last.
 Titus, thou shalt obtain and ask the em-pery.

Andronicus, proud and ambitious tribune, canst thou tell?
 Attentive, prince Saturninus.
 Romans, do me right.
 I draw your swords, and sheath them not Minus be Rome's emperor:
 I would thou wert shipp'd to hell,
 I would I rob me of the people's hearts.
 Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
 Le-mind'd Titus means to thee!
 Content thee, prince, I will restore to thee
 The hearts, and wean them from themselves.
 Andronicus, I do not flatter thee,
 For thee, and will do till I die:
 I wish if thou strengthen with thy friends,
 That thankful be, and thanks to men
 Whose minds is honourable meed.
 The people of Rome, and people's tribunes here,
 Give voices and your suffrages;
 I bestow them friendly on Andronicus?
 Yes. To gratify the good Andronicus,
 I date his safe return to Rome,
 He will accept whom he admits.
 Tribunes, I thank you: and this suit I make,
 Create your emperor's eldest son,
 Whose virtues will, I hope,
 Make Rome as Titan's rays on earth,
 Shine in justice in this commonweal:
 You will elect by my advice,
 And say, "Long live our emperor!"

* Pallament—robe.

Marc. With voices and applause of every sort, Patricians, and plebeians, we create
 Lord Saturninus Rome's great emperor;
 And say, "Long live our emperor, Saturnine!"

[A long flourish, till they come down.]

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy favours done
 To us in our election this day,
 I give thee thanks in part of thy deserts,
 And will with deeds requite thy gentleness:
 And for an onset, Titus, to advance
 Thy name, and honourable family,
 Lavinia will I make my empress,
 Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart,
 And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse:
 Tell me, Andronicus, doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth, my worthy lord; and in this match
 I hold me highly honour'd of your grace,
 And here, in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,
 King and commander of our commonweal,
 The wide world's emperor, do I consecrate
 My sword, my chariot, and my prisoners,—
 Presents well worthy Rome's imperial lord:
 Receive them then, the tribute that I owe,
 Mine honour's ensigns humbled at thy feet.

Sat. Thanks, noble Titus, father of my life!
 How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts,
 Rome shall record; and when I do forget
 The least of these unspeakable deserts,
 Romans, forget your fealty to me.

Tit. Now, madam, are you prisoner to an emperor;

[To TAMORA.]

To him that, for your honour and your state,
 Will use you nobly, and your followers.

Sat. A goodly lady, trust me, of the hue
 That I would choose, were I to choose anew:
 Clear up, fair queen, that cloudy countenance:
 Though chance of war hath wrought this change of cheer,

Thou com'st not to be made a scorn in Rome:
 Princely shall be thy usage every way.
 Rest on my word, and let not discontent
 Daunt all your hopes: madam, he comforts you Can make you greater than the queen of Goths:
 Lavinia, you are not displeas'd with this?

Lav. Not I, my lord, with true nobility
 Warrants these words in princely courtesy.

Sat. Thanks, sweet Lavinia. Romans, let us go:
 Ransomless here we set our prisoners free.
 Proclaim our honours, lords, with trump and drum.

Bass. Lord Titus, by your leave, this maid is mine.

[Seizing LAVINIA.]

Tit. How, sir? are you in earnest then, my lord?
 Bass. Ay, noble Titus, and resolv'd withal
 To do myself this reason and this right.

Marc. Suum cuique is our Roman justice:
 This prince in justice seizeth but his own.

Luc. And that he will and shall, if Lucius live.
 Tit. Traitors, avaunt! where is the emperor's guard
 Treason, my lord! Lavinia is surpris'd.

Sat. Surpris'd! by whom?

Bass. By him that justly may Bear his betroth'd from all the world away.

[Exit MARCUS and BASSIANUS with LAVINIA.]

Mut. Brothers, help to convey her hence away,
 And with my sword I'll keep this door safe.

[Exit LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.]

Tit. Follow, my lord, and I'll soon bring her back.
 Mut. My lord, you pass not here.

Tit. What! villain boy, barr'st me my way in Rome?

Mut. Help, Lucius, help! [Titus kills him.]

Re-enter LUCIUS.

Luc. My lord, you are unjust, and more than so;
 In wrongful quarrel you have slain your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he, are any sons of mine:
My sons would never so dishonour me.
Traitor, restore Lavinia to the emperor.

Luc. Dead, if you will, but not to be his wife,
That is another's lawful promis'd love. [Exit.]

Enter aloft the EMPEROR, with TAMORA and her two Sons, and AARON the Moor.

Sat. No, Titus, no: the emperor deems her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stock:
I'll trust, by leisure, him that mocks me once;
Thee never, nor thy traitorous haughty sons,
Confederates all, thus to dishonour me.
Was none in Rome to make a stale but Saturnine?
Full well, Andronicus,

Agree these deeds with that proud brag of thine,
That said'st, I begg'd the empire at thy hands.

Tit. O monstrous! what reproachful words are these?

Sat. But go thy ways: go, give that changing piece
To him that flourish'd for her with his sword:
A valiant son-in-law thou shalt enjoy;
One fit to bandy with thy lawless sons,
To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Sat. And therefore, lovely Tamora, queen of Goths,
That, like the stately Phœbe 'mongst her nymphs,
Dost overshadow the gallant'st dames of Rome,
If thou be pleas'd with this my sudden choice,
Behold I choose thee, Tamora, for my bride,
And will create thee empress of Rome.

Speak, queen of Goths: dost thou applaud my choice?
And here I swear by all the Roman gods,— Sith priest and holy water are so near,
And tapers burn so bright, and everything
In readiness for Hymeneus stand,—
I will not re-salute the streets of Rome,
Or climb my palace, till from forth this place
I lead espous'd my bride along with me.

Tam. And here, in sight of heaven, to Rome I swear,
If Saturnine advance the queen of Goths,
She will a handmaid be to his desires,
A loving nurse, a mother to his youth.

Sat. Ascend, fair queen, Pantheon: Lords, accompany
Your noble emperor and his lovely bride,
Sent by the heavens for prince Saturnine,
Whose wisdom hath her fortune conquered:
There shall we consummate our spousal rites.

[Exeunt SAT. and his Followers; TAMORA and her Sons; AARON and Goths.]

Tit. I am not bid to wait upon this bride;—
Titus, when wert thou wont to walk alone,
Dishonour'd thus, and challenged of wrongs?

Re-enter MARCUS, LUCIUS, QUINTUS, and MARTIUS.

Marc. O, Titus, see! O see what thou hast done!
In a bad quarrel slain a virtuous son.

Tit. No, foolish tribune, no: no son of mine,—
Nor thou, nor these, confederates in the deed
That hath dishonour'd all our family;
Unworthy brother, and unworthy sons!

Luc. But let us give him burial as becomes:
Give Mutius burial with our brethren.

Tit. Traitors, away! he rests not in this tomb:
This monument five hundred years hath stood,
Which I have sumptuously re-edified:
Here none but soldiers, and Rome's servitors,
Repose in fame: none basely slain in brawls:
Bury him where you can; he comes not here.

Marc. My lord, this is impiety in you:
My nephew Mutius' deeds do plead for him:
He must be buried with his brethren.

Quint., Mart. And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tit. And shall! What villain was it spake that word?

Quint.

Tit. W

Marc. ]

To pardon

Tit. M

And with

My foes I

So trouble

Mart. I

Quint. ]

Marc. ]

Quint.

Tit. Sp

Marc. ]

Luc. D

Marc. §

His noble

That died

Thou art a

The Greek

That slew

Did gracio

Let not yo

Be barr'd ]

Tit.

The disma

To be dish

Well, bur

Luc. Tl

f

Till we wi

No man sl

He lives in

Marc.

d

How come

Is of a sud

Tit. I k

Whether b

Is she not

That broug

Yes; and

Enter the

the Moo

SIANUS c

Sat. So,

God give y

Bass. A

Nor wish r

Sat. Tr

Thou and

Bass. R

My true be

But let the

Meanwhile

Sat. T

But, if we

Bass. M

Answer I

Only thus

By all the

This noble

Is in opinio

That, in th

With his o

In zeal to

To be cont

Receive hi

That hath

and a friend to thee and Rome.
 Prince Bassianus, leave to plead my deeds :
 Thou, and those, that have dishonour'd me,
 and the righteous heavens, be my judge,
 have lov'd and honour'd Saturnine.
 My worthy lord, if ever Tamora gracious in those princely eyes of thine, hear me speak, indifferently for all :
 my suit, sweet, pardon what is past.
 What, madam ! be dishonour'd openly,
 solely put it up without revenge ?
 Not so, my lord ; the gods of Rome forbid
 I be author to dishonour you.
 mine honour, dare I undertake to lord Titus' innocence in all :
 fury not dissembled speaks his griefs :
 let my suit, look graciously on him :
 it so noble a friend on vain suppose ;
 whose sour looks afflict his gentle heart.
 Let me be rul'd by me, be won at last ;
 let me wipe all your griefs and discontents :
 but newly planted in your throne ;
 in the people, and patricians too,
 just survey take Titus' part,
 supplant us for ingratitude,
 Rome reputes to be a heinous sin.
 Let me entreat, and then let me alone :
 I a day to massacre them all ;
 to wipe their faction and their family,
 the father, and his traitorous sons,
 as I sued for my dear son's life ;
 let them know, what 't is to let a queen rule the streets, and beg for grace in vain.
The preceding fourteen lines are spoken aside.
 Come, sweet emperor ; come, Andronicus ;
 let us see this good old man, and cheer the heart
 as in tempest of thy angry frown.

King. Rise, Titus, rise ; my empress hath prevail'd.
Tit. I thank your majesty, and her, my lord.
 These words, these looks, infuse new life in me.
Tam. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
 A Roman now adopted happily,
 And must advise the emperor for his good.
 This day all quarrels die, Andronicus ;
 And let it be mine honour, good my lord,
 That I have reconcil'd your friends and you.
 For you, prince Bassianus, I have pass'd
 My word and promise to the emperor,
 That you will be more mild and tractable :
 And fear not, lords : and you, Lavinia,
 By my advice, all humbled on your knees,
 You shall ask pardon of his majesty.
Luc. We do ; and vow to heaven, and to his highness,
 That what we did was mildly, as we might,
 Tend'ring our sister's honour and our own.
Marc. That on mine honour here I do protest.
Sat. Away, and talk not ; trouble us no more.—
Tam. Nay, nay, sweet emperor, we must all be friends :
 The tribune and his nephews kneel for grace ;
 I will not be denied. Sweet heart, look back.
Sat. Marcus, for thy sake, and thy brother's here,
 And at my lovely Tamora's entreats,
 I do remit these young men's heinous faults.
 Stand up. Lavinia, though you left me like a churl,
 I found a friend : and sure as death I swear,
 I would not part a bachelor from the priest.
 Come, if the emperor's court can feast two brides,
 You are my guest, Lavinia, and your friends :
 This day shall be a love-day, Tamora.
Tit. To-morrow, an it please your majesty,
 To hunt the panther and the hart with me,
 With horn and hound, we 'll give your grace bon-jour.
Sat. Be it so, Titus, and gramercy too. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Rome. Before the Palace.

Enter AARON.

Now climbeth Tamora Olympus' top,
 of Fortune's shot ; and sits aloft,
 if thunder's crack or lightning flash,
 'd above pale envy's threaten'g reach ;
 as the golden sun salutes the morn,
 giving gilt the ocean with his beams,
 the zodiac in his glistening coach, looks the highest peering hills ;
 or
 wit doth earthly honour wait,
 the stoops and trembles at her frown.
 Aaron, arm thy heart, and fit thy thoughts,
 sit aloft with thy imperial mistress, hunt her pitch, whom thou in triumph long prisoner held, fetter'd in amorous chains, ter bound to Aaron's charming eyes
 Prometheus tied to Caucasus.
 With slavish weeds and servile thoughts !
 e bright, and shine in pearl and gold,
 upon this new-made empress.
 said I ? to wanton with this queen,
 Idess, this Semiramis, this nymph,
 en, that will charm Rome's Saturnine, his shipwreck, and his commonweal's.
 what storm is this ?

Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS, braving.

Chiron, thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge,

And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd ;
 And may, for aught thou know'st, affected be.
Chi. Demetrius, thou dost overween in all ;
 And so in this, to bear me down with braves.
 'T is not the difference of a year or two Makes me less gracious, or thee more fortunate :
 I am as able, and as fit, as thou,
 To serve, and to deserve my mistress' grace ;
 And that my sword upon thee shall approve,
 And plead my passions for Lavinia's love.
Aaron. Clubs, clubs ! these lovers will not keep the peace.
Demet. Why, boy, although our mother, unadvis'd,
 Gave you a dancing rapier by your side,
 Are you so desperate grown to threat your friends ?
 Go to ; have your lath glued within your sheath,
 Till you know better how to handle it.
Chi. Meanwhile, sir, with the little skill I have,
 Full well shalt thou perceive how much I dare.
Demet. Ay, boy, grow ye so brave ? [They draw.]
Aaron. Why, how now, lords ?
 So near the emperor's palace dare you draw,
 And maintain such a quarrel openly ?
 Full well I wot the ground of all this grudge ;
 I would not for a million of gold
 The cause were known to them it most concerns.
 Nor would your noble mother, for much more,
 Be so dishonour'd in the court of Rome.
 For shame, put up.
Demet. Not I, till I have sheath'd
 My rapier in his bosom, and, withal,

Thrust those reproachful speeches down his throat,
That he hath breath'd in my dishonour here.

Chi. For that I am prepar'd, and full resolv'd, Foul spoken coward, that thund'rst with thy tongue,
And with thy weapon nothing dar'st perform.

Aaron. Away, I say!
Now, by the gods that warlike Goths adore,
This petty brabble will undo us all!
Why, lords,—and think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right?
What, is Lavinia then become so loose,
Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her love such quarrels may be broach'd
Without controulment, justice, or revenge?
Young lords, beware; and should the empress know
This discord's ground, the music would not please.

Chi. I care not, I, knew she, and all the world,
I love Lavinia more than all the world.

Demet. Youngling, learn thou to make some meaner choice:

Lavinia is thine elder brother's hope.

Aaron. Why, are ye mad? or know ye not, in Rome,

How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brook competitors in love?
I tell you, lords, you do but plot your deaths
By this device.

Chi. Aaron, a thousand deaths would I propose,
To achieve her whom I do love.

Aaron. To achieve her, how?

Demet. Why mak'st thou it so strange?

She is a woman, therefore may be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore may be won;
She is Lavinia, therefore must be lov'd.
What, man! more water glideth by the mill
Than wots the miller of; and easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a shive, we know:
Though Bassianus be the emperor's brother,
Better than he have worn Vulcan's badge.

Aaron. Ay, and as good as Saturninus may.

Demet. Then why should he despair that knows to court it

With words, fair looks, and liberality?
What, hast not thou full often struck a doe,
And borne her cleanly by the keeper's nose?

Aaron. Why, then, it seems, some certain snatch or so

Would serve your turns.

Chi. Ay, so the turn were serv'd.

Demet. Aaron, thou hast hit it.

Aaron. Would you had hit it too,

Then should not we be tir'd with this ado.
Why, hark ye, hark ye, and are you such fools
To square for this? would it offend you then
That both should speed?

Chi. Faith, not me.

Demet. Nor me, so I were one.

Aaron. For shame, be friends, and join for that you jar.

'T is policy and stratagem must do
That you affect, and so must you resolve
That what you cannot as you would achieve
You must perforce accomplish as you may:
Take this of me, Lucrece was not more chaste
Than this Lavinia, Bassianus' love.
A speedier course than ling'ring languishment
Must we pursue, and I have found the path.
My lords, a solemn hunting is in hand;
There will the lovely Roman ladies troop:
The forest walks are wide and spacious,
And many unfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kind for rape and villainy:
Single you thither then this dainty doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words:

This way, or Come, come
To villainy
Will we acc
And she sha
That will no
But to your
The emperor
The palace:
The woods:
There speak
There serve
And revel in Chi. Thy
Demet. S
To cool this
Per Styga,

*Enter Titu
cus, mak*

Tit. The
The fields as Uncouple he And wake t
And rouse t
That all the Sons, let it t
To attend t
I have been
But dawnin

Here a cry enter SAT CURION,

Tit. Mar
Madam, to
I promised:

Sat. And Somewhat t
Bass. La
Lav.

I have been
Sat. Cor
And to our
Our Roman
Marc.

Will rouse t
And climb:

Tit. And Makes way.

Demet. C ho
But hope to

Aaron. I
To bury so:
And never a Let him tha
Know that t
Which, cun
A very exce
And so repo
That have t

Tam. M When every
The birds cl

te lies rolled in the cheerful sun ;
 n leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
 re a checker'd shadow on the ground :
 air sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit,
 list the babbling echo mocks the hounds,
 ; shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
 ouble hunt were heard at once,
 t down and mark their yelping noise :
 r conflict such as was suppos'd
 d'ring prince and Dido once enjoy'd, ith a happy storm they were surpris'd,
 ain'd with a counsel-keeping cave,
 , each wreathed in the other's arms,
 imes done, possess a golden slumber,
 unda, and horns, and sweet melodious birds,
 us as is a nurse's song
 y, to bring her babe asleep.
 . Madam, though Venus govern your desires,
 dominator over mine :
 nifies my deadly standing eye,
 ce and my cloudy melancholy,
 e of woolly hair, that now uncurls n adder when she doth unroll ve fatal execution ?
 am, these are no venerable signs ;
 ce is in my heart, death in my hand,
 d revenge are hammering in my head.
 mora, the empress of my soul,
 ever hopes more heaven than rests in thee,
 e day of doom for Bassianus ;
 mel must lose her tongue to-day ;
 make pillage of her chastity,
 their hands in Bassianus' blood.
 this letter ? take it up, I pray thee,
 the king this fatal-plotted scroll.
 tion me no more ; we are espied :
 es a parcel of our hopeful booty,
 reads not yet their lives' destruction.

Enter BASSIANUS and LAVINIA.

Ah, my sweet Moor, sweeter to me than life !
 No more, great empress, Bassianus comes with him ; and I'll go fetch thy sons thy quarrels, whatsoever they be.
 Who have we here ? Rome's royal empress,
 I'd of our well-beseeming troop ?
 Dian, habited like her,
 abandoned her holy groves,
 general hunting in this forest ?
 saucy controller of our private steps, power that some say Dian had,
 les should be planted presently as was Actæon's, and the hounds ive upon thy new-transformed limbs, rly intruder as thou art !
 nder your patience, gentle empress,
 ght you have a goodly gift in horning, doubted that your Moor and you sl forth to try experiments :
 d your husband from his hounds to-day ;
 they should take him for a stag.
 Believe me, queen, your swarth Cimmerian
 e your honour of his body's hue, etested, and abominable.
 you sequestered from all your train ?
 sd from your snow-white goodly steed,
 ler'd hither to an obscure plot,
 ned but with a barbarous Moor,
 ire had not conducted you ?
 nd, being intercepted in your sport,
 on that my noble lord be rated
 ess ; I pray you, let us hence,
 re joy her raven-colour'd love ;
 y fits the purpose passing well.

Bass. The king, my brother, shall have notice of this.

Lav. Ay, for these slips have made him noted long ;
 Good king, to be so mightily abused !

Tam. Why have I patience to endure all this ?

Enter CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.

Demet. How now, dear sovereign, and our gracious mother,

Why doth your highness look so pale and wan ?

Tam. Have I not reason, think you, to look pale ?

These two have 'tic'd me hither to this place,
 A barren detested vale, you see, it is ;
 The trees, though summer, yet forlorn and lean,
 O'ercome with moss and baleful mistletoe.
 Here never shines the sun ; here nothing breeds,
 Unless the nightly owl or fatal raven :
 And when they show'd me this abhorred pit,
 They told me here, at dead time of the night,
 A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
 Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urehins,
 Would make such fearful and confused cries,
 As any mortal body, hearing it,
 Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.
 No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
 But straight they told me they would bind me here,
 Unto the body of a dismal yew,
 And leave me to this miserable death.
 And then they call'd me foul adulteress,
 Lascivious Goth, and all the bitterest terms
 That ever ear did hear to such effect.
 And had you not by wondrous fortune come,
 This vengeance on me had they executed :
 Revenge it, as you love your mother's life,
 Or be ye not henceforth call'd my children.

Demet. This is a witness that I am thy son.

[Stabs him.

Chi. And this for me struck home to show my strength.

[Stabs him likewise.

Lav. Ay, come, Semiramis,—nay, barbarous Tamora !

For no name fits thy nature but thy own.

Tam. Give me thy poniard ; you shall know, my boys,

Your mother's hand shall right your mother's wrong.

Demet. Stay, madam ; here is more belongs to her ;
 First thresh the corn, then after burn the straw :
 This minion stood upon her chastity,
 Upon her nuptial vow, her loyalty,
 And, with that painted hope, braves your mightiness :
 And shall she carry this unto her grave ?

Chi. And if she do, I would I were an eunuch.

Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,
 And make his dead trunk pillow to our lust.

Tam. But when ye have the honey you desire,
 Let not this wasp outlive us both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you, madam, we will make that sure Come, mistress, now perforce we will enjoy
 That nice preserved honesty of yours.

Lav. Oh, Tamora ! thou bear'st a woman's face—

Tam. I will not hear her speak ; away with her !

Lav. Sweet lords, entreat her hear me but a word.

Demet. Listen, fair madam ; let it be your glory
 To see her tears, but be your heart to them
 As unrelenting flint to drops of rain.

Lav. When did the tiger's young ones teach the dam ?

O, do not learn her wrath ; she taught it thee.

The milk thou suck'st from her did turn to marble

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny.

Yet every mother breeds not sons alike ;

Do thou entreat her show a woman pity. [To CHIRON

Chi. What ! wouldst thou have me prove myself a bastard ?

Lav. 'T is true; the raven doth not hatch a lark;
Yet have I heard,—oh could I find it now!—
The lion, mov'd with pity, did endure
To have his princely paws par'd all away.
Some say that ravens foster forlorn children,
The whilst their own birds furnish in their nests:
Oh, be to me, though thy hard heart say no,
Nothing so kind, but something pitiful!

Tam. I know not what it means; away with her.
Lav. Oh let me teach thee! For my father's sake,
That gave thee life when well he might have slain thee,
Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears.

Tam. Hadst thou in person ne'er offended me,
Even for his sake am I pitiless.
Remember, boys, I pour'd forth tears in vain,
To save your brother from the sacrifice;
But fierce Andronicus would not relent:
Therefore, away with her, and use her as you will;
The worse to her, the better lov'd of me.

Lav. Oh Tamora, be call'd a gentle queen,
And with thine own hands kill me in this place:
For 't is not life that I have begg'd so long;
Poor I was slain when Bassianus died.

Tam. What begg'st thou then? fond woman, let me go.
Lav. 'T is present death I beg; and one thing more,
That womanhood denies my tongue to tell:
Oh, keep me from their worse than killing lust,
And tumble me into some loathsome pit,
Where never man's eye may behold my body;—
Do this, and be a charitable murderer.

Tam. So should I rob my sweet sons of their fee.
No, let them satisfy their lust on thee.

Demet. Away, for thou hast stay'd us here too long.
Lav. No grace! no womanhood! Ah, beastly creature,

The blot and enemy to our general name!
Confusion fall—

Chi. Nay, then I'll stop your mouth; bring thou her husband: [Dragging off LAVINIA.]
This is the hole where Aaron bid us hide him.

Tam. Farewell, my sons; see that you make her sure:

Ne'er let my heart know merry cheer indeed,
Till all the Andronici be made away:
Now will I hence to seek my lovely Moor,
And let my spleenful sons this trull deflour. [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—The Forest.

Enter AARON, with QUINTUS and MARTIUS.

Aaron. Come on, my lords, the better foot before:
Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit,
Where I espied the panther fast asleep.

Quint. My sight is very dull, whate'er it bodes.
Mart. And mine, I promise you; were 't not for shame,
Well could I leave our sport to sleep awhile.

[MART. falls into the pit.]
Quint. What, art thou fallen? What subtle hole is this,

Whose mouth is cover'd with rude growing briars,
Upon whose leaves are drops of new-shed blood,
As fresh as morning's dew distill'd on flowers?
A very fatal place it seems to me:

Speak, brother, hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

Mart. O brother, with the dismall'st object hurt,
That ever eye with sight made heart lament.

Aaron. [Aside.] Now will I fetch the king to find them here,
That he thereby may have a likely guess,
How these were they that made away his brother. [Exit.]

Mart. Why dost not comfort me and help me out
From this unhallow'd and blood-stained hole?

Quint. I am surpris'd with an uncouth fear;

A chilling sweat o'erruns my trembling joints;
My heart suspects more than mine eye can see.

Mart. To prove thou hast a true-divining heart,
Aaron and thou look down into this den,
And see a fearful sight of blood and death.

Quint. Aaron is gone, and my compassionate
Will not permit mine eyes once to behold
The thing whereat it trembles by surmise:
O, tell me how it is, for ne'er till now
Was I a child, to fear I know not what.

Mart. Lord Bassianus lies embred here,
All on a heap, like to a slaughter'd lamb,
In this detested, dark, blood-drinking pit.

Quint. If it be dark, how dost thou know 't is so?

Mart. Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring, that lightens all the hole:

Which, like a taper in some monument,
Doth shine upon the dead man's earthly cheeks,
And shows the ragged entrails of this pit:

So pale did shine the moon on Pyramus,
When he by night lay bath'd in maiden blood.
O, brother, help me with thy fainting hand,—
If fear hath made thee faint, as me it hath,—
Out of this fell-devouring receptacle,
As hateful as Cocytus' misty mouth.

Quint. Reach me thy hand, that I may help out;

Or, wanting strength to do thee so much good,
I may be pluck'd into the swallowing womb
Of this deep pit, poor Bassianus' grave.

I have no strength to pluck thee to the brink.

Mart. Nor I no strength to climb without thy aid.

Quint. Thy hand once more; I will not loose again
Till thou art here aloft, or I below:
Thou canst not come to me, I come to thee. [Falls.]

Enter SATURNINUS and AARON.

Sat. Along with me:—I'll see what hole is here,
And what he is that now is leap'd into it.
Say, who art thou that lately didst descend
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?

Mart. The unhappy son of old Andronicus, Brought hither in a most unlucky hour,
To find thy brother Bassianus dead.

Sat. My brother dead? I know thou dost but jest.
He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase;
'T is not an hour since I left him there.

Mart. We know not where you left him all alive,
But out, alas! here have we found him dead.

Enter TAMORA, ANDRONICUS, and LECTIA.

Tam. Where is my lord the king?
Sat. Here, Tamora, though griev'd with killing grief.

Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?
Sat. Now to the bottom dost thou search my wound,
Poor Bassianus here lies murdered.

Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatal word:
The complot of this timeless tragedy;
And wonder greatly that man's face can fall
In pleasing smiles such murderous tyranny.

[She gives SATURNINUS a letter.]

SATURNINUS reads the letter.

"An if we miss to meet him handsomely,— Sweet huntsman, Bassianus 't is we mean,—
Do thou so much as dig the grave for him;
Thou know'st our meaning: Look for thy reward
Among the nettles at the elder-tree,
Which overshades the mouth of that same pit,
Where we decreed to bury Bassianus.
Do this, and purchase us thy lasting friend."

Sat. Oh Tamora, was ever heard the like?
This is the pit, and this the elder-tree.

sirs, if you can find the huntsman out,
 should have murder'd Bassianus here.
 My gracious lord, here is the bag of gold.
 Two of thy whelps, [to TITUS] fell curs of bloody kind,
 here bereft my brother of his life;
 drag them from the pit unto the prison;
 let them bide until we have devis'd never-heard-of torturing pain for them.
 n. What, are they in this pit? oh wondrous thing!
 easily murder is discovered!
 High emperor, upon my feeble knee,
 this boon, with tears not lightly shed,
 this fell fault of my accursed sons,
 sed, if the fault be prov'd in them—
 If it be prov'd! you see it is apparent.
 I found this letter, Tamora, was it you?
 n. Andronicus himself did take it up.
 I did, my lord; yet let me be their bail:
 for my father's reverent tomb I vow shall be ready at your highness' will,
 to answer their suspicion with their lives.
 Thou shalt not bail them, see thou follow me.
 I will bring the murder'd body, some the murderers:
 I will not speak a word, the guilt is plain;
 by my soul, were there worse end than death,
 and upon them should be executed.
 n. Andronicus, I will entreat the king:
 let thy sons; they shall do well enough.
 Come, Lucius, come; stay not to talk with them. [Exeunt.]

SCENE V.—The Forest.

DEMETRIUS and CHIRON, with LAVINIA, her hands cut off, and her tongue cut out.
 demet. So now go tell, an if thy tongue can speak,
 't was that cut thy tongue and ravish'd thee.
 chiron. Write down thy mind, bewray thy meaning so,
 thy stumps will let thee play the scribe.
 demet. See, how with signs and tokens she can scrawl.
 chiron. Go home, call for sweet water, wash thy hands.
 demet. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash;
 chiron. So, let 's leave her to her silent walks.
 demet. An 't were my cause, I should go hang myself.
 demet. If thou hadst hands to help thee knit the cord. [Exeunt DEMET. and CHI.]

Enter MARCUS, from hunting.

Marc. Who is this? my niece, that flies away so fast!
 Cousin, a word; where is your husband?
 If I do dream, would all my wealth would wake me!
 If I do wake, some planet strike me down,
 That I may slumber in eternal sleep!
 Speak, gentle niece; what stern ungentle hands
 Have lopp'd, and bew'd, and made thy body bare
 Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments Whose circling shadows kings have sought to sleep in,
 And might not gain so great a happiness
 As half thy love? why dost not speak to me?
 Alas, a crimson river of warm blood,
 Like to a bubbling fountain stirr'd with wind,
 Doth rise and fall between thy rosed lips,
 Coming and going with thy honey breath.
 But sure some Tereus hath deflower'd thee,
 And, lest thou shouldst detect him, cut thy tongue.
 Ah, now thou turn'st away thy face for shame!
 And, notwithstanding all this loss of blood,
 As from a conduit with their issuing spouts,
 Yet do thy cheeks look red as Titan's face,
 Blushing to be encounter'd with a cloud.
 Shall I speak for thee? shall I say, 't is so?
 Oh that I knew thy heart, and knew the beast,
 That I might rail at him to ease my mind!
 Sorrow concealed, like an oven stopp'd,
 Doth burn the heart to cinders where it is.
 Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
 And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind.
 But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee;
 A craftier Tereus hast thou met withal,
 And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,
 That could have better sew'd than Philomel.
 Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
 Tremble like aspen-leaves upon a lute,
 And make the silken strings delight to kiss them,
 He would not then have touch'd them for his life.
 Or had he heard the heavenly harmony
 Which that sweet tongue hath made,
 He would have dropp'd his knife, and fell asleep,
 As Cerberus at the Thracian poet's feet.
 Come, let us go, and make thy father blind;
 For such a sight will blind a father's eye:
 One hour's storm will drown the fragrant meads;
 What will whole months of tears thy father's eyes?
 Do not draw back, for we will mourn with thee;
 Oh, could our mourning ease thy misery! [Exeunt.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Rome. A Street.

the Judges and Senators, with MARTIUS and PRINCE bound, passing on the stage to the place of execution; and TITUS going before, pleading.
 Hear me, grave fathers! noble tribunes, stay!
 My youth of mine age, whose youth was spent
 In dangerous wars, whilst you securely slept;
 My blood in Rome's great quarrel shed;
 My long and frosty nights that I have watch'd;
 My bitter tears, which now you see
 Begun to age the wrinkles in my cheeks;
 My faithful to my condemned sons,
 Whose souls are not corrupted, as 't is thought.
 My twenty sons I never wept,
 Because they died in honour's lofty bed.
 Andronicus lies down, and the Judges pass by him.
 My noble wife, tribunes, in the dust I write
 My heart's deep languor, and my soul's sad tears:

Let my tears stanch the earth's dry appetite;
 My sons' sweet blood will make it shame and blush.
 [Exeunt Senators, Tribunes, and Prisoners]
 O earth, I will befriend thee more with rain,
 That shall distil from these two ancient ruins,
 Than youthful April shall with all his showers.
 In summer's drought I 'll drop upon thee still;
 In winter, with warm tears I 'll melt the snow,
 And keep eternal spring-time on thy face,
 So thou refuse to drink my dear sons' blood.

Enter LUCIUS, with his weapon drawn.

Oh, reverend tribunes! oh, gentle, aged men!
 Unbind my sons, reverse the doom of death;
 And let me say, that never wept before,
 My tears are now prevailing orators!
 Luc. Oh, noble father, you lament in vain;
 The tribunes hear you not, no man is by,
 And you recount your sorrows to a stone.

Tit. Ah, Lucius, for thy brothers let me plead :
Grave tribunes, once more I entreat of you !

Luc. My gracious lord, no tribune hears you speak.

Tit. Why, 't is no matter, man ; if they did hear
They would not mark me : oh, if they did hear,
They would not pity me :

Therefore I tell my sorrows bootless to the stones,
Who, though they cannot answer my distress,
Yet in some sort they 're better than the tribunes,
For that they will not intercept my tale :
When I do weep, they, humbly at my feet,
Receive my tears, and seem to weep with me ;
And, were they but attired in grave weeds,
Rome could afford no tribune like to these.

A stone is as soft wax, tribunes more hard than stones ;
A stone is silent, and offendeth not ;
And tribunes with their tongues doom men to death.
But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawn ?

Luc. To rescue my two brothers from their death :
For which attempt, the judges have pronounc'd
My everlasting doom of banishment.

Tit. Oh, happy man, they have befriended thee :
Why, foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceive
That Rome is but a wilderness of tigers ?
Tigers must prey ; and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine : how happy art thou, then,
From these devourers to be banish'd !
But who comes with our brother Marcus here ?

Enter MARCUS and LAVINIA.

Marc. Titus, prepare thy noble eyes to weep,
Or, if not so, thy noble heart to break :
I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Tit. Will it consume me ? Let me see it, then.

Marc. This was thy daughter.

Tit. Why, Marcus, so she is.

Luc. Ah me ! this object kills me.

Tit. Faint-hearted boy, arise and look upon her :

Speak, Lavinia, what accursed hand
Hath made thee handless in thy father's sight ?
What fool hath added water to the sea ?
Or brought a fagot to bright-burning Troy ?
My grief was at the height before thou cam'st,
And now, like Nilus, it disdaineth bounds :
Give me a sword, I 'll chop off my hands too ;
For they have fought for Rome, and all in vain ;
And they have nurs'd this woe, in feeding life ;
In bootless prayer have they been heed up,
And they have serv'd me to effectless use.
Now all the service I require of them
Is that the one will help to cut the other.
'T is well, Lavinia, that thou hast no hands ;
For hands, to do Rome service, are but vain.

Luc. Speak, gentle sister, who hath martyr'd thee ?

Marc. Oh, that delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage,
Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung
Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear.

Luc. Oh, say thou for her, who hath done this deed ?

Marc. Oh, thus I found her, straying in the park,
Seeking to hide herself, as doth the deer
That hath receiv'd some unrecuring wound.

Tit. It was my deer ; and he that wounded her Hath hurt me more than had he kill'd me dead :

For now I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea,
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave,
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.
This way to death my wretched sons are gone ;
Here stands my other son, a banish'd man ;
And here my brother, weeping at my woes :
But that which gives my soul the greatest spurn

Is dear Lavinia
Had I but se
It would hav
Now I behol
Thou hast no
Nor tongue t
Thy husband
Thy brothers
Look, Marc
When I did
Stood on her
Upon a gath

Marc. Pe hu
Perchance, t

Tit. If th Because the
No, no, they Witness the Gentle Lavi
Or make her Shall thy so
And thou, a Looking all
How they a
With miry
And in the Till the fre
And made s
Or shall we
Or shall we Pass the rer
What shall Plot some d
To make us

Luc. Sw
gr

See how my Marc. P ey

Tit. Ah, Thy napkin
For thou, p

Luc. Ah

Tit. Ma

Had she a
That to her
His napkin
Can do no
Oh, what a
As far from

Aaron. ?
Sends thee
Let Marcus
Or any one
And send i Will send
And that sl

Tit. Oh,
Did ever ra
That gives
With all m
Good Aaron

Luc. Sta
That hath Shall not b
My youth
And theref

Marc. V
R
And rear'd

g destruction on the enemy's castle? a ne of both but are of high desert :
nd hath been but idle : let it serve som my two nephews from their death, ave I kept it to a worthy end.
n. Nay, come, agree whose hand shall go along,
r they die before their pardon come.
c. My hand shall go.

By heaven, it shall not go!
Sirs, strive no more; such wither'd herbs as these

set for plucking up, and therefore mine.
Sweet father, if I shall be thought thy son, redeem my brothers both from death.
c. And for our father's sake, and mother's care,
t me show a brother's love to thee.
Agree between you; I will spare my hand.
Then I'll go fetch an axe.

c. But I will use the axe.
[Exeunt LUCIUS and MARCUS.

Come hither, Aaron; I'll deceive them both :
ne thy hand, and I will give thee mine.

m. If that be call'd deceit, I will be honest, ever, whilst I live, deceive men so :
ll deceive you in another sort,
at you'll say, ere half an hour pass. [Aside.
[He cuts off TITUS's hand.

Enter LUCIUS and MARCUS.

Now, stay your strife : what shall be is despatch'd :

Aaron, give his majesty my hand,
m, it was a hand that warded him
housand dangers : bid him bury it :
ath it merited, that let it have.
my sons, say I account of them
els purchas'd at an easy price ;
t dear too, because I bought mine own.

m. I go, Andronicus; and, for thy hand, y-and-by to have thy sons with thee.
eads I mean : oh, how this villainy [Aside.
t me with the very thoughts of it!
ls do good, and fair men call for grace,
will have his soul black like his face. [Exit.

Oh, here I lift this one hand up to heaven,
w this feeble ruin to the earth :
power pities wretched tears,

I call : What, wilt thou kneel with me ?
[To LAVINIA.

n, dear heart, for heaven shall bear our prayers,
s our sighs we'll breathe the welkin dim,
sin the sun with fog, as sometime clouds,
they do hug him in their melting bosoms.

c. Oh brother, speak with possibilities, not break into these deep extremes.
Is not my sorrow deep, having no bottom ?
e my passions bottomless with them.

c. But yet, let reason govern thy lament.
If there were reason for these miseries, to limits could I bind my woes :

heaven doth weep, doth not the earth o'erflow ?
rinds rage, doth not the sea wax mad,
ning the welkin with his big-swoll'n face ?
lt thou have a reason for this coil ?
e sea. Hark how her sighs do blow :
he weeping welkin, I the earth :
ust my sea be moved with her sighs ;
ust my carol with her continual tears
a deluge, overflow'd and drown'd :
y ? my bowels cannot hide her woes,
e a drunkard must I vomit them.

Le. Theobald changed this to casque. It is probably roughhold, power.

Then give me leave, for losers will have leave
To ease their stomachs with their bitter tongues.

Enter a Messenger with two heads and a hand.

Messen. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid
For that good hand thou sent'st the emperor :
Here are the heads of thy two noble sons,
And here 's thy hand in scorn to thee sent back :
Thy griefs their sports : thy resolution mock'd :
That woe is me to think upon thy woes,
More than remembrance of my father's death. [Exit.

Marc. Now let hot Ætna cool in Sicily,
And be my heart an ever-burning hell :
These miseries are more than may be borne.
To weep with them that weep doth ease some deal ;
But sorrow flouted at is double death.

Luc. Ah, that this sight should make so deep a wound,
And yet detested life not shrink thereat !
That ever death should let life bear his name,
Where life hath no more interest but to breathe !

[LAVINIA kisses TITUS.
Marc. Alas, poor heart, that kiss is comfortless,
As frozen water to a starved snake.

Tit. When will this fearful slumber have an end ?

Marc. Now farewell flattery : Die Andronicus ;
Thou dost not slumber : see thy two sons' heads,
Thy warlike hand ; thy mangled daughter here ;
Thy other banish'd son with this dear sight
Struck pale and bloodless ; and thy brother, I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb.

Ah, now no more will I control my griefs :
Rend off thy silver hair, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth ; and be this dismal sight
The closing up of our most wretched eyes :
Now is a time to storm ; why art thou still ?

Tit. Ha, ha, ha !

Marc. Why dost thou laugh ? it fits not with this hour.

Tit. Why, I have not another tear to shed :
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,
And would usurp upon my watery eyes,
And make them blind with tributary tears.

Then, which way shall I find revenge's cave ?
For these two heads do seem to speak to me,
And threat me, I shall never come to bliss,
Till all these mischiefs be return'd again,

Even in their throats that have committed them.
Come, let me see what task I have to do.

You heavy people, circle me about,
That I may turn me to each one of you,
And swear unto my soul to right your wrongs.
The vow is made. Come, brother, take a head,
And in this hand the other will I bear.

And, Lavinia, thou shalt be employ'd in these things.
Bear thou my hand, sweet wench, between thy teeth :
As for thee, boy, go get thee from my sight ;
Thou art an exile, and thou must not stay :

Hie to the Goths, and raise an army there ;
And if you love me, as I think you do,
Let 's kiss and part, for we have much to do.

[Exeunt TITUS, MARCUS, and LAVINIA

Luc. Farewell, Andronicus, my noble father ;
The wofull'st man that ever liv'd in Rome :
Farewell, proud Rome, till Lucius come again :
He leaves his pledges, dearer than his life.

Farewell, Lavinia, my noble sister :
O, would thou wert as thou tofore hast been !
But now, nor Lucius, nor Lavinia, lives
But in oblivion and hateful griefs :

If Lucius live, he will requite your wrongs,
And make proud Saturnine and his empress
Beg at the gates like Tarquin and his queen.
Now will I to the Goths, and raise a power,
To be reveng'd on Rome and Saturnine. [Exit LUCIUS

SCENE II.—A Room in Titus's House. A Banquet set out.<sup>a</sup>

Enter TITUS, MARCUS, LAVINIA, and Young LUCIUS, a boy.

Tit. So, so; now sit: and look you eat no more Than will preserve just so much strength in us As will revenge these bitter woes of ours. Marcus, unknit that sorrow-wreathen knot; Thy niece and I, poor creatures, want our hands, And cannot passionate our tenfold grief With folded arms. This poor right hand of mine Is left to tyrannize upon my breast; And when my heart, all mad with misery, Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh, Then thus I thump it down.— Thou map of woe, that thus dost talk in signs!

[To LAVINIA.]

When thy poor heart beats with outrageous beating, Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still. Wound it with sighing, girl, kill it with groans; Or get some little knife between thy teeth, And just against thy heart make thou a hole; That all the tears that thy poor eyes let fall May run into that sink, and, soaking in, Drown the lamenting fool in sea-salt tears.

Marc. Fie, brother, fie! teach her not thus to lay Such violent hands upon her tender life.

Tit. How now! has sorrow made thee dote already? Why, Marcus, no man should be mad but I. What violent hands can she lay on her life? Ah, wherefore dost thou urge the name of hands;— To bid Æneas tell the tale twice o'er, How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable? O, handle not the theme, to talk of hands; Lest we remember still that we have none.— Fie, fie, how frantically I square my talk! As if we should forget we had no hands, If Marcus did not name the word of hands!— Come, let's fall to; and, gentle girl, eat this:— Here is no drink! Hark, Marcus, what she says;— I can interpret all her martyr'd signs;— She says she drinks no other drink but tears, Brew'd with her sorrows, mesh'd upon her cheeks:— Speechless complainer, I will learn thy thought; In thy dumb action will I be as perfect As begging hermits in their holy prayers:

Thou shalt
Nor wink;
But I, of th
And, by sti
Boy. Go
Make my s
Marc. A Doth weep
Tit. Pea
And tears

What dost
Marc. A
Tit. Ou Mine eyes
A deed of Becomes n
I see thou
Marc. A
Tit. Bu
How woul
And buzz
Poor harm
That, with Came here

Marc. I
Like to the
Tit. O,
Then pard
For thou h
Give me tl
Flattering
Come hith
There's fo
Ah, sirrah
Yet, I thir
But that, t
That come
Marc. I
He takes f
Tit. Co
I'll to thy Sad stories
Come, boy
And thou:

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before Titus's House.

Enter TITUS and MARCUS; then Young LUCIUS, and LAVINIA running after him, the boy flying from her with his books under his arm.

Boy. Help, grandsire, help! my aunt Lavinia Follows me everywhere, I know not why. Good uncle Marcus, see how swift she comes! Alas, sweet aunt, I know not what you mean.

Marc. Stand by me, Lucius; do not fear thy aunt.

Tit. She loves thee, boy, too well to do thee harm.

Boy. Ay, when my father was in Rome she did.

Marc. What means my niece Lavinia by these signs?

Tit. Fear her not, Lucius: somewhat doth she mean. See, Lucius, see, how much she makes of thee: Somewhither would she have thee go with her. Ay, boy, Cornelia never with more care

Read to be Sweet poet
Canst thou
Boy. M
Unless son
For I have Extremity
And I hav
Ran mad
Although,
Loves me
And woul
Which ma
Causeless,
And, mad
I will mos
Marc. I

Tit. He
Some book
Which is:

<sup>a</sup> This scene is only found in the folio of 1623. Johnson says it "does not contribute anything to the action." The poet no doubt felt that after such tumultuous action repose was wanting.

ou art deeper read, and better skill'd :
and take choice of all my library ;
beguile thy sorrow, till the heavens
the damn'd contriver of this deed.
book ?
ifts she up her arms in sequence thus ?
c. I think she means that there was more than one erate in the fact ;—ay, more there was :
to heaven she heaves them for revenge.
Lucius, what book is that she tosseth up ?
Grandsire, 't is Ovid's Metamorphoses ;
ther gave it me.
e. For love of her that's gone,
s, she cull'd it from among the rest.
Soft ! How busily she turns the leaves !
er : what would she find ? Lavinia, shall I read ?
the tragic tale of Philomel,
rats of Tereus' treason and his rape ;
pe, I fear, was root of thine annoy.
i. See, brother, see ; note how she quotes* the leaves.
Lavinia, wert thou thus surpris'd, sweet girl,
d and wrong'd as Philomela was,
in the ruthless, vast, and gloomy woods ?
! Ay, such a place there is where we did hunt,
we never, never hunted there !
'd by that the poet here describes,
are made for murderers and for rapes.
i. O, why should nature build so foul a den,
the gods delight in tragedies ?
Give signs, sweet girl,—for here are none but friends,—
oman lord it was durst do the deed ?
k not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,
t the camp to sin in Lucrece' bed.
i. Sit down, sweet niece ; brother, sit down by me.
Pallas, Jove, or Mercury,
me that I may this treason find.
l, look here ; look here, Lavinia.
[He writes his name with his staff, and guides
it with feet and mouth.
dy plot is plain ; guide, if thou canst,
ter me. I have writ my name,
t the help of any hand at all.
se that heart that forc'd us to this shift !
ou, good niece, and here display at last,
od will have discover'd for revenge.
guide thy pen to print thy sorrows plain, s may know the traitors and the truth !
[She takes the staff in her mouth, and guides
it with her stumps, and writes.
Oh, do ye read, my lord, what she hath writ ?
an, Chiron, Demetrius."'
i. What, what ! the lustful sons of Tamora, ers of this heinous, bloody deed ?
Magni Dominator poli,
stus audis scelera? tam lentus vides?
i. Oh, calm these, gentle lord ; although I know enough written upon this earth
a mutiny in the mildest thoughts,
a the minds of infants to exclaims.
i, kneel down with me ; Lavinia, kneel ;
el, sweet boy, the Roman Hector's hope ;
ar with me,—as with the woful fere,<sup>b</sup> er of that chaste dishonour'd dame, nius Brutus aware for Lucrece' rape,— will prosecute, by good advice,
evenge upon these traitorous Goths,
their blood, or die with this reproach.
T is sure enough, an you knew how ;
sa hunt these bear-whelps, then beware :

* Quotes—observes, searches through.

<sup>b</sup> Fere—a companion, and here a husband.

The dam will wake, and if she wind you once,
She 's with the lion deeply still in league,
And lulls him whilst she playeth on her back,
And when he sleeps will she do what she list.
You are a young huntsman, Marcus ; let it alone ;
And, come, I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words,
And lay it by : the angry northern wind
Will blow these sands like Sibyls' leaves abroad,
And where 's your lesson then ? Boy, what say you ?
Boy. I say, my lord, that if I were a man,
Their mother's bed chamber should not be safe,
For these bad bondmen to the yoke of Rome.
Marc. Ay, that's my boy ; thy father hath full oft
For his ungrateful country done the like.
Boy. And, uncle, so will I, an if I live.
Tit. Come, go with me into mine armoury ;
Lucius, I'll fit thee ; and withal my boy
Shall carry from me to the empress' sons
Presents that I intend to send them both :
Come, come, thou'lt do thy message, wilt thou not ?
Boy. Ay, with my dagger in their bosoms, grandsire.
Tit. No, boy, not so ; I'll teach thee another course
Lavinia, come ; Marcus, look to my house ;
Lucius and I'll go brave it at the court :
Ay, marry, will we, sir ; and we'll be waited on.
[Exeunt TITUS, LAVINIA, and Boy.
Marc. O heavens ! can you hear a good man groan,
And not relent, or not compassion him ?
Marcus, attend him in his extasy,
That hath more scars of sorrow in his heart,
Than foemen's marks upon his batter'd shield ;
But yet so just, that he will not revenge :
Revenge the heavens for old Andronicus. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room in the Palace.

Enter AARON, CHIRON, and DEMETRIUS at one door ;
at another door Young LUCIUS and Attendant, with a bundle of weapons, and verses written upon them.
Chi. Demetrius, here 's the son of Lucius ;
He hath some message to deliver us.
Aaron. Ay, some mad message from his mad grandfather.
Boy. My lords, with all the humbleness I may,
I greet your honours from Andronicus ;
And pray the Roman gods confound you both. [Aside.
Demet. Gramercy, lovely Lucius, what 's the news ?
Boy. That you are both decipher'd, that 's the news,
For villains mark'd with rape [Aside]. May it please
you,
My grandsire, well advis'd, hath sent by me
The goodliest weapons of his armoury,
To gratify your honourable youth,
The hope of Rome ; for so he bad me say
And so I do, and with his gifts present
Your lordships, that, whenever you have need,
You may be armed and appointed well,
And so I leave you both : [Aside] like bloody villains.
[Exeunt Boy and Attendant.
Demet. What 's here ? a scroll ; and written round about ?
Let 's see :
" Integer vita scelerisque purus,
Non eget Mauri jaculis, nec arcu."
Chi. O 't is a verse in Horace ; I know it well :
I read it in the grammar long ago.
Aaron. Ay, just a verse in Horace ;<sup>a</sup> right, you have it.
Now, what a thing it is to be an ass !
Here 's no sound jest ! the old man hath found their guilt,

<sup>a</sup> Ay, just a verse in Horace—merely a verse in Horace. The common punctuation is, " Ay, just ! A verse," &c.

And sends the weapons wrapp'd about with lines,
That wound, beyond their feeling, to the quick :
But were our witty empress well a-foot,
She would applaud Andronicus' conceit.
But let her rest in her unrest awhile. [The preceding

seven lines are spoken aside.

And now, young lords, was't not a happy star
Led us to Rome, strangers, and more than so,
Captives, to be advanced to this height ?
It did me good, before the palace gate,
To brave the tribune in his brother's hearing.

Demet. But me more good, to see so great a lord
Basely insinuate, and send us gifts.

Aaron. Had he not reason, lord Demetrius ?
Did you not use his daughter very friendly ?

Demet. I would we had a thousand Roman dames
At such a bay by turn to serve our lust.

Chi. A charitable wish, and full of love.

Aaron. Here lacks but your mother for to say
Amen.

Chi. And that would she for twenty thousand more.
Demet. Come, let us go, and pray to all the gods,
For our beloved mother in her pains.

Aaron. Pray to the devils ; the gods have given us over.
[Aside. Trumpets sound.

Demet. Why do the emperor's trumpets flourish
thus ?

Chi. Belike, for joy the emperor hath a son.

Demet. Soft ; who comes here ?

Enter Nurse, with a blackamoor child.

Nurse. Good morrow, lords ;
O, tell me, did you see Aaron, the Moor ?

Aaron. Well, more, or less, or ne'er a whit at all,
Here Aaron is ; and what with Aaron now ?

Nurse. O gentle Aaron, we are all undone !
Now help, or woe betide thee evermore !

Aaron. Why, what a caterwauling dost thou keep !
What dost thou wrap and fumble in thine arms ?

Nurse. O, that which I would hide from heaven's eye,—

Our empress' shame, and stately Rome's disgrace ;
She is deliver'd, lords, she is deliver'd.

Aaron. To whom ?
Nurse. I mean she is brought a-bed.

Aaron. Well, God give her good rest ! What hath he sent her ?

Nurse. A devil.

Aaron. Why, then she is the devil's dam ; a joyful issue.

Nurse. A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue :
Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad,
Amongst the fairest breeders of our clime.
The empress sends it thee, thy stamp, thy seal,
And bids thee christen it with thy dagger's point.

Aaron. Out, you whore ! is black so base a hue ?
Sweet blowse, you are a beauteous blossom sure.

Demet. Villain, what hast thou done ?

Aaron. That which thou canst not undo.

Chi. Thou hast undone our mother.

Aaron. Villain, I have done thy mother.

Demet. And therein, hellish dog, thou hast undone.

Woe to her chance, and damn'd her loathed choice !

Accurs'd the offspring of so foul a fiend.

Chi. It shall not live.

Aaron. It shall not die.

Nurse. Aaron, it must ; the mother wills it so.

Aaron. What ! must it, nurse ? Then let no man but I

Do execution on my flesh and blood.

Demet. I'll broach the tadpole on my rapier's point :
Nurse, give it me ; my sword shall soon despatch it.

Aaron. Sooner this sword shall plough thy bowels up.
[Takes the Child from the Nurse.

Stay, murderous villains, will you kill your brother !

Now, by the burning tapers of the sky,

That shone so brightly when this boy was gut,

He dies upon my scimitar's sharp point

That touches this my first-born son and heir.

I tell you, younglings, not Enceladus,

With all his threat'ning band of Typhon's brood,

Nor great Alcides, nor the god of war,

Shall seize this prey out of his father's hands.

What, what ! ye sanguine, shallow-hearted boys !

Ye white-lim'd walls ! ye ale-house painted signs !

Coal-black is better than another hue,

In that it scorns to bear another hue :

For all the water in the ocean

Can never turn the swan's black legs to white,

Although she lave them hourly in the flood :

Tell the empress from me, I am of age

To keep mine own, excuse it how she can.

Demet. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistress ?

Aaron. My mistress is my mistress ; this, myself,

The vigour, and the picture of my youth :

This before all the world do I prefer ;

This, maugre all the world, will I keep safe,

Or some of you shall smoke for it in Rome.

Demet. By this our mother is for ever sham'd.

Chi. Rome will despise her for this foul escape.

Nurse. The emperor, in his rage, will doom her death.

Chi. I blush to think upon this ignominy.

Aaron. Why, there 's the privilege your beauty has

Fie, treacherous hue, that will betray with blushing

The close enacts and counsels of the heart :

Here 's a young lad fram'd of another leer.*

Look, how the black slave smiles upon the father,

As who should say, " Old lad, I am thine own."

He is your brother, lords, sensibly fed

Of that self-blood that first gave life to you ;

And from that womb, where you imprison'd were,

He is enfranchis'd and come to light :

Nay, he is your brother by the surer side,

Although my seal be stamped in his face.

Nurse. Aaron, what shall I say unto the empress ?

Demet. Advise thee, Aaron, what is to be done.

And we will all subscribe to thy advice :

Save thou the child, so we may all be safe.

Aaron. Then sit we down, and let us all counsel,

My son and I will have the wind of you :

Keep thee ; now talk at pleasure of your safety.

Demet. How many women saw this child of his ?

Aaron. Why, so, brave lords : When we join a league

I am a lamb ; but if you brave the Moor,

The chafed boar, the mountain lioness,

The ocean swells not so as Aaron storms :

But say, again, how many saw the child ?

Nurse. Cornelia the midwife, and myself,

And no one else but the deliver'd empress.

Aaron. The empress, the midwife, and yourself :

Two may keep counsel when the third 's away :

Go to the empress, tell her this I said : [He calls her

Weke, weke—so cries a pig prepar'd to the spit.

Demet. What mean'st thou, Aaron, whenfore dost thou this ?

Aaron. Oh, lord, sir, 't is a deed of policy ;

Shall she live to betray this guilt of ours ?

A long-tongued babbling gossip ! No, lords, no !

And now be it known to you my full intent,

Not far, one Muliteus lives, my countryman ;

His wife but yesternight was brought to bed ;

His child is like to her, fair as you are :

Go pack<sup>b</sup> with him, and give the mother gold,

And tell them both the circumstance of all,

And how by this their child shall be advanc'd,

And be received for the emperor's heir,

* Leer—complexion, hue.    b Pack—convey—advanc'd uted in the place of mine, is tempest whirling in the court;

emperor dandle him for his own.
ards; ye see I have given her physic, [Pointing to the Nurse.
ust needs bestow her funeral;
re near, and you are gallant grooms;
see that you take no longer days,
ie midwife presently to me.
le and the nurse well made away,
e ladies tattle what they please.
on, I see thou wilt not trust the air with crets.
For this care of Tamora,
hers are highly bound to thee.
f DEMET. and CHL., bearing off the Nurse.
Now to the Goths, as swift as swallow flies;
pose this treasure in mine arms,
y to greet the empress' friends;
ou thick-lipp'd slave, I'll bear you hence;
u that puts us to our shifts:
ou feed on berries, and on roots,
a curds and whey, and suck the goat,
in a cave, and bring you up
rior, and command a camp. [Exit.

ACT III.—A Public Place in Rome.

us, MARCUS, Young LUCIUS, and other s, with bows, and TITUS bears the arrows s on them.

ie, Marcus; come, kinsmen; this is the way:
me see your archery;
w home enough, and 't is there straight.
rea reliquit, be you remember'd, Marcus,
she 's fled. Sirs, take you to your tools;
s, shall go sound the ocean, ur nets. Happily, you may find her in the
; ;
as little justice as at land;
us and Sempronius, you must do it;
ust dig with mattock and with spade,
the inmost centre of the earth;
you come to Pluto's region,
deliver him this petition;
is for justice and for aid,
comes from old Andronicus,
sorrows in ungrateful Rome.
well, well, I made thee miserable
I threw the people's suffrages
t thus doth tyrannize o'er me.
gone, and pray be careful all,
ou not a man-of-war unsearch'd;
emperor may have shipp'd her hence;
n, then we may go pipe for justice.
Publius, is not this a heavy case,
oble uncle thus distract?
efore, my lords, it highly us concerns,
night t' attend him carefully;
i humour kindly as we may,
get some careful remedy.
nsmen, his sorrows are past remedy.
e Goths, and with revengeful war on Rome for this ingratitude, nce on the traitor Saturnine.
ins, how now? how now, my masters?
you met with her?
my good lord; but Pluto sends you word, ave revenge from hell you shall:
ustice she is so employ'd,
rith Jove in heaven, or somewhere else,
nce you must needs stay a time.
oth me wrong to feed me with delays.
o the burning lake below,

And pull her out of Acheron by the heels.
Marcus, we are but shrubs; no cedars we,
No big-bon'd men, fram'd of the Cyclops' size;
But metal, Marcus, steel to the very back,
Yet wrung with wrongs more than our backs can bear:
And sith there is no justice in earth nor hell,
We will solicit heaven, and move the gods,
To send down justice for to wreak our wrongs.
Come to this gear; you are a good archer, Marcus.
[He gives them the arrows.

Ad Jovem, that 's for you; here, ad Apollonem:

Ad Martem, that 's for myself;

Here, boy, to Pallas; here, to Mercury:

To Saturn, Caius, not to Saturnine,

You were as good to shoot against the wind.

To it, boy: Marcus, loose when I bid:

Of my word, I have written to effect,

There 's not a god left unsolicited.

Marc. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the court:
We will afflict the emperor in his pride.

Tit. Now, masters, draw. Oh, well said, Lucius!

[They shoot.

Good boy, in Virgo's lap; give it Pallas.

Marc. My lord, I aim a mile beyond the moon;

Your letter is with Jupiter by this.

Tit. Ha, ha! Publius, Publius, what hast thou done?

See, see, thou hast shot off one of Taurus' horns.

Marc. This was the sport, my lord: when Publius shot,

The Bull, being gall'd, gave Aries such a knock,

That down fell both the Ram's horns in the court,

And who should find them but the empress' villain:

She laugh'd, and told the Moor he should not choose

But give them to his master for a present.

Tit. Why, there it goes: God give your lordship joy.

Enter Clown, with a basket, and two pigeons in it.

Tit. News, news from heaven! Marcus, the post is
come.

Sirrah, what tidings? have you any letters?

Shall I have justice? what says Jupiter?

Clown. Ho! the gibbet-maker? he says that he hath taken them down again, for the man must not be hanged till the next week.

Tit. But what says Jupiter, I ask thee?

Clown. Alas, sir, I know not Jupiter:

I never drank with him in all my life.

Tit. Why, villain, art not thou the carrier?

Clown. Ay, of my pigeons, sir; nothing else.

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heaven?

Clown. From heaven? alas, sir, I never came there.

God forbid I should be so bold to press to heaven in my young days! Why, I am going with my pigeons to the tribunal Plebs, to take up a matter of brawl betwixt my uncle and one of the imperial's men.

Marc. Why, sir, that is as fit as can be to serve for your oration; and let him deliver the pigeons to the emperor from you.

Tit. Tell me, can you deliver an oration to the emperor with a grace?

Clown. Nay, truly, sir; I could never say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah, come hither; make no more ado,

But give your pigeons to the emperor:

By me thou shalt have justice at his hands.

Hold, hold; meanwhile, here 's money for thy charges.

Give me pen and ink.

Sirrah, can you with a grace deliver a supplication?

Clown. Ay, sir.

Tit. Then here is a supplication for you. And when you come to him, at the first approach you must kneel;
then kiss his foot; then deliver up your pigeons; and then look for your reward. I'll be at hand, sir; see you do it bravely.

Clown. I warrant you, sir, let me alone.

Tit. Sirrah, hast thou a knife? Come, let me see it.
Here, Marcus, fold it in the oration,
For thou hast made it like an humble suppliant.
And when thou hast given it the emperor,
Knock at my door, and tell me what he says.

Clown. God be with you, sir; I will. [Exit.]

Tit. Come, Marcus, let us go; Publius, follow me. [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Before the Palace.

Enter SATURNINUS, TAMORA, CHIRON, DEMETRIUS, Lords, and others. The Emperor brings the arrows in his hand that Titus shot at him.

Sat. Why, lords, what wrongs are these? was ever seen

An emperor in Rome thus overborne,
Troubled, confronted thus; and, for the extent
Of egal justice, used in such contempt?
My lords, you know, as do the mighty gods,
However these disturbers of our peace
Buzz in the people's ears, there nought hath pass'd,
But even with law, against the wilful sons
Of old Andronicus. And what an if His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits;
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wrecks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness?
And now, he writes to heaven for his redress;
See, here 's to Jove, and this to Mercury,
This to Apollo, this to the god of war:
Sweet scrolls to fly about the streets of Rome!
What 's this, but libelling against the senate,
And blazoning our injustice everywhere?
A goodly humour, is it not, my lords?
As who would say, in Rome no justice were;
But if I live, his feigned extasies
Shall be no shelter to these outrages;
But he and his shall know that Justice lives
In Saturninus' health, whom, if he sleep,
He 'll so awake, as he in fury shall
Cut off the proud'st conspirator that lives.

Tam. My gracious lord, my lovely Saturnine,
Lord of my life, commander of my thoughts,
Calm thee, and bear the faults of Titus' age,
Th' effects of sorrow for his valiant sons,
Whose loss hath pierc'd him deep, and scarr'd his heart;
And rather comfort his distressed plight,
Than prosecute the meanest or the best
For these contempts: Why, thus it shall become High-witted Tamora to glose with all:
But, Titus, I have touch'd thee to the quick,
Thy life-blood out: if Aaron now be wise,
Then is all safe, the anchor 's in the port. [Aside.]

Enter Clown.

How now, good fellow, wouldst thou speak with us?

Clown. Yea, forsooth, an your mistership be imperial.

Tam. Empress I am, but yonder sits the emperor.

Clown. 'T is he. God and saint Stephen give you good den; I have brought you a letter and a couple of pigeons here. [SATURNINUS reads the letter.]

Sat. Go, take him away, and hang him presently.

Clown. How much money must I have?

Tam. Come, sirrah, you must be hang'd.

Clown. Hang'd! by 'r lady then I have brought up a neck to a fair end. [Exit, guarded.]

Sat. Despiteful and intolerable wrongs!

Shall I endure this monstrous villainy?

I know from whence this same device proceeds:
May this be borne, as if his traitorous sons,
That died by law for murder of our brother,
Have by my means been butcher'd wrongfully?
Go, drag the villain hither by the hair;
Nor age, nor honour, shall shape privilege:
For this proud mock I 'll be thy slaughter-man;
Sly frantic wretch, that holpst to make me great,
In hope thyself should govern Rome and me.

Enter ÆMILIUS.

Sat. What news with thee, Æmilius?

Æmil. Arm, my lords; Rome never had more cause
The Goths have gather'd head, and with a power
Of high-resolved men, bent to the spoil,
They hither march amain, under conduct
Of Lucius, son to old Andronicus;
Who threats in course of this revenge to do
As much as ever Coriolanus did.

Sat. Is warlike Lucius general of the Goths?
These tidings nip me; and I hang the head
As flowers with frost, or grass beat down with storms:
Ay, now begin our sorrows to approach:
'T is he the common people love so much!
Myself hath often heard them say,
(When I have walked like a private man.)
That Lucius' banishment was wrongfully,
And they have wish'd that Lucius were their emperor.

Tam. Why should you fear? is not your city strong?

Sat. Ay, but the citizens favour Lucius,
And will revolt from me, to succour him.

Tam. King, be thy thoughts imperious, like thy name.

Is the sun dimm'd, that gnats do fly in it?

The eagle suffers little birds to sing,
And is not careful what they mean thereby,
Knowing that with the shadow of his wing
He can at pleasure stint their melody.

Even so mayst thou the giddy men of Rome!
Then cheer thy spirit: for know, thou emperor,
I will enchant the old Andronicus,
With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous
Than baits to fish, or honey-stalks to sheep;
When as the one is wounded with the bait,
The other rotted with delicious feed.

Sat. But he will not entreat his son for us.

Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will;

For I can smooth and fill his aged ear
With golden promises, that, were his heart
Almost impregnable, his old ears deaf,
Yet should both ear and heart obey my tongue.

Go thou before to be our ambassador; [To ÆMILIUS]
Say that the emperor requests a parley
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting.

Sat. Æmilius, do this message honourably:

And if he stand on hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please his lord.

Æmil. Your bidding shall I do effectually. [Exit ÆMILIUS.]

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus;
And temper him, with all the art I have,
To pluck proud Lucius from the warlike Goths.
And now, sweet emperor, be blithe again,
And bury all thy fear in my devices.

Sat. Then go successantly, and plead to him. [Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Plains near Rome.

h. Enter LUCIUS, with an army of Goths, with drum.

Approved warriors, and my faithful friends, received letters from great Rome,
signify what hate they bear their emperor,
w desirous of our sight they are.
re, great lords, be, as your titles witness,
ous and impatient of your wrongs;
erein Rome hath done you any scaith,
a make treble satisfaction.

Brave slip, sprung from the great Andronicus,
name was once our terror, now our comfort;
high exploits, and honourable deeds,
ful Rome requites with foul contempt,
in us; we'll follow where thou lead'st,
nging bees in hottest summer's day,
their master to the flower'd fields,
aveng'd on cursed Tamora:

he saith, so say we all with him.
I humbly thank him, and I thank you all.

o comes here, led by a lusty Goth?
Goth, leading AARON with his child in his arms.

Renowned Lucius, from our troops I stray'd,
e upon a ruinous monastery,
I earnestly did fix mine eye
Or else I would have wasted building, suddenly a child cry underneath a wall:
unto the noise, when soon I heard ring babe controll'd with this discourse:
e, tawny slave, half me, and half thy dam!
t thy hue bewray whose brat thou art,
ature lent thee but thy mother's look,
thou mightst have been an emperor.
ere the bull and cow are both milk-white,
ever do beget a coal-black calf:
villain, peace!"—even thus he rates the babe,—
I must bear thee to a trusty Goth, when he knows thou art the empress' babe,
old thee dearly for thy mother's sake."
his, my weapon drawn, I rush'd upon him,
'd him suddenly, and brought him hither
as you think needful of the man.

Oh worthy Goth, this is the incarnate devil
abb'd Andronicus of his good hand:
the pearl that pleas'd your empress' eye;
re's the base fruit of his burning lust.
all-eyed slave, whither wouldst thou convey owing image of thy fiendlike face?
lost not speak? what, deaf? not a word?
er, soldiers; hang him on this tree,
y his side his fruit of bastardy.

on. Touch not the boy, he is of royal blood.
Too like the sire for ever being good.
ang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
t to vex the father's soul withal.

on. Get me a ladder! * Lucius, save the child, ear it from me to the empress:
do this, I'll show thee wond'rous things,
ighly may advantage thee to hear;
will not, befall what may befall, eak no more, but vengeance rot you all.

See a ladder. These words belong to the Moor in all editions. He may mean, execute me, but save the child. In modern copies Lucius is made to call for the

Luc. Say on, and if it please me which thou speak'st,
Thy child shall live, and I will see it nourish'd.

Aaron. And if it please thee? why, assure thee, Lucius,

'T will vex thy soul to hear what I shall speak;
For I must talk of murders, rapes, and massacres,
Acts of black night, abominable deeds,
Complots of mischief, treason, villainies
Ruthful to hear, yet piteously perform'd;
And this shall all be buried by my death,
Unless thou swear to me my child shall live.

Luc. Tell on thy mind; I say thy child shall live.
Aaron. Swear that he shall, and then I will begin.

Luc. Who should I swear by? thou believ'st no
God;

That granted, how canst thou believe an oath?

Aaron. What if I do not, as indeed I do not:
Yet, for I know thou art religious,
And hast a thing within thee called conscience,
With twenty popish tricks and ceremonies,
Which I have seen thee careful to observe,
Therefore I urge thy oath; for that I know
An idiot holds his bauble for a God,
And keeps the oath which by that God he swears:
To that I'll urge him: therefore thou shalt vow
By that same God, what God soe'er it be,
That thou ador'st, and hast in reverence,
To save my boy, to nourish, and bring him up;
Or else I will discover nought to thee.

Luc. Even by my God I swear to thee I will.

Aaron. First know thou, I begot him on the empress.

Luc. Oh most insatiate, luxurious woman!

Aaron. Tut, Lucius, this was but a deed of charity,
To that which thou shalt hear of me anon.

'T was her two sons that murder'd Bassianus;
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her,
And cut her hands, and trimm'd her as thou sawest.

Luc. Oh, detestable villain! call'st thou that trimming?

Aaron. Why, she was wash'd, and cut, and trimm'd,
And 't was trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luc. Oh, barbarous, beastly villains, like thyself!

Aaron. Indeed, I was their tutor to instruct them:

That codding spirit had they from their mother,

As sure a card as ever won the set:

That bloody mind I think they learn'd of me,

As true a dog as ever fought at head:

Well, let my deeds be witness of my worth.

I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,

Where the dead corpse of Bassianus lay

I wrote the letter that thy father found,

And hid the gold within the letter mention'd;

Confederate with the queen and her two sons.

And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,

Wherein I had no stroke of mischief in it?

I play'd the cheater for thy father's hand:

And, when I had it, drew myself apart,

And almost broke my heart with extreme laughter.

I pry'd me through the crevice of a wall,

When, for his hand, he had his two sons' heads;

Beheld his tears, and laugh'd so heartily,

That both mine eyes were rainy like to his:

And when I told the empress of this sport,

She swoonded almost at my pleasing tale,

And for my tidings gave me twenty kisses.

Goth. What, canst thou say all this, and never blush

Aaron. Ay, like a black dog, as the saying is.

Luc. Art thou not sorry for these heinous deeds?

Aaron. Ay, that I had not done a thousand mor-

Even now I curse the day,—and yet I think
Few come within the compass of my curse,— Wherein I did not some notorious ill :
As kill a man, or else devise his death ;
Ravish a maid, or plot the way to do it ;
Accuse some innocent, and forswear myself ;
Set deadly enmity between two friends ;
Make poor men's cattle break their necks ;
Set fire on barns and haystacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears :
Oft have I digg'd up dead men from their graves,
And set them upright at their dear friends' door,
Even when their sorrows almost were forgot ;
And on their skins, as on the bark of trees,
Have with my knife carved in Roman letters,
" Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead."
Tut, I have done a thousand dreadful things
As willingly as one would kill a fly ;
And nothing grieves me heartily indeed,
But that I cannot do ten thousand more.

Luc. Bring down the devil, for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging presently.

Aaron. If there be devils, would I were a devil,
To live and burn in everlasting fire,
So I might have your company in hell,
But to torment you with my bitter tongue!

Luc. Sirs, stop his mouth, and let him speak no more.

Enter a Goth.

Goth. My lord, there is a messenger from Rome Desires to be admitted to your presence.

Luc. Let him come near.

Enter ÆMILIUS.

Welcome, Æmilius : What's the news from Rome ?

Æmil. Lord Lucius, and you princes of the Goths,
The Roman emperor greets you all by me ;
And, for he understands you are in arms,
He craves a parley at your father's house,
Willing you to demand your hostages,
And they shall be immediately deliver'd.

Goth. What says our general ?

Luc. Æmilius, let the emperor give his pledges Unto my father, and my uncle Marcus,
And we will come : march away. [Flourish. Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Before Titus's House.

Enter TAMORA, CHIRON, and DEMETRIUS, disguised.

Tam. Thus in this strange and sad habiliment
I will encounter with Andronicus,
And say I am Revenge, sent from below,
To join with him and right his heinous wrongs,
Knock at his study, where they say he keeps,
To ruminat strange plots of dire revenge :
Tell him Revenge is come to join with him,
And work confusion on his enemies.

[They knock, and TITUS opens his Study door.]

Tit. Who doth molest my contemplation ?
Is it your trick to make me ope the door,
That so my sad decrees may fly away,
And all my study be to no effect ?
You are deceiv'd, for what I mean to do
See here in bloody lines I have set down ;
And what is written shall be executed.

Tam. Titus, I am come to talk with thee.

Tit. No, not a word : how can I grace my talk, Wanting a hand to give it action ?
Thou hast the odds of me ; therefore no more.

Tam. If thou didst know me, thou wouldst talk with
me.

Tit. I am not mad ; I know thee well enough.
Witness this wretched stump, witness these crimson lines,

Witness these trenches made by grief and care,
Witness the tiring day and heavy night,
Witness all sorrow, that I know thee well
For our proud empress, mighty Tamora :
Is not thy coming for my other hand ?

Tam. Know thou, sad man, I am not Tamora ;
She is thy enemy, and I thy friend.
I am Revenge, sent from the infernal kingdom,
To ease the gnawing vulture of thy mind,
By working wreakful vengeance on thy foes :
Come down, and welcome me to this world's light ;
Confer with me of murder and of death.

There's not a hollow cave or lurking-place,
No vast obscurity or misty vale,
Where bloody Murder, or detested Rape,
Can couch for fear, but I will find them out ;
And in their ears tell them my dreadful name—
Revenge—which makes the foul offenders quake.

Tit. Art thou Revenge ? and art thou sent to me
To be a torment to mine enemies ?

Tam. I am ; therefore come down, and welcome me.

Tit. Do me some service, ere I come to thee.

Lo, by thy side where Rape, and Murder, stands!
Now give some surance that thou art Revenge ;
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot-wheels ;
And then I'll come and be thy waggoner,
And whirl along with thee about the globes.
Provide thee two proper palfreys, as black as jet,
To hale thy vengeful waggon swift away,
And find out murderers in their guilty caves.
And when thy car is loaden with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the waggon-wheel
Trot like a servile footman all day long,
Even from Hyperion's rising in the east
Until his very downfall in the sea.

And, day by day, I'll do this heavy task,
So thou destroy Rapine and Murder there.

Tam. These are my ministers, and come with me.

Tit. Are they thy ministers ? what are they call'd ?

Tam. Rape and Murder ; therefore called so,
'Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good lord, how like the empress' sons they are,
And you the empress ! but we worldly men
Have miserable, mad, mistaking eyes.

Oh, sweet Revenge, now do I come to thee,
And, if one arm's embracement will content thee,
I will embrace thee in it by-and-by.

[TITUS closes his door.]

Tam. This closing with him fits his lunacy.
Whate'er I forge to feed his brain-sick fits,
Do you uphold, and maintain in your speeches ;
For now he firmly takes me for Revenge,
And, being credulous in this mad thought,
I'll make him send for Lucius, his son ;
And, whilst I at a banquet hold him sure,
I'll find some cunning practice out of hand
To scatter and disperse the giddy Goths,
Or, at the least, make them his enemies ;
See, here he comes, and I must ply my theme.

Enter TITUS.

Tit. Long have I been forlorn, and all for thee !
Welcome, dread fury, to my woful house ;
Rapine, and Murder, you are welcome too.
How like the empress and her sons you are !
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moor !
Could not all hell afford you such a devil ?
For well I wot the empress never wags
But in her company there is a Moor ;
And, would you represent our queen aright,
It were convenient you had such a devil !
But welcome as you are : What shall we do ?

Tam. What wouldst thou have us do, Andronicus ?

Demet. Show me a murderer ; I'll deal with him

Show me a villain that hath done a rape, am sent to be reveng'd on him.
 t. Show me a thousand, that have done thee wrong, will be revenged on them all.
 Look round about the wicked streets of Rome,
 hen thou find'st a man that 's like thyself,
 Murder, stab him; he 's a murderer.
 u with him; and when it is thy hap
 l another that is like to thee,
 Rapine, stab him; he is a ravisher.
 u with them; and in the emperor's court is a queen attended by a Moor;
 nayst thou know her by thy own proportion,
 and down she doth resemble thee.
 thee do on them some violent death:
 ave been violent to me and mine.
 e. Well hast thou lesson'd us; this shall we do.
 uld it please thee, good Andronicus,
 d for Lucius, thy thrice-valiant son,
 eads towards Rome a band of warlike Goths,
 id him come and banquet at thy house:
 he is here, even at thy solemn feast,
 bring in the empress and her sons,
 peror himself, and all thy foes;
 thy mercy shall they stoop and kneel;
 o them shalt thou ease thy angry heart.
 says Andronicus to this device?

Enter MARCUS.

Marcus, my brother, 't is sad Titus calls.
 ntle Marcus, to thy nephew Lucius:
 halt inquire him out among the Goths.
 m repair to me, and bring with him
 f the chiefest princes of the Goths;
 m encamp his soldiers where they are.
 m the emperor, and the empress too,
 it my house, and he shall feast with them.
 o thou for my love; and so let him,
 regards his aged father's life.
 e. This will I do, and soon return again. [Exit.]
 t. Now will I hence about thy business, ke my ministers along with me.
 Nay, nay; let Rape and Murder stay with me,
 I 'll call my brother back again.
 eave to no revenge but Lucius.
 e. What say you, boys? will you bide with him,
 I go tell my lord the emperor,
 have govern'd our determin'd jest?
 o his humour, smooth and speak him fair,
 rry with him 'till I turn again. [Aside.]
 I know thee all, though they suppose me mad, ill o'erreach them in their own devices:
 of cursed hell-hounds, and their dam. [Aside.]
 et. Madam, depart at pleasure: leave us here.
 e. Farewell, Andronicus; Revenge now goes a complot to betray thy foes. [Exit TAM.]
 I know thou dost; and, sweet Revenge, farewell.
 Tell us, old man, how shall we be employ'd?
 Tut! I have work enough for you to do.
 e, come hither, Caius, and Valentine.

Enter PUBLIUS and others.

What is your will?
 Know you these two?
 The empress' sons, I take them, Chiron, Demetrius.
 Fie, Publius, fie; thou art too much deceiv'd:
 e is Murder, Rape is the other's name;
 erefore bind them, gentle Publius:
 and Valentine, lay hands on them.
 ve you heard me wish for such an hour,
 ow I find it; therefore bind them sure,
 op their mouths if they begin to cry.
 TIT. PUB., &c. lay hold on CHIRON and DEMETRIUS.

Chiron. Villains, forbear! we are the empress' sons.

Pub. And therefore do we what we are commanded.
 Stop close their mouths; let them not speak a word;
 Is he sure bound? look that you bind them fast.*

Enter TITUS ANDRONICUS with a knife, and LAVINIA with a basin.

Tit. Come, come, Lavinia; look, thy foes are bound:
 Sirs, stop their mouths; let them not speak to me,
 But let them hear what fearful words I utter.
 Oh, villains, Chiron and Demetrius!
 Here stands the spring whom you have stain'd with mud;
 This goodly summer with your winter mix'd.
 You kill'd her husband; and for that vild fault
 Two of her brothers were condemn'd to death,
 My hand cut off, and made a merry jest;
 Both her sweet hands, her tongue, and that more dear
 Than hands or tongue, her spotless chastity,
 Inhuman traitors, you constrain'd and forc'd.
 What would you say if I should let you speak?
 Villains, for shame you could not beg for grace.
 Hark, wretches, how I mean to martyr you.
 This one hand yet is left to cut your throats,
 Whilst that Lavinia 'tween her stumps doth hold
 The basin that receives your guilty blood.
 You know your mother means to feast with me;
 And calls herself Revenge, and thinks me mad.
 Hark, villains! I will grind your bones to dust,
 And with your blood and it I 'll make a paste,
 And of the paste a coffin<sup>b</sup> I will rear,
 And make two pasties of your shameful heads,
 And bid that strumpet, your unhallow'd dam,
 Like to the earth, swallow her own increase.
 This is the feast that I have bid her to,
 And this the banquet she shall surfeit on:
 For worse than Philomel you used my daughter;
 And worse than Progné I will be reveng'd.
 And now prepare your throats: Lavinia, come,
 Receive the blood; and when that they are dead,
 Let me go grind their bones to powder small,
 And with this hateful liquor temper it,
 And in that paste let their vile heads be bak'd.
 Come, come, be every one officious
 To make this banquet, which I wish may prove
 More stern and bloody than the centaur's feast.

[He cuts their throats.]
 So; now bring them in, for I 'll play the cook,
 And see them ready against their mother comes.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Titus's House. A Pavilion.

Enter LUCIUS, MARCUS, and the Goths, with AARON.

Luc. Uncle Marcus, since 't is my father's mind,
 That I repair to Rome, I am content.
 Goth. And ours, with thine; befall what fortune will.
 Luc. Good uncle, take you in this barbarous Moor,
 This ravenous tiger, this accursed devil;
 Let him receive no sustenance, fetter him,
 Till he be brought unto the empress' face,
 For testimony of her foul proceedings:
 And see the ambush of our friends be strong:
 I fear the emperor means no good to us.
 Aaron. Some devil whisper curses in mine ear,
 And prompt me that my tongue may utter forth
 The venomous malice of my swelling heart!
 Luc. Away, inhuman dog, unhallow'd slave!
 Sirs, help our uncle to convey him in.
 The trumpets show the emperor is at hand. [Flourish.]

* There is a stage direction here—Exeunt. They perhaps go within the curtain of the secondary stage, so that the blood-scene may be veiled.

<sup>b</sup> Coffin—the crust of a raised pie.

Sound trumpets. Enter SATURNINUS and TAMORA, with Tribunes and others.

Sat. What, hath the firmament more suns than one?

Luc. What boots it thee to call thyself a sun?

Marc. Rome's emperor, and nephew, break the parole!<sup>a</sup> These quarrels must be quietly debated.

The feast is ready, which the careful Titus

Hath ordained to an honourable end;

For peace, for love, for league, and good to Rome:

Please you, therefore, draw nigh, and take your places.

Sat. Marcus, we will. [Hautboys.]

Enter TITUS, like a cook, placing the meat on the table; LAVINIA, with a veil over her face; Young LUCIUS, and others.

Tit. Welcome, my gracious lord; welcome, dread queen;

Welcome, ye warlike Goths; welcome, Lucius;

And welcome, all; although the cheer be poor,

'T will fill your stomachs; please you eat of it.

Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd, Andronicus?

Tit. Because I would be sure to have all well,

To entertain your highness, and your empress.

Tam. We are beholding to you, good Andronicus.

Tit. An if your highness knew my heart, you were:

My lord the emperor, resolve me this:

Was it well done of rash Virginius,

To slay his daughter with his own right hand,

Because she was enforc'd, stain'd, and deflour'd?

Sat. It was, Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, mighty lord?

Sat. Because the girl should not survive her shame, And by her presence still renew his sorrows.

Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectual;

A pattern, precedent, and lively warrant,

For me, most wretched, to perform the like.

Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee,

And with thy shame thy father's sorrow die.

[He kills her.]

Sat. What hast thou done, unnatural and unkind?

Tit. Kill'd her, for whom my tears have made me blind.

I am as woful as Virginius was,

And have a thousand times more cause than he

To do this outrage; and it is now done.

Sat. What, was she ravish'd? tell, who did the deed?

Tit. Will 't please you eat, will 't please your highness feed?

Tam. Why hast thou slain thine only daughter?

Tit. Not I; 't was Chiron and Demetrius.

They ravish'd her, and cut away her tongue,

And they, 't was they, that did her all this wrong.

Sat. Go fetch them hither to us presently.

Tit. Why, there they are both, baked in that pie,

Whereof their mother daintily hath fed,

Eating the flesh that she herself hath bred.

'T is true, 't is true, witness my knife's sharp point.

[He stabs TAMORA.]

Sat. Die, frantic wretch, for this accursed deed!

[He kills TITUS.]

Luc. Can the son's eye behold his father bleed?

There 's need for meed; death for a deadly deed.

[He kills SATURNINUS. The people disperse in terror.]

Marc. You sad-fac'd men, people and sons of Rome,

By uproars sever'd, like a flight of fowl

Scatter'd by winds and high tempestuous gusts,

Oh, let me teach you how to knit again

This scatter'd corn into one mutual sheaf,

These broken limbs again into one body—

Rom. Lord. Lest<sup>a</sup> Rome herself be bane unto herself;

And she whom mighty kingdoms curtsy to,

<sup>a</sup> Begin the parley.

<sup>b</sup> Lest. The originals, let.

Like a forlorn and desperate castaway,
Do shameful execution on herself.

But if my frosty signs and chaps of age,

Grave witnesses of true experience,

Cannot induce you to attend my words,

Speak, Rome's dear friend, [To Lucius] as my great ancestor,

When with his solemn tongue he did discourse

To love-sick Dido's sad attending ear,

The story of that baleful burning night,

When subtle Greeks surpris'd king Priam's Troy,

Tell us what Sinon hath bewitch'd our ears,

Or who hath brought the fatal engine in

That gives our Troy, our Rome, the civil wound.

My heart is not compact of flint nor steel,

Nor can I utter all our bitter grief;

But floods of tears will drown my oratory,

And break my very utterance, even in the time

When it should move you to attend me most,

Lending your kind commiseration.

Here is a captain; let him tell the tale;

Your hearts will throb and weep to hear him speak.

Luc. Then, noble auditory, be it known to you,

That cursed Chiron and Demetrius

Were they that murdered our emperor's brother,

And they it was that ravished our sister:

For their fell faults our brothers were beheaded;

Our father's tears despis'd, and basely cozen'd

Of that true hand that fought Rome's quarrel out,

And sent her enemies unto the grave:

Lastly, myself, unkindly banished;

The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,

To beg relief amongst Rome's enemies,

Who drown'd their enmity in my true tears,

And op'd their arms to embrace me as a friend;

And I am the turned forth, be it known to you,

That have preserv'd her welfare in my blood,

And from her bosom took the enemy's point,

Sheathing the steel in my adventurous body.

Alas, you know I am no vaunter, I,

My scars can witness, dumb although they are,

That my report is just and full of truth.

But soft, methinks I do digress too much,

Citing my worthless praise. Oh, pardon me,

For, when no friends are by, men praise themselves.

Marc. Now is my turn to speak: behold this child

Of this was Tamora delivered,

The issue of an irreligious Moor,

Chief architect and plotter of these woes.

The villain is alive in Titus' house,

Damn'd as he is, to witness this is true.

Now judge what cause had Titus to revenge

These wrongs, unspeakable past patience,

Or more than any living man could bear.

Now you have heard the truth, what say you, Romans?

Have we done aught amiss? show us wherein,

And, from the place where you behold us now,

The poor remainder of Andronicus

Will hand in hand all headlong cast us down,

And on the ragged stones beat forth our brains,

And make a mutual closure of our house:

Speak, Romans, speak; and if you say we shall,

Lo, hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Emil. Come, come, thou reverend man of Rome,

And bring our emperor gently in thy hand,—

Lucius, our emperor; for well I know,

The common voice do cry it shall be so.

Marc. Lucius, all hail, Rome's royal emperor!

Go, go, into old Titus' sorrowful house,

<sup>a</sup> This line, and the concluding line of Marcus's speech, are given to the people—"Romans"—by all the modern editors against the authority of all the original copies. Marcus, being tribune of the people, and speaks authoritatively what the common voice has required.

her hale that misbelieving Moor, djudg'd some direful slaughtering death,
 shment for his most wicked life.

[To Attendants.

all hail to Rome's gracious governor!
 Thanks, gentle Romans! May I govern so, Rome's harms, and wipe away her woe:
 tle people, give me aim awhile,
 ure puts me to a heavy task!
 ll aloof; but, uncle, draw you near,
 obsequious tears upon this trunk.
 e this warm kiss on thy pale cold lips,

[Kisses Titus.

orrowful drops upon thy blood-stain'd face,
 t true duties of thy noble son.
 : Tear for tear, and loving kiss for kiss,
 ther Marcus tenders on thy lips.
 e the sum of these that I should pay as and infinite, yet would I pay them.
 Come hither, boy; come, come, and learn of us
 t in showers. Thy grandsire lov'd thee well;
 . time he danc'd thee on his knee,
 ee asleep, his loving breast thy pillow;
 : matter hath he told to thee,
 d agreeing with thine infancy;
 respect, then, like a loving child,
 t some small drops from thy tender spring,
 : kind nature doth require it so:
 should associate friends in grief and woe.
 n farewell, commit him to the grave,
 that kindness and take leave of him.

O, grandsire, grandsire, even with all my heart
 I were dead, so you did live again!

O, Lord, I cannot speak to him for weeping;
 My tears will choke me if I ope my mouth.

Enter Attendants, with AARON.

Roman. You sad Andronici, have done with woes!
 Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
 That hath been breeder of these dire events.

Luc. Set him breast-deep in earth, and furnish him:
 There let him stand, and rave, and cry for food:
 If any one relieves or pities him,
 For the offence he dies; this is our doom.
 Some stay to see him fasten'd in the earth.

Aaron. Ah! why should wrath be mute, and fury dumb?

I am no baby, I, that with base prayers
 I should repent the evils I have done:
 Ten thousand worse than ever yet I did
 Would I perform, if I might have my will:
 If ous good deed in all my life I did,
 I do repent it from my very soul.

Luc. Some loving friends convey the emperor hence
 And give him burial in his father's grave.
 My father and Lavinia shall forthwith
 Be closed in our household's monument:
 As for that heinous tiger, Tamora,
 No fun'ral rite, nor man in mournful weeds,
 No mournful bell shall ring her burial;
 But throw her forth to beasts and birds of prey:
 Her life was beastly and devoid of pity,
 And, being so, shall have like want of pity.
 See justice done on Aaron, that damn'd Moor,
 By whom our heavy haps had their beginning:
 Then, afterwards, to order well the state,
 That like events may ne'er it ruin.

[Reent

W. HARTY SC.

W. T. COOPER SC.

THE POEM

OF
William Shakespeare

LONDON

C. KNIGHT & CO

1841.

INTRODUCTORY NOTICE TO THE POEMS.*

first heir of my invention prove deformed, I'm sorry it had so noble a godfather." These words which, in relation to the 'Venus and Adonis' addressed, in 1593, to the Earl of Southampton. Are we to accept them literally? Was it 'Venus and Adonis' the first production of Shakespeare? Or did he put out of his view those performances which he had then unquestioned, in deference to the critical opinions of the age, as works not belonging to "invented plays" but to the "literal" regard the 'Venus and Adonis' as the production of a very young man, improved, perhaps, in the interval between its first composition and publication, but distinguished by peculiarities belonging to the wild luxuriance of youthful power, never, however, as few besides Shakespeare have equalled.

The thinker and eloquent writer, Julius Charles Hare describes "the spirit of self-sacrifice," as the "poetry" of Shakespeare:—"The flight of the imagination is manifested by its departure from the petty creek, where the accident moored it, into the wide ocean of being,—it goes abroad into the world around, passing into whatever it meets with, animating it, and becoming one with it. This complete union and identification of the poet with his poem,—this suppression of his own individual consciousness, with its narrowness of view and pettiness of feeling,—is what we admire in the masters of that which for this reason we justly call poetry, as representing that which is symbolical, universal, not that which is merely accidental and peculiar. This gives them that majestic grandeur which still breathes upon us from the statues of the gods. This invests their works with that lucid and ethereal atmosphere wherein every form stands out with definiteness and distinctness, only beautified and idealized. This has delivered them from the casualties of time and space, and has raised them up like stars into the pure firmament of heaven, so that they do not shine on one spot alone, nor are they earthly flowers, but journey on from clime to clime, adding the light of beauty on generation after generation. The same quality, amounting to a total extinction of his own selfish being, so that his spirit became the mighty organ through which Nature gave forth the full diapason of her notes, is what we find in our own great dramatist, and is the ground-work of all his other powers: for it is only when purged of selfishness that the intellect becomes fitted for receiving the inspirations of genius."<sup>o</sup>

What Mr. Hare so justly considers as the great moving principle of "classical poetry,"—what he further notes as the pre-eminent characteristic of "our own great dramatist,"—is abundantly found in that great dramatist's earliest work. Coleridge was the first to point out this pervading quality in the 'Venus and Adonis'; and he has done this so admirably, that it would be profanation were we to attempt to elucidate the point in any other than his own words:—

"It is throughout as if a superior spirit, more intuitive, more intimately conscious, even than the characters themselves, not only of every outward look and act, but of the flux and reflux of the mind in all its subtlest thoughts and feelings, were placing the whole before our view; himself meanwhile unparticipating in the passions, and actuated only by that pleasurable excitement which had resulted from the energetic fervour of his own spirit in so vividly exhibiting what it had so accurately and profoundly contemplated. I think I should have conjectured from these poems, that even then the great instinct which impelled the poet to the drama was secretly working in him, prompting him by a series and never-broken chain of imagery, always vivid, and, because unbroken, often minute,—by the highest effort of the picturesque in words of which words are capable, higher perhaps than was ever realised by any other poet, even Dante not excepted,—to provide a substitute for that visual language, that constant intervention and running comment by tone, look, and gesture, which in his dramatic works he was entitled to expect from the players. His Venus and Adonis seem at once the characters themselves, and the whole representation of those characters by the most consummate actors. You seem to be told nothing, but to see and hear everything. Hence it is, that, from the perpetual activity of attention required on the part of the reader,—from the rapid flow, the quick change, and the playful nature of the thoughts and images,—and, above all, from the alienation, and, if I may hazard such an expression, the utter aloofness of the poet's own feelings from those of which he is at once the painter and the analyst,—that though the very subject cannot but detract from the pleasure of a delicate mind, yet never was poem less dangerous on a moral account."†

Coleridge, in the preceding chapter of his 'Literary

* 'The Victory of Faith; and other Sermons. By Julius Charles Hare, M.A. 1840. P. 277.

† 'Biographia Literaria,' 1817, vol. ii. p. 15.

The present edition of the Poems of Shakespeare comprises the VENUS AND ADONIS, THE RAPE OF LUCRECE, THE PASSIONATE LOVE'S COMPLAINT, and the SONNETS. THE SONGS from the Plays of Shakespeare are necessarily excluded from this edition, being sufficient for the reader to make a reference to the Dramas to which they respectively belong.

Life,' says, "During the first year that Mr. Wordsworth and I were neighbours, our conversations turned frequently on the two cardinal points of poetry—the power of exciting the sympathy of the reader by a faithful adherence to the truth of nature, and the power of giving the interest of novelty by the modifying colours of imagination." In Coleridge's 'Literary Remains' the 'Venus and Adonis' is cited as furnishing a signal example of "that affectionate love of nature and natural objects, without which no man could have observed so steadily, or painted so truly and passionately, the very minutest beauties of the external world." The description of the hare-hunt is there given at length as a specimen of this power. A remarkable proof of the completeness as well as accuracy of Shakspeare's description lately presented itself to our mind, in running through a little volume, full of talent, published in 1825—'Essays and Sketches of Character, by the late Richard Ayton, Esq.' There is a paper on hunting, and especially on hare-hunting. He says—"I am not one of the perfect fox-hunters of these realms; but having been in the way of late of seeing a good deal of various modes of hunting, I would, for the benefit of the uninitiated, set down the results of my observations." In this matter he writes with a perfect unconsciousness that he is describing what any one has described before. But as accurate an observer And been before him:—

"She (the hare) generally returns to the seat from which she was put up, running, as all the world knows, in a circle, or something sometimes like it, we had better say, that we may keep on good terms with the mathematical. At starting, she tears away at her utmost speed for a mile or more, and distances the dogs half-way: she then returns, diverging a little to the right or left, that she may not run into the mouths of her enemies—a necessity which accounts for what we call the circularity of her course. Her flight from home is direct and precipitate; but on her way back, when she has gained a little time for consideration and stratagem, she describes a curious labyrinth of short turnings and windings, as if to perplex the dogs by the intricacy of her track."

Compare this with Shakspeare:—

"And when thou hast on foot the parblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch, to overshoot his troubles,
How he outruns the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses, with a thousand doubles:
The many musits through the which he goes
Are like a labyrinth to amaze his foes."

Mr. Ayton thus goes on:—

"The hounds, whom we left in full cry, continue their music without remission as long as they are faithful to the scent; as a summons, it should seem, like the seaman's cry, to pull together, or keep together, and it is a certain proof to themselves and their followers that they are in the right way. On the instant that they are 'at fault,' or lose the scent, they are silent. * * * The weather, in its impression on the scent, is the great father of 'faults;' but they may arise from other accidents, even when the day is in every respect favourable. The intervention of ploughed land, on which the scent on cools or evaporates, is at least perilous; but sheep-stains, recently left by a flock, are fatal: they the scent irrecoverably—making a gap, as it were, the clue, in which the dogs have not even a faint their guidance."

Compare Shakspeare again:—

"Sometime he runs among a flock of sheep,
To make the cunning hounds mistake their call,
And sometime where earth-delving cranes keep,
To stop the loud pursuers in their yell;
And sometime sorteth with a herd of deer:
Danger deviseth shifts; wit waits on fear."

"For there his smell with others being mingled,
The hot scent-snuffing hounds are driven to stand
Ceasing their clamorous cry till they have singly
With much ado the cold fault clearly out;
Then do they spend their mouths: Echo replies
As if another chase were in the skies."

One more extract from Mr. Ayton:—

"Suppose then, after the usual rounds, that the hare at last (a sorry mark for so many foxes beleaguered—looking dark and draggled—and I heavily along; then stopping to listen—again to on a little—and again stopping; and at every such every pause, hearing the death-cry grow near louder."

One more comparison, and we have exhausted Shakspeare's description:—

"By this, poor Wat, far off upon a hill, Stands on his hinder legs with listening ear,
To hearken if his foes pursue him still;
Amid their loud alarms he doth hear;
And now his grief may be compared well
To one sore sick that hears the passing-bell."

"Then shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch
Turn and return, indenting with the way:
Each ev'ous briar his weary legs doth scratch,
Each shadow makes him stop, each murmur
For misery is trodden on by many,
And being low never reliev'd by any."

Here, then, be it observed, are not only the subjects, the same accidents, the same movement, in description, but the very words employed to convey scene to the mind are often the same in each. It is be easy to say that Mr. Ayton copied Shakspeare; believe he did not. There is a sturdy ingenueness in his writings which would have led him to notice 'Venus and Adonis' if he had had it in his eye. Shakspeare and he had each looked minutely and, tically upon the same scene; and the wonder is that Shakspeare was an accurate describer, but that him the accurate is so thoroughly fused with the poet that it is one and the same life.

The celebrated description of the corner in 'Venus and Adonis' is another remarkable instance of the accuracy of the young Shakspeare's observation—the most experienced dealer ever knew the position of a horse better. The whole poem indeed is full of such that the circumstances by which the writer was rounded, in a country district, had entered deeply his mind, and were reproduced in the poetical form. The bird "tangled in a net"—the "dive-dagger" passed through a wave"—the "blue-veined violet"—

"Red morn, that ever yet beholds Wreck to the seaman, tempest to the field"—

the fisher that forbears the "ungrown fry"—the sheep gone to fold"—the caterpillars feeding on "the tender leaves"—and, not to weary with examples, that exquisite image,

* Look how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
So glides he in the night from Venus' eye"—

All these bespeak a poet who had formed himself upon nature, and not upon books. To understand the value, as well as the rarity of this quality in Shakspeare, we could open any contemporary poem. Take Marlowe's Hero and Leander for example. We read line after line, beautiful, gorgeous, running over with a satiating luxuriousness; but we look in vain for a single familiar page. Shakspeare describes what he has seen, throwing over the real the delicious tint of his own imagination. Marlowe looks at Nature herself very rarely; but he knows all the conventional images by which the real is supposed to be elevated into the poetical. His most beautiful things are thus but copies of copies. The mode in which each poet describes the morning will illustrate our meaning:—

"Lo! here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,
And wakes the morning, from whose silver breast
The sun ariseth in his majesty;
Who doth the world so gloriously behold,
The cedar-tops and hills seem barnish'd gold."

We feel that this is true. Compare—

"By this Apollo's golden harp began To sound forth music to the ocean;
Which watchful Hesperus no sooner heard
But he the day bright-bearing car prepar'd,
And ran before, as harbinger of light,
And with his flaming beams mock'd ugly Night,
Till she, o'ercome with anguish, shame, and rage,
Dang'd down to hell her loathsome carriage."

We are taught that this is classical.

Coleridge has observed that, "in the Venus and Adonis, the first and most obvious excellence is the perfect sweetness of the versification; its adaptation to the object; and the power displayed in varying the march of the words without passing into a loftier and more majestic rhythm than was demanded by the thoughts, or admitted by the propriety of preserving a sense of melody predominant."* This self-controlling power "varying the march of the words without passing to a loftier and more majestic rhythm" is perhaps one of the most signal instances of Shakspeare's consummate mastery of his art, even as a very young man. He who, at the proper season, knew how to strike the grandest music within the compass of our own powerful and nervous language, in his early productions breathes out his thoughts

"To the Dorian mood
Of flutes and soft recorder."

the sustained sweetness of the versification is never varying; and yet there are no violent contrasts, no sudden elevations: all is equable in its infinite variety. In his early comedies are full of the same rare beauty. In Love's Labour's Lost—The Comedy of Errors—A Midsummer Night's Dream—we have verses of alternate rhymes formed upon the same model as those of the Venus and Adonis, and producing the same feeling of placid delight by their exquisite harmony. The same principles on which he built the versification of the Venus and Adonis exhibited to him the grace which these elegiac harmonies would impart to the scenes of repose in the progress of a dramatic action.

We proceed to the Lucrece. Of that poem the date of the composition is fixed as accurately as we can desire. In the dedication to the Venus and Adonis the poet says—"If your honour seem but pleased I account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours till I have honoured you with some graver labour." In 1594, a year after the Venus and Adonis, Lucrece was published, and was dedicated to Lord Southampton. This, then, was undoubtedly the "graver labour;" this was the produce of the "idle hours" of 1593. Shakspeare was then nearly thirty years of age—the period at which it is held by some he first began to produce anything original for the stage. The poet unquestionably intended the "graver labour" for a higher effort than had produced the "first heir" of his invention. He describes the Venus and Adonis as "unpolished lines"—lines thrown off with youthful luxuriousness and rapidity. The verses of the Lucrece are "untutored lines"—lines formed upon no established model. There is to our mind the difference of eight or even ten years in the aspect of these poems—a difference as manifest as that which exists between Love's Labour's Lost and Romeo and Juliet. Coleridge has marked the great distinction between the one poem and the other:—

"The Venus and Adonis did not perhaps allow the display of the deeper passions. But the story of Lucrece seems to favour, and even demand, their intensest workings. And yet we find in Shakspeare's management of the tale neither pathos nor any other dramatic quality. There is the same minute and faithful imagery as in the former poem, in the same vivid colours, inspirited by the same impetuous vigour of thought, and diverging and contracting with the same activity of the assimilative and of the modifying faculties; and with a yet larger display, a yet wider range of knowledge and reflection: and, lastly, with the same perfect dominion, often domination, over the whole world of language."<sup>2</sup>

It is in this paragraph that Coleridge has marked the difference—which a critic of the very highest order could alone have pointed out—between the power which Shakspeare's mind possessed of going out of itself in a narrative poem, and the dramatic power. The same mighty, and to most unattainable, power, of utterly subduing the self-conscious to the universal, was essential to the highest excellence of both species of composition,—the poem and the drama. But the exercise of that power was essentially different in each. Coleridge, in another place, says, "in his very first production he projected his mind out of his own particular being, and felt, and made others feel, on subjects no way connected with himself except by force of contemplation, and that sublime faculty by which a great mind becomes that on which it meditates.* But this "sublime faculty" went greatly farther when it became dramatic. In the narrative poems of an ordinary man we perpetually see the narrator. Coleridge, in a passage previously quoted, has shown the essential superiority of Shakspeare's narrative poems, where the whole is placed before our view, the poet unparticipating in the passions. There is a remarkable example of how strictly Shakspeare adhered to this principle in his beautiful poem of 'A Lover's Complaint.' There the poet is actually present to the scene:—

* Biographia Literaria, vol. ii. p. 14.

<sup>2</sup> Biographia Literaria, vol. ii. p. 21.

"From off a hill whose concave womb re-worded
A painful story from a sistering vale,
My spirits to attend this double voice accorred,
And down I laid to list the sad-tun'd tale."

But not one word of comment does he offer upon the revelations of the "fickle maid full pale." The dramatic power, however, as we have said, is many steps beyond this. It dispenses with narrative altogether. It renders a complicated story, or stories, one in the action. It makes the characters reveal themselves, sometimes by a word. It trusts for everything to the capacity of an audience to appreciate the greatest subtilities, and the nicest shades of passion, through the action. It is the very reverse of the oratorical power, which repeats and explains. And how is it able to effect this prodigious mastery over the senses and the understanding? By raising the mind of the spectator, or reader, into such a state of poetical excitement as corresponds in some degree to the excitement of the poet, and thus clears away the mists of our ordinary vision, and irradiates the whole complex moral world in which we for a time live, and move, and have our being, with the brightness of his own intellectual sunlight. Now, it appears to us that, although the 'Venus and Adonis,' and the 'Lucrece,' do not pretend to be the creations of this wonderful power—their forms did not demand its complete exercise—they could not have been produced by a man who did not possess the power, and had assiduously cultivated it in its own proper field. In the second poem, more especially, do we think the power has reached a higher development, indicating itself in "a yet wider range of knowledge and reflection."

Malone says, "I have observed that Painter has inserted the story of Lucrece in the first volume of his 'Palace of Pleasure,' 1567, on which I make no doubt our author formed his poem." Be it so. The story of Lucrece in Painter's novel occupies four pages. The first page describes the circumstances that preceded the unholy visit of Tarquin to Lucrece; nearly the whole of the two last pages detail the events that followed the death of Lucrece. A page and a half at most is given to the tragedy. This is proper enough in a narrative, whose business it is to make all the circumstances intelligible. But the narrative poet, who was also thoroughly master of the dramatic power, concentrates all the interest upon the main circumstances of the story. He places the scene of those circumstances before our eyes at the very opening:—

* 'Literary Remains,' vol. ii. p. 54.

"From the besieged Ardea all in post,
Borne by the trustless wings of false deities,
Lust-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
And to Collatium bears," &c.

The preceding circumstances which impel this journey are then rapidly told. Again, after the crowning action of the tragedy, the poet has done. He tells the consequences of it with a brevity and simplicity indicating the most consummate art:

"When they had sworn to this advised doom,
They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence;
To show her bleeding body thorough Rome,
And so to publish Tarquin's foul offence:
Which being done with speedy diligence,
The Romans plausibly did give consent
To Tarquin's everlasting banishment."

He has thus cleared away all the encumbrances to the progress of the main action. He would have done the same had he made Lucrece the subject of a drama. But he has to tell his painful story and to tell it all: not to exhibit a portion of it, as he would have done had he chosen the subject for a tragedy. The consummate delicacy with which he has accomplished this is beyond all praise, perhaps above all imitation. He puts forth his strength on the accessories of the main incident. He delights to make the chief actors analyse their own thoughts,—reflect, explain, expostulate. All this is essentially undramatic, and he meant it to be so. But then, what pictures does he paint of the progress of the action, which none but a great dramatic poet, who had visions of future Macbeths and Othellos before him, could have painted! Look, for example, at that magnificent scene, when

"No comfortable star did lend his light," of Tarquin leaping from his bed, and, softly smiling his falchion on a flint, lighting a torch

"Which must be lode-star to his lustful eye."

Look, again, at the exquisite domestic incident which tells of the quiet and gentle occupation of his devoted victim:—

"By the light he spies
Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks;
He takes it from the rushes where it lies."

The hand to which that glove belongs is described in the very perfection of poetry:—

"Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet; whose perfect white
Show'd like an April daisy on the grass."

In the chamber of innocence Tarquin is painted with terrific grandeur, which is overpowering by the form of contrast:—

"This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
Coucheth the fowl below with his wings' shade."

The complaint of Lucrece after Tarquin has departed was meant to be undramatic. The action advances not. The character develops not itself in the action. But the poet makes his heroine bewail her fate in every variety of lament that his boundless command of imagery could furnish. The letter to Collatine is written:—a letter of the most touching simplicity:—

"Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greeteth thee,
Health to thy person! Next vouchsafe to attend
(If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see) sent speed to come and visit me :

 commend me from our house in grief ;
 these are tedious, though my words are brief."

tion languishes, and again Lucrece survive to her grief. The intending, made for Priam's Troy "

most elaborate passages of the poem, essentially undramatic mould. But this is but a catastrophe, where, if we mistake not, a passion is put forth which is worthy him who bore the agonies of Lear :—

With a sigh, as if her heart would break,
 she forth Tarquin's name : ' He, he,' she says,
 than ' he ' her poor tongue could not speak ;
 many accents and delays,
 breathings, sobs, and short assays, cries this : ' He, he, fair lords, 't is he,
 who slides this hand to give this wound to me. "

In his concluding remarks upon the ' Venus and ' Lucrece,' says, " We should do justice were we to try them by a comparison of modern and polished productions, or the best idea of poetical excellence." This is the year 1780—the period which received the " polished productions " of Hayley and Johnson, and founded its " idea of poetical excellence standard which, secure in its convention, might depart as far as possible from simitude, to give us words without thought, sense without music. It would be injustice to Shakspeare to try the ' Venus and Adonis,' by such a standard of " poetical excellence we have outlived that period. By way of Shakspeare, Malone adds, " that few above the age in which they live." says,
 " the poems of ' Venus and Adonis ' and ' Lucrece,' whatever opinion may be formed of them, were certainly much admired in their lifetime." This is consolatory. In their lifetime there were a few men that the world might somewhat qualified to establish an ethical excellence " — Spenser, Drayton, Milton, Chapman, for example. These were included in Malone's golden age of " more polished productions ;"—but let that pass.
 Going back to the opinions of this obsolete
 we venture to think the majority of readers require us to make an apology for Shak-

—thought it necessary to solicit indulgence for ' Venus and Adonis,' and ' Lucrece,' he drew timid breath when he ventured to speak of
 " I do not feel any great propensity to be the champion of these compositions.
 It appears to me that they have been sometimes, I think it incumbent on me to do them justice, which they seem entitled." No wonder idly. The great poetical lawgiver of his later than Shakspeare, for he undertook to mend and refine him, and make him fit to be the super-elegant intellects of the days of —had pronounced that the ' Sonnets ' were too bad even for his genius to make tolerable. He, Steevens, who would take up a play of Shakspeare's in the condescending spirit with which a clever tutor takes up a smart boy's verses,—altering a word here, piecing out a line there, commending this thought, shaking his head at this false prosody, and acknowledging upon the whole that the thing is pretty well, seeing how much the lad has yet to learn—he sent forth his decree that nothing less than an act of parliament could compel the reading of Shakspeare's ' Sonnets.' For a long time mankind bowed before the oracle ; and the ' Sonnets ' were not read. Wordsworth has told us something about this :—

" There is extant a small volume of miscellaneous poems in which Shakspeare expresses his feelings in his own person. It is not difficult to conceive that the editor, George Steevens, should have been insensible to the beauties of one portion of that volume, the ' Sonnets ;'
 though there is not a part of the writings of this poet where is found, in an equal compass, a greater number of exquisite feelings felicitously expressed. But, from regard to the critic's own credit, he would not have ventured to talk of an act of parliament not being strong enough to compel the perusal of these, or any production of Shakspeare, if he had not known that the people of England were ignorant of the treasures contained in those little pieces."*

That ignorance has been removed ; and no one has contributed more to its removal, by creating a school of poetry founded upon Truth and Nature, than Wordsworth himself. The critics of the last century have passed away :—

" Poor and Baëlim Forsake their temples dim."

By the operation of what great sustaining principle is it that we have come back to the just appreciation of " the treasures contained in those little pieces " ? The poet-critic will answer :—

" There never has been a period, and perhaps never will be, in which vicious poetry, of some kind or other, has not excited more zealous admiration, and been far more generally read, than good ; but this advantage attends the good, that the individual, as well as the species, survives from age to age : whereas, of the depraved, though the species be immortal, the individual quickly perishes ; the object of present admiration vanishes, being supplanted by some other as easily produced, which, though no better, brings with it at least the irritation of novelty,—with adaptation, more or less skilful, to the changing humours of the majority of those who are most at leisure to regard poetical works when they first solicit their attention. Is it the result of the whole, that, in the opinion of the writer, the judgment of the people is not to be respected ? The thought is most injurious ; and, could the charge be brought against him, he would repel it with indignation. The people have already been justified, and their eulogium pronounced by implication, when it is said, above—that,
 of good poetry, the individual, as well as the species, survives. And how does it survive but through the * Preface to Poetical Works.

people? what preserves it but their intellect and their wisdom?

* Past and future are the wings
On whose support, harmoniously conjoin'd, Moves the great spirit of human knowledge.—MS.

The voice that issues from this spirit is that vox populi which the Deity inspires. Foolish must he be who can mistake for this a local acclamation, or a transitory outcry—transitory though it be for years, local though from a nation! Still more lamentable is his error who can believe that there is anything of divine infallibility in the clamour of that small though loud portion of the community, ever governed by factitious influence, which, under the name of the PUBLIC, passes itself, upon the unthinking, for the PEOPLE.*

It is this perpetual mistake of the public for the people that has led to the belief that there was a period when Shakspeare was neglected. He was always in the heart of the people. There, in that deep, rich soil, have the Sonnets rested during two centuries; and here and there in remote places have the seeds put forth leaves and flowers. All young imaginative minds now rejoice in their hues and their fragrance. But this preference of the fresh and beautiful of poetical life to the post-pueri of the last age must be a regulated love. Those who, seeing the admiration which now prevails for these outpourings of "exquisite feelings felicitously expressed," talk of the 'Sonnets' as equal, if not superior, to the greatest of the poet's mighty dramas, compare things that admit of no comparison. Who would speak in the same breath of the gem of Cupid and Psyche, and the Parthenon? In the 'Sonnets,' exquisite as they are, the poet goes not out of himself (at least in the form of the composition), and he walks, therefore, in a narrow circle of art. In the 'Venus and Adonis,' and the 'Lycidas,' the circle widens. But in the Dramas, the centre is the Human Soul, the circumference the Universe.

* Preface to Poetical Works.

TO

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLEY,

EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON AND BARON OF TITCHFIELD.

HONOURABLE,

Now not how I shall offend in dedicating my unpolished lines to your Lordship, nor how the world will reprove me for choosing so strong a prop to support so weak a burthen: only if your honour seem but to account myself highly praised, and vow to take advantage of all idle hours till I have honoured some graver labour. But if the first heir of my invention prove deformed, I shall be sorry it had so good a father, and never after ear* so barren a land, for fear it yield me still so bad a harvest. I leave it to your honourable survey, and your honour<sup>b</sup> to your heart's content; which I wish may always answer your own and the world's hopeful expectation.

Your Honour's in all duty,

WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

rough.

As a duke is now styled "your grace," so "your honour" was formerly the usual mode of address to noblemen.

VENUS AND ADONIS.

The sun with purple-colour'd face
His last leave of the weeping morn,
'd Adonis hied him to the chase;
Love lov'd, but love he laugh'd to scorn;
Sought Venus makes amain unto him,
And a bold-fac'd suitor 'gins to woo him.

"Fiercer than myself," thus she began,
"Thou chief flower, sweet above compare,
Thou nymphs, more lovely than a man,
Thou and red than doves or roses are;
That made thee, with herself at strife,
At the world hath ending with thy life.

"O, thou wonder, to alight thy steed,
On his proud head to the saddle-bow;
To deign this favour, for thy meed
Thou honey-secrets shalt thou know:
Stand thou near me and sit, where never serpent hisses;
So set I 'll smother thee with kisses;

"Nor cloy thy lips with loath'd satiety Familiar them amid their plenty,
Nor red and pale with fresh variety,
Short as one, one long as twenty:
Thy day will seem an hour but short,
If I be not as such time-beguiling sport."

"He seizeth on his sweating palm,
The essence of pith and livelihood,
Whom in her passion, calls it balm,
To cure his ache, and drench his wound;
So she, with virgin-mildness look'd,
Enrag'd desire doth lend her force,
To pluck him from his horse.

"He, the lusty courser's rein,
With gentle hands, his fair white neck
Thus smother'd in her tender fume,
His appetite, unapt to toy,
That he but hot as coals of glowing fire,
For shame, but frosty in desire.

The studded bridle on a ragged bough
Nimbly she fastens; (O how quick is love!)
The steed is stalled up, and even now
To tie the rider she begins to prove:

Backward she push'd him, as she would be thrust,
And govern'd him in strength, though not in lust.

So soon was she along, as he was down,
Each leaning on their elbows and their hips:
Now doth she stroke his cheek, now doth he frown,
And 'gins to chide, but soon she stops his lips;
And kissing speaks, with lustful language broken,
"If thou wilt chide, thy lips shall never open."

He burns with bashful shame; she with her tears
Doth quench the maiden burning of his cheeks:
Then with her windy sighs, and golden hairs,
To fan and blow them dry again she seeks:
He saith she is immodest, blames her 'miss';
What follows more she murders with a kiss.

Even as an empty eagle, sharp by fast,
Tires<sup>b</sup> with her beak on feathers, flesh, and bone,
Shaking her wings, devouring all in haste,
Till either gorge be stuff'd, or prey be gone;
Even so she kiss'd his brow, his cheek, his chin,
And where she ends she doth anew begin.

Forc'd to content,<sup>c</sup> but never to obey,
Panting he lies, and breatheth in her face:
She feedeth on the steam, as on a prey,
And calls it heavenly moisture, air of grace,
Wishing her cheeks were gardens full of flowers,
So they were dew'd with such distilling showers.

Look how a bird lies tangled in a net,
So fasten'd in her arms Adonis lies;
Pure shame and aw'd resistance made him fret,
Which bred more beauty in his angry eyes:

* Miss—miss, fault.* Tires—tears, prey.* Content—acquiescence.

Rain added to a river that is rank,<sup>a</sup>
Perforce will force it overflow the bank.

Still she entreats, and prettily entreats,
For to a pretty ear she tunes her tale;
Still is he sullen, still he low'rs and frets,
'Twixt crimson shame, and anger ashy pale
Being red, she loves him best; and being white,
Her best is better'd with a more delight.

Look how he can, she cannot choose but love;
And by her fair immortal hand she swears
From his soft bosom never to remove,
Till he take truce with her contending tears,
Which long have rain'd, making her cheeks all wet;
And one sweet kiss shall pay this countless debt.

Upon this promise did he raise his chin,
Like a dive-dapper<sup>b</sup> peering through a wave,
Who, being look'd on, ducks as quickly in;
So offers he to give what she did crave;
But when her lips were ready for his pay,
He winks, and turns his lips another way.

Never did passenger in summer's heat
More thirst for drink, than she for this good turn:
Her help she sees, but help she cannot get;
She bathes in water, yet her fire must burn:
"O, pity," gan she cry, "flint-hearted boy!
'Tis but a kiss I beg; why art thou coy?"

"I have been woo'd, as I entreat thee now,
Even by the stern and direful god of war,
Whose sinewy neck in battle ne'er did bow,
Who conquers where he comes, in every jar:
Yet hath he been my captive and my slave,
And begg'd for that which thou unask'd shalt have.

"Over my altars hath he hung his lance,
His batter'd shield, his uncontrolled crest,
And for my sake hath learn'd to sport and dance,
To toy, to wanton, dally, smile, and jest;
Scorning his churlish drum, and ensign red,
Making my arms his field, his tent my bed.

"Thus he that overrul'd I oversway'd,
Leading him prisoner in a red-rose chain:
Strong-temper'd steel his stronger strength obey'd,
Yet was he servile to my coy disdain.
O be not proud, nor brag not of thy might,
For mastering her that foil'd the god of fight!

"Touch but my lips with those fair lips of thine, (Though mine be not so fair, yet are they red,)
The kiss shall be thine own as well as mine:—
What seest thou in the ground? hold up thy head;
Look in mine eyeballs, there thy beauty lies:
Then why not lips on lips, since eyes in eyes?"

"Art thou ashamed to kiss? then wink again,
And I will wink, so shall the day seem night:
Love keeps his revels where there are but twain;
Be bold to play, our sport is not in sight:
These blue-vein'd violets whereon we lean Never can blab, nor know not what we mean.

"The tender spring upon thy tempting lip
Shows thee unripe; yet may'st thou well be tasted:
Make use of time, let not advantage slip;
Beauty within itself should not be wasted:

<sup>a</sup> Rank—full. Rank is often used to express excess or violence generally; and rankness is applied to a flood, in 'King John,' Act V. sc. 4:—

"And like a bated and retired flood, Leaving our rankness and irregular course."

<sup>b</sup> Dive-dapper. One of the familiar names of the dab-chick is dive-dapper, or di-dapper; and this was the old poetical name.

Fair flowers that are not gather'd in their prime Rot and consume themselves in little time.

"Were I hard-favour'd, foul, or wrinkled-old,
Ill-nurtur'd, crooked, churlish, harsh in voice,
O'er-worn, despised, rheumatic, and cold,
Thick-sighted, barren, lean, and lacking juice,
Then mightst thou pause, for then I were not for thee;
But having no defects, why dost abhor me?"

"Thou canst not see one wrinkle in my brow;
Mine eyes are grey,<sup>a</sup> and bright, and quick in turning;
My beauty as the spring doth yearly grow,
My flesh is soft and plump, my marrow burning;
My smooth moist hand, were it with thy hand ~~so~~,
Would in thy palm dissolve, or seem to melt.

"Bid me discourse, I will enchant thine ear,
Or, like a fairy, trip upon the green,
Or, like a nymph, with long dishevell'd hair,
Dance on the sands, and yet no footing seen:
Love is a spirit all compact of fire,
Not gross to sink, but light, and will aspire.

"Witness this primrose bank whereon I lie;
These forceless flowers like sturdy trees support me;
Two strengthless doves will draw me through the sky,
From morn to night, even where I list to sport me:
Is love so light, sweet boy, and may it be
That thou shouldst think it heavy unto thee?"

"Is thine own heart to thine own face affected?
Can thy right hand seize love upon thy left?
Then woo thyself, be of thyself rejected,
Steal thine own freedom, and complain on theft:
Narcissus so himself himself forsook,
And died to kiss his shadow in the brook.

"Torches are made to light, jewels to wear,
Dainties to taste, fresh beauty for the use,
Herbs for their smell, and sappy plants to bear;
Things growing to themselves are growth's abuse:
Seeds spring from seeds, and beauty breedeth beauty,
Thou wast begot,—to get it is thy duty.

"Upon the earth's increase why shouldst thou feed,
Unless the earth with thy increase be fed?
By law of Nature thou art bound to breed,
That thine may live, when thou thyself art dead;
And so in spite of death thou dost survive,
In that thy likeness still is left alive."

By this the love-sick queen began to sweat,
For, where they lay, the shadow had forsook them,
And Titan, tired<sup>b</sup> in the midday heat,
With burning eye did hotly overlook them;
Wishing Adonis had his team to guide,
So he were like him, and by Venus' side.

And now Adonis, with a lazy spright,
And with a heavy, dark, disliking eye,
His lowering brows o'erwhelming his fair sight,
Like misty vapours when they blot the sky,
Souring his cheeks, cries, "Fie, no more of love!
The sun doth burn my face; I must remove."

"Ah me," quoth Venus, "young, and so unkind!
What bare excuses mak'st thou to be gone!
I'll sigh celestial breath, whose gentle wind
Shall cool the heat of this descending sun;
I'll make a shadow for thee of my hairs;
If they burn too, I'll quench them with my tears."

<sup>a</sup> Grey is said to be here used as blue. We have seen frequently—

"Her two blue windows faintly she upbeats."
But the eye-lids are the "blue windows."

<sup>b</sup> Tired—attired.

at shines from heaven shines but warm,
 between that sun and thee ;
 ave from thence doth little harm,
 erts forth the fire that burneth me :
 I not immortal, life were done,
 his heavenly and earthly sun.

odurate, flinty, hard as steel,
 an flint, for stone at rain relenteth ?
 oman's son, and canst not feel love ? how want of love tormenteth ?
 mother borne so hard a mind,
 ot brought forth thee, but died unkind.*

I, that thou shouldst contemn<sup>b</sup> me this ?
 at danger dwells upon my suit ?
 by lips the worse for one poor kiss ?
 but speak fair words, or else be mute :
 me kiss, I'll give it thee again,
 or interest, if thou wilt have twain.

a picture, cold and senseless stone,
 d idol, image dull and dead,
 uting but the eye alone,
 i man, but of no woman bred ;
 no man, though of a man's complexion,
 will kiss even by their own direction."

mpatience chokes her pleading tongue,
 g passion doth provoke a pause ;
 and fiery eyes blaze forth her wrong ;
 in love, she cannot right her cause :
 she weeps, and now she fain would speak,
 her sobs do her intendments<sup>c</sup> break.

he shakes her head, and then his hand,
 she on him, now on the ground ;
 er arms infold him like a band ;
 he will not in her arms be bound ;
 i from thence he struggles to be gone her lily fingers one in one.

" she saith, " since I have hemm'd thee here, circuit of this ivory pale,
 rk, and thou shalt be my deer,
 thou wilt, on mountain or in dale :
 my lips ; and if those hills be dry, er, where the pleasant fountains lie.

is limit is relief enough,
 n-grass, and high delightful plain,
 g hillocks, brakes obscure and rough,
 bee from tempest and from rain ;
 my deer, since I am such a park ;
 hall rouse thee, tho' a thousand bark."

his smiles as in disdain,
 h cheek appears a pretty dimple :
 those hollows, if himself were slain,
 e buried in a tomb so simple ;
 ing well if there he came to lie,
 e Love liv'd and there he could not die.

y caves, these round-enchancing pits,
 r mouths to swallow Venus' liking :
 before, how doth she now for wits ?
 at first, what needs a second striking ?
 en of love, in thine own law forlorn,
 cheek that smiles at thee in scorn !

way shall she turn ? what shall she say ?
 are done, her woes the more increasing,

Milton applies the same epithet, in the same way, line of Divorce :—" The desire and longing to put ly solitariness by uniting another body, but not soul, to his, in the cheerful society of wedlock."
 is here used in the sense of throw aside, etc.—intentions.

The time is spent, her object will away,
 And from her twining arms doth urge releasing :
 " Pity"—she cries,— " some favour—some remorse"<sup>a</sup>—
 Away he springs, and hasteth to his horse.

But lo, from forth a cove that neighbours by,
 A breeding jennet, lusty, young, and proud,
 Adonis' trampling courser doth espy,
 And forth she rushes, snorts, and neighs aloud :
 The strong-neck'd steed, being tied unto a tree,
 Breaketh his rein, and to her straight goes he.

Imperiously he leaps, he neighs, he bounds,
 And now his woven girths he breaks asunder ;
 The bearing earth with his hard hoof he wounds,
 Whose hollow womb resounds like heaven's thunder ;
 The iron bit he crushes 'tween his teeth,
 Controlling what he was controlled with.

His ears up prick'd ; his braided hanging mane
 Upon his compass'd<sup>b</sup> crest now stand on end ;<sup>c</sup>
 His nostrils drink the air, and forth again,
 As from a furnace, vapours doth he send :
 His eye, which scornfully glisters like fire,
 Shows his hot courage and his high desire.

Sometime he trots, as if he told the steps,
 With gentle majesty, and modest pride ;
 Anon he rears upright, curvets, and leaps,
 As who should say, lo ! thus my strength is tried ;
 And this I do to captivate the eye
 Of the fair breeder that is standing by.

What reckoneth he his rider's angry stir,
 His flattering " holla,"<sup>d</sup> or his " Stand, I say "<sup>e</sup> ?
 What cares he now for curb, or pricking spur ?
 For rich caparisons, or trapping gay ?
 He sees his love, and nothing else he sees,
 Nor nothing else with his proud sight agrees.

Look when a painter would surpass the life,
 In limning out a well-proportion'd steed,
 His art with nature's workmanship at strife,
 As if the dead the living should exceed ;
 So did this horse excel a common one,
 In shape, in courage, colour, pace, and bone.

Round-hoof'd, short-jointed, fetlocks shag and long,
 Broad breast, full eye, small head, and nostril wide
 High crest, short ears, straight legs, and passing strong,
 Thin mane, thick tail, broad buttock, tender hide :
 Look what a horse should have, he did not lack,
 Save a proud rider on so proud a back.

Sometime he scuds far off, and there he stares ;
 Anon he starts at stirring of a feather ;
 To hid the wind a base<sup>f</sup> he now prepares,
 And wh'er he run, or fly, they knew not whether ;
 For thro' his mane and tail the high wind sings,
 Fanning the hairs, who wave like feather'd wings.

He looks upon his love and neighs unto her ;
 She answers him as if she knew his mind ;
 Being proud, as females are, to see him woo her,
 She puts on outward strangeness, seems unkind ;
 Spurns at his love, and scorns the heat he feels,
 Beating his kind embracements with her heels.

<sup>a</sup> Remorse—tenderness.

<sup>b</sup> Compass'd—arched.

<sup>c</sup> Mane is here used as a plural noun.

<sup>d</sup> Holla. Ho is the ancient interjection, giving notice to stop. The word before us is certainly the same as the French hola, and is explained in Cotgrave's French Dictionary as meaning " enough, soft, soft, no more of that."

<sup>e</sup> In the game of base, or petion base, one runs and challenges another to pursue.

Then, like a melancholy malecontent,
He veils<sup>a</sup> his tail, that, like a falling plume,
Cool shadow to his melting buttock lent;
He stamps, and bites the poor flies in his fume:
His love, perceiving how he is enrag'd,
Grew kinder, and his fury was assuag'd.

His testy master goeth about to take him;
When lo, the unback'd breeder, full of fear,
Jealous of catching, swiftly doth forsake him
With her the horse, and left Adonis there:
As they were mad unto the wood they hie them,
Out-stripping crows that strive to over-fly them.

All swoln with chasing down Adonis sits,
Banning his boisterous and unruly beast;
And now the happy season once more fits,
That love-sick Love by pleading may be blest;
For lovers say the heart hath treble wrong,
When it is barr'd the aidance of the tongue.

An oven that is stopp'd, or river stay'd,
Burneth more hotly, swelleth with more rage:
So of concealed sorrow may be said;
Free vent of words love's fire doth assuage;
But when the heart's attorney<sup>b</sup> once is mute,
The client breaks, as desperate in his suit.

He sees her coming, and begins to glow,
Even as a dying coal revives with wind,
And with his bonnet hides his angry brow;
Looks on the dull earth with disturbed mind;
Taking no notice that she is so nigh,
For all askance he holds her in his eye.

O what a sight it was, wistly to view
How she came stealing to the wayward boy!
To note the fighting conflict of her hue!
How white and red each other did destroy!
But now her cheek was pale, and by and by
It flash'd forth fire, as lightning from the sky.

Now was she just before him as he sat,
And like a lowly lover down she kneels;
With one fair hand she heaveth up his hat,
Her other tender hand his fair cheek feels:
His tenderer cheek receives her soft hand's print,
As apt as new-fallen snow takes any dint.

O what a war of looks was then between them!
Her eyes, petitioners, to his eyes suing;
His eyes saw her eyes as they had not seen them;
Her eyes woo'd still, his eyes disdain'd the wooing:
And all this dumb play had his<sup>c</sup> acts made plain
With tears, which, chorus-like, her eyes did rain.

Full gently now she takes him by the hand,
A lily prison'd in a gaol of snow,
Or ivory in an alabaster band;
So white a friend engirts so white a foe:
This beauteous combat, wilful and unwilling,
Show'd like two silver doves that sit a billing.

Once more the engine of her thoughts began:
"O fairest mover on this mortal round,
Would thou wert as I am, and I a man,
My heart all whole as thine, thy heart my wound;<sup>d</sup>
For one sweet look thy help I would assure thee, Though nothing but my body's bane would cure thee."

<sup>a</sup> Falle—lowers.

<sup>b</sup> In 'Richard III.' we have—

"Why should calamity be full of words?"

Windy attorneys to their client woes."

The tongue, in the passage before us, is the attorney to the heart.

<sup>c</sup> His for its.

<sup>d</sup> Malone explains this "thy heart wounded as mine is."

"Give me my hand," saith he, "why dost thou feel it?"
"Give me my heart," saith she, "and thou shalt have it."
O give it me, lest thy hard heart do steel it,
And being steel'd, soft sighs can never grave it:<sup>a</sup>
Then love's deep groans I never shall regard, Because Adonis' heart hath made mine hard."

"For shame," he cries, "let go, and let me go;
My day's delight is past, my horse is gone,
And 't is your fault I am bereft him so;
I pray you hence, and leave me here alone:
For all my mind, my thought, my busy care,
Is how to get my palfrey from the mare."

Thus she replies: "Thy palfrey, as he should,
Welcomes the warm approach of sweet desire.
Affection is a coal that must be cool'd;
Else, suffer'd, it will set the heart on fire:
The sea hath bounds, but deep desire hath none,
Therefore no marvel though thy horse be gone.

"How like a jade he stood, tied to the tree,
Servilely master'd with a leathern rein!
But when he saw his love, his youth's fair fee,
He held such petty bondage in disdain;
Throwing the base thong from his bending crest,
Enfranchising his mouth, his back, his breast.

"Who sees his true love in her naked bed,
Teaching the sheets a whiter hue than white,
But, when his glutton eye so full hath fed,
His other agents aim at like delight?
Who is so faint that dare not be so bold
To touch the fire, the weather being cold?"

"Let me excuse thy courser, gentle boy;
And learn of him, I heartily beseech thee,
To take advantage on presented joy;
Though I were dumb, yet his proceedings teach thee
O learn to love; the lesson is but plain,
And, once made perfect, never lost again."

"I know not love," quoth he, "nor will not know it, Unless it be a boar, and then I chase it:
'T is much to borrow, and I will not owe it;
My love to love is love but to disgrace it;
For I have heard it is a life in death,
That laughs, and weeps, and all but with a breath.

"Who wears a garment shapeless and unfinished?
Who plucks the bud before one leaf put forth?
If springing things be any jot diminish'd,
They wither in their prime, prove nothing worth:
The colt that 's back'd and burthen'd being young Loseth his pride, and never waxeth strong.

"You hurt my hand with wringing; let us part,
And leave this idle theme, this bootless chat:
Remove your siege from my unyielding heart;
To love's alarm it will not ope the gate.
Dismiss your vows, your feigned tears, your flattery;
For where a heart is hard, they make no battery."

"What! canst thou talk," quoth she, "hast thou a tongue?
O would thou hadst not, or I had no hearing!
Thy mermaid's voice<sup>b</sup> hath done me double wrong;
I had my load before, now press'd with hearing:
Melodious discord, heavenly tune harsh sounding,
Ear's deep-sweet music, and heart's deep-sore wounding.

"Had I no eyes, but ears, my ears would love
That inward beauty and invisible;
Or, were I deaf, thy outward parts would move
Each part in me that were but sensible:

<sup>a</sup> Grave—grave.

<sup>b</sup> Mermaid's voice. Mermaid and ayres were formerly and are synonymous.

neither eyes nor ears, to hear nor see,
 would I be in love, by touching thee.

But the sense of feeling were bereft me,
 I could not see, nor hear, nor touch,
 though but the very smell were left me,
 would my love to thee be still as much;
 in the still story of thy face excelling breath perfum'd, that breedeth love by smelling.

What banquet wert thou to the taste,
 and feeder of the other four!
 why not wish the feast might ever last,
 suspicion double-lock the door?
 jealousy, that so unwelcome guest,
 by his stealing in, disturb the feast."

And the ruby-colour'd portal open'd,
 his speech did honey passage yield;
 I morn, that ever yet betoken'd
 the seaman, tempest to the field, to shepherds, woe unto the birds,
 and foul flaws * to herdmen and to herds.

Her visage advisedly she marketh:
 the wind is hush'd before it raineth,
 the wolf doth grin before he barketh,
 the berry breaks before it staineth,
 the deadly bullet of a gun,
 when striking struck her ere his words begun.

As look she flatly falleth down,
 kill love, and love by looks reviveth:
 secures the wounding of a frown,
 and bankrupt, that by love so thriveth!
 O my boy, believing she is dead,
 her pale cheek, till clapping makes it red;

And mad'd brake off his late intent,
 why he did think to reprehend her,
 when loving love did wittily prevent:
 he wit that can so well defend her!
 the grass she lies as she were slain,
 her breath breatheth life in her again.

And her nose, he strikes her on the cheeks,
 her fingers, holds her pulses hard;
 her lips, a thousand ways he seeks the hurt that his unkindness marr'd; kisses her; and she, by her good will,
 never rise so he will kiss her still.

And of sorrow now is turn'd to day:
 the blue windows <sup>b</sup> faintly she upheaveth,
 the fair sun, when in his fresh array the morn, and all the world relieveth:
 the bright sun glorifies the sky,
 and her face illumin'd with her eye;

And lamps upon his hairless face are fix'd,
 whence they borrow'd all their shine.
 Her four such lamps together mix'd,
 his clouded with his brows' repine;
 the stars, which thro' the crystal tears gave light,
 like the moon in water seen by night.

"Am I?" quoth she, "in earth or heaven, ocean drench'd, or in the fire?
 or is this? or morn or weary even?
 or fit to die, or life desire?"

<sup>a</sup> is here used in the sense of violent blasts.
 blue windows are doubtless the eyelids, but the epithet blue is startling. We must remember that Shakspeare has jewels as—

"Sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes."

<sup>b</sup> Used as a substantiv. Chaucer employs pine in answer.

But now I liv'd, and life was death's annoy;
 But now I died, and death was lively joy

"O thou didst kill me;—kill me once again:
 Thy eyes' shrewd tutor, that hard heart of thine,
 Hath taught them scornful tricks, and such disdain:
 That they have murder'd this poor heart of mine:
 And these mine eyes, true leaders to their queen,
 But for thy piteous lips no more had seen.

"Long may they kiss each other, for this cure!
 O never let their crimson liveries wear!
 And as they last, their verdure still endure,
 To drive infection* from the dangerous year!
 That the star-gazers, having writ on death,
 May say the plague is banish'd by thy breath.

"Pure lips, sweet seals in my soft lips imprinted,
 What bargains may I make, still to be sealing?
 To sell myself I can be well contented,
 So thou wilt buy, and pay, and use good dealing;
 Which purchase if thou make, for fear of slips,
 Set thy seal-manual on my wax-red lips.

"A thousand kisses buys my heart from me;
 And pay them at thy leisure, one by one.
 What is ten hundred touches unto thee?
 Are they not quickly told, and quickly gone?
 Say, for non-payment that the debt should double,<sup>b</sup>
 Is twenty hundred kisses such a trouble?"

"Fair queen," quoth he, "if any love you owe me,
 Measure my strangeness<sup>c</sup> with my unripe years;
 Before I know myself seek not to know me;
 No fisher but the ungrown fry forbears:
 The mellow plum doth fall, the green sticks fast,
 Or being early pluck'd is sour to taste.

"Look, the world's comforter, with weary gait,
 His day's hot task hath ended in the west:
 The owl, night's herald, shrieks,—'t is very late;
 The sheep are gone to fold, birds to their nest;
 And coal-black clouds that shadow heaven's light
 Do summon us to part, and bid good night.

"Now let me say 'good night,' and so say you;
 If you will say so, you shall have a kiss."
 "Good night," quoth she; and, ere he says "adieu,"
 The honey fee of parting tender'd is:
 Her arms do lend his neck a sweet embrace;
 Incorporate then they seem; face grows to face.

Till, breathless, he disjoin'd, and backward drew
 The heavenly moisture, that sweet coral mouth,
 Whose precious taste her thirsty lips well knew,
 Whereon they surfeit yet complain on drouth:
 He with her plenty press'd, she faint with dearth,
 (Their lips together glued,) fall to the earth.

Now quick Desire hath caught the yielding prey,
 And glutton-like she feeds yet never filleth;
 Her lips are conquerors, his lips obey,
 Paying what ransom the insulter willet;
 Whose vulture thought doth pitch the price so high,
 That she will draw his lips' rich treasure dry.

And having felt the sweetness of the spoil,
 With blindfold fury she begins to forage;
 Her face doth reek and smoke, her blood doth boil,
 And careless lust stirs up a desperate courage;

* The custom of strewing houses with fragrant herbs was universal at a period when the constant recurrence of the plague habituated families to the use of what they considered preventives.

<sup>b</sup> Here is one of the many traces of Shakspeare's legal studies —an allusion to the penalty for non-payment which formed the condition of a money bond.

<sup>c</sup> Strangeness—coyness or bashfulness.

Planting oblivion, beating reason back,
Forgetting shame's pure blush, and honour's wrack.

Hot, faint, and weary, with her hard embracing,
Like a wild bird being tam'd with too much handling,
Or as the fleet-foot roe that's tir'd with chasing,
Or like the froward infant still'd with dandling,
He now obeys, and now no more resisteth,
While she takes all she can, not all she listeth.

What <sup>a</sup> frozen but dissolves with tempering,
And yields at last to every light impression?<sup>a</sup>
Things out of hope are compass'd off with venturing, Chiefly in love, whose leave<sup>b</sup> exceeds commission:
Affection faints not like a pale-fac'd coward,
But then woos best when most his choice is froward.

When he did frown, O, had she then gave over,
Such nectar from his lips she had not suck'd.
Foul words and frowns must not repel a lover;
What though the rose have prickles, yet 't is pluck'd:
Were beauty under twenty locks kept fast,
Yet love breaks through, and picks them all at last.

For pity now she can no more detain him;
The poor fool prays her that he may depart:
She is resolv'd no longer to restrain him;<sup>c</sup>
Bids him farewell, and look well to her heart,
The which, by Cupid's bow she doth protest,
He carries thence incaged in his breast.

"Sweet boy," she says, "this night I'll waste in sorrow,
For my sick heart commands mine eyes to watch.
Tell me, love's master, shall we meet to-morrow?
Say, shall we? shall we? wilt thou make the match?"
He tells her, no; to-morrow he intends To hunt the boar with certain of his friends.

"The boar!" quoth she; whereat a sudden pale,
Like lawn being spread upon the blushing rose,
Usurps her cheeks; she trembles at his tale,
And on his neck her yoking arms she throws:
She sinketh down, still hanging by his neck,
He on her belly falls, she on her back.

Now is she in the very lists of love,
Her champion mounted for the hot encounter:
All is imaginary she doth prove,
He will not manage her, although he mount her;
That worse than Tantalus' is her annoy,
To clip Elysium, and to lack her joy.

Even as poor birds, deceiv'd with painted grapes,<sup>e</sup>
Do surfeit by the eye, and pine the maw,
Even so she languisheth in her mishaps,
As those poor birds that helpless<sup>d</sup> berries saw:
The warm effects which she in him finds missing,
She seeks to kindle with continual kissing.

But all in vain; good queen, it will not be:
She bath assay'd as much as may be prov'd;
Her pleading hath deserv'd a greater fee;
She's Love, she loves, and yet she is not lov'd.
"Fie, fie," he says, "you crush me; let me go;
You have no reason to withhold me so."

"Thou hadst been gone," quoth she, "sweet boy, ere this,
But that thou told'st me thou wouldst hunt the boar.
O be advis'd! thou know'st not what it is
With javelin's point a churlish swine to gore,
Whose tushes never-sheath'd he whetteth still,
Like to a mortal<sup>e</sup> butcher, bent to kill.

<sup>a</sup> The soft wax upon which the seal attached to a legal instrument was impressed required to be tempered before the impression was made upon it. <sup>b</sup> Leave—licence.

<sup>c</sup> The allusion is to the picture of Zeuxis, mentioned by Pliny. We may observe that there was no English translation of Pliny so early as the date of this poem.

<sup>d</sup> Helpless—that afford no help.

<sup>e</sup> Mortal—readly.

"On his bow-back he hath a battle set
Of bristly pikes, that ever threat his fees;
His eyes like glowworms shine when he doth fret;
His snout digs sepulchres where'er he goes;
Being mov'd, he strikes whate'er is in his way,
And whom he strikes his cruel tushes slay.

"His brawny sides, with hairy bristles arm'd,
Are better proof than thy spear's point can enter;
His short thick neck cannot be easily harm'd;
Being ireful on the lion he will venture:
The thorny brambles and embracing bushes,
As fearful of him, part; through whom he rushes.

"Alas, he nought esteems that face of thine,
To which Love's eyes pay tributary gazes;
Nor thy soft hands, sweet lips, and crystal eye,
Whose full perfection all the world amazes;
But having thee at vantage (wondrous dread!)
Would root these beauties as he roots the mead.

"O, let him keep his loathsome cabin still!
Beauty hath nought to do with such foul fiends;
Come not within his danger<sup>a</sup> by thy will;
They that thrive well take counsel of their friends.
When thou didst name the boar, not to dissemble,
I fear'd thy fortune, and my joints did tremble.

"Didst thou not mark my face? Was it not white?
Saw'st thou not signs of fear lurk in mine eye?
Grew I not faint? And fell I not downright?
Within my bosom, whereon thou dost lie,
My boding heart pants, beats, and takes no rest,
But, like an earthquake, shakes thee on my breast.

"For where Love reigns, disturbing Jealousy Doth call himself Affection's sentinel;
Gives false alarms, suggesteth mutiny,
And in a peaceful hour doth cry, 'kill, kill;
Distempering gentle Love in his desire,
As air and water do abate the fire.

"This sour informer, this bate-breeding<sup>b</sup> spy,
This canker that eats up love's tender spring,<sup>c</sup>
This carry-tale, dissentious jealousy,
That sometime true news, sometime false doth bring,
Knocks at my heart, and whispers in mine ear,
That if I love thee I thy death should fear!

"And, more than so, presenteth to mine eye
The picture of an angry-chafing boar,
Under whose sharp fangs on his back doth lie
An image like thyself, all stain'd with gore;
Whose blood upon the fresh flowers being shed
Doth make them droop with grief, and hang the head.

"What should I do, seeing thee so indeed,
That tremble at the imagination?
The thought of it doth make my faint heart bleed,
And fear doth teach it divination:
I prophesy thy death, my living sorrow,
If thou encounter with the boar to-morrow.

"But if thou needs wilt hunt, be rul'd by me;
Uncouple at the timorous flying hare,
Or at the fox, which lives by subtilty,
Or at the roe, which no encounter dare:
Pursue these fearful creatures o'er the downs,
And on thy well-breath'd horse keep with thy hands.

"And when thou hast on foot the purblind hare,
Mark the poor wretch, to overshoot his troubles,
How he outruns the wind, and with what care
He cranks<sup>d</sup> and crosses, with a thousand doubles:

<sup>a</sup> Danger—power of doing harm. <sup>b</sup> Bate signifies diminish. <sup>c</sup> Carry-tale—sland or young slave. <sup>d</sup> Cranks—crosses.

any musits* through the which he goes ke a labyrinth to amaze his foes.

ime he runs among a flock of sheep,
e the cunning hounds mistake their smell, setime where earth-delving conies keep,<sup>b</sup>
the loud pursuers in their yell ;
ometime sorteth<sup>c</sup> with a herd of deer ;
er deviseth shifts ; wit waits on fear :

ere his smell with others being mingled,
scent-snuffing hounds are driven to doubt,
their clamorous cry till they have singled uch ado the cold fault cleanly out ;
do they spend their mouths : Echo replies,
another chase were in the skies.

is, poor Wat, far off upon a hill,
on his hinder legs with listening ear, ken if his foes pursue him still ;
eir loud alarums he doth hear ;
now his grief may be compared well
e sore sick that hears the passing-bell.

shalt thou see the dew-bedabbled wretch nd return, indenting with the way ;
vious briar his weary legs doth scratch,
adlow makes him stop, each murmur stay :
isery is trodden on by many,
being low never reliev'd by any.

uently, and hear a little more ;
not struggle, for thou shalt not rise :
e thee hate the hunting of the boar, myself thou hear'st me moralize,<sup>d</sup> ying this to that, and so to so ;
ove can comment upon every woe.

e did I leave ?"—" No matter where," quoth he ;
me, and then the story aptly ends :
it is spent."—" Why, what of that ?" quoth she.
" quoth he, " expected of my friends ;
now 't is dark, and going I shall fall."
sight," quoth she, " desire sees best of all.

f thou fall, O then imagine this,
th in love with thee thy footing trips,
is but to rob thee of a kiss.
eys make true men thieves ; so do thy lips modest Dian cloudy and forlorn,
she should steal a kiss, and die forsworn.

of this dark night I perceive the reason :
for shame obscures her silver shine,
ging nature be condemn'd of treason,
ling moulds from heaven that were divine,
ein she fram'd thee in high heaven's despite,
ame the sun by day, and her by night.

herefore bath she brib'd the Destinies,
e the curious workmanship of nature,
ple beauty with infirmities,
re perfection with impure defeature ;
ng it subject to the tyranny
ad mischances and much misery ;

ring fevers, agues pale and faint, soning pestilence, and frenzies wood,<sup>e</sup> row-eating sickness, whose attain e breeds by heating of the blood :
its, imposthumes, grief, and damn'd despair,
Nature's death for framing thee so fair.

z. The term is explained in Markham's Gentlemen's 1595 :—" We term the place where she (the hare) er form ; the place through which she goes to relief,
"

—dwell.

wise—comment.

* Scyth—consorteth.

<sup>b</sup> Wood—mad.

" And not the least of all these maladies,
But in one minute's flight brings beauty under :
Both favour, savour, hue, and qualities,
Whereat the impartial gazer late did wonder,
Are on the sudden wasted, thaw'd, and done,<sup>a</sup>
As mountain-snow melts with the midday sun.

" Therefore, despite of fruitless chastity,
Love-lacking vestals, and self-loving nuns,
That on the earth would breed a scarcity
And barren dearth of daughters and of sons,
Be prodigal : the lamp that burns by night
Dries up his oil to lend the world his light.

" What is thy body but a swallowing grave,
Seeming to bury that posterity
Which by the rights of time thou needs must have,
If thou destroy them not in dark obscurity ?
If so, the world will hold thee in disdain,
Sith in thy pride so fair a hope is slain.

" So in thyself thyself art made away ;
A mischief worse than civil home-bred strife,
Or theirs whose desperate hands themselves do slay,
Or butcher-sire, that reaves his son of life.
Foul cankering rust the hidden treasure frets,
But gold that 's put to use more gold begets."

" Nay, then," quoth Adon, " you will fall again
Into your idle over-handled theme ;
The kiss I gave you is bestow'd in vain,
And all in vain you strive against the stream ;
For by this black-fac'd night, desire's foul nurse,
Your treatise makes me like you worse and worse

" If love have lent you twenty thousand tongues,
And every tongue more moving than your own,
Bewitching like the wanton mermaid's songs,
Yet from mine ear the tempting tune is blown ;
For know, my heart stands armed in mine ear,
And will not let a false sound enter there ;

" Lest the deceiving harmony should run
Into the quiet closure of my breast ;
And then my little heart were quite undone,
In his bedchamber to be barr'd of rest.
No, lady, no ; my heart longs not to groan,
But soundly sleeps, while now it sleeps alone.

" What have you urg'd that I cannot reprove ?
The path is smooth that leadeth on to danger ;
I hate not love, but your device in love,
That lends embracements unto every stranger.
You do it for increase ; O strange excuse !
When reason is the lawd to lust's abuse.

" Call it not love, for love to heaven is fled,
Since sweating lust on earth usurp'd his name ;
Under whose simple semblance he hath fed
Upon fresh beauty, blotting it with blame ;
Which the hot tyrant stains, and soon bereaves,
As caterpillars do the tender leaves.

" Love comforteth like sunshine after rain,
But lust's effect is tempest after sun ;
Love's gentle spring doth always fresh remain,
Lust's winter comes ere summer half be done.
Love surfeits not ; lust like a glutton dies :
Love is all truth ; lust full of forged lies.

" More I could tell, but more I dare not say ;
The text is old, the orator too green.
Therefore, in sadness, now I will away ;
My face is full of shame, my heart of teen ;<sup>b</sup>
Mine ears that to your wanton talk attended
Do burn themselves for having so offended."

<sup>a</sup> Done—destroyed.

<sup>b</sup> Teen—grief.

With this he breaketh from the sweet embrace
Of those fair arms which bound him to her breast,
And homeward through the dark laund<sup>a</sup> runs apace;
Leaves Love upon her back deeply distress'd.

Look how a bright star shooteth from the sky,
So glides he in the night from Venus' eye;

Which after him she darts, as one on shore
Gazing upon a late-embarked friend,
Till the wild waves will have him seen no more,
Whose ridges with the meeting clouds contend;
So did the merciless and pitchy night
Fold in the object that did feed her sight.

Whereat amaz'd, as one that unaware Hath dropp'd a precious jewel in the flood,
Or 'stonish'd as night-wanderers often are,
Their light blown out in some mistrustful wood;
Even so confounded in the dark she lay,
Having lost the fair discovery of her way.

And now she beats her heart, whereat it groans,
That all the neighbour-caves, as seeming troubled,
Make verbal repetition of her moans;
Passion on passion deeply is redoubled:
"Ah me!" she cries, and twenty times, "woe, woe!"
And twenty echoes twenty times cry so.

She, marking them, begins a wailing note,
And sings extemp'rally a woeful ditty;
How love makes young men thrall, and old men
dote;

How love is wise in folly, foolish-witty:
Her heavy anthem still concludes in woe,
And still the choir of echoes answer<sup>b</sup> so.

Her song was tedious, and outwore the night,
For lovers' hours are long, though seeming short:
If pleas'd themselves, others, they think, delight
In such like circumstance, with such like sport:
Their copious stories, oftentimes begun,
End without audience, and are never done.

For who hath she to spend the night withal,
But idle sounds, resembling parasites,
Like shrill-tongued tapsters answering every call,
Soothing the humour of fantastic wits?
She says, " 't is so:" they answer all, "'t is so;"
And would say after her, if she said "no."

Lo! here the gentle lark, weary of rest,
From his moist cabinet mounts up on high,
And wakes the morning, from whose silver breast
The sun ariseth in his majesty;
Who doth the world so gloriously behold,
The cedar-tops and hills seem burnish'd gold.

Venus salutes him with this fair good-morrow:
"O thou clear god, and patron of all light,
From whom each lamp and shining star doth borrow
The beauteous influence that makes him bright,
There lives a son, that suck'd an earthly mother,
May lend thee light, as thou dost lend to other."

This said, she hasteth to a myrtle grove,
Musing the morning is so much o'erworn,
And yet she hears no tidings of her love:
She hearkens for his hounds, and for his hound:
Anon she hears them chant it lustily,
And all in haste she coasteth<sup>c</sup> to the cry.

And as she runs, the bushes in the way
Some catch her by the neck, some kiss her face,

<sup>a</sup> Laund—lawn.

<sup>b</sup> Answer. So the original. No doubt, according to the rules of modern construction, answers is more correct.

<sup>c</sup> Coasteth—advanceth.

Some twine about her thigh to make her stay,
She wildly breaketh from their strict embrace,
Like a milch doe, whose swelling dugs do ache,
Hasting to feed her fawn, hid in some brake.

By this she hears the hounds are at a bay,
Whereat she starts, like one that spies an adder
Wreath'd up in fatal folds, just in his way,
The fear whereof doth make him shake and shudder;
Even so the timorous yelping of the hounds
Appals her senses, and her spright confounds.

For now she knows it is no gentle chase,
But the blunt boar, rough bear, or lion proud,
Because the cry remaineth in one place,
Where fearfully the dogs exclaim aloud:
Finding their enemy to be so curst,
They all strain court'sy who shall cope him first.

This dismal cry rings sadly in her ear,
Through which it enters to surprise her heart,
Who, overcome by doubt and bloodless fear,
With cold-pale weakness numbs each feeling part:
Like soldiers, when their captain once doth yield,
They basely fly, and dare not stay the field.

Thus stands she in a trembling ecstasy;
Till, cheering up her senses sore-dismay'd,
She tells them 't is a causeless fantasy,
And childish error that they are afraid;
Bids them leave quaking, bids them fear no more;
And with that word she spied the hunted boar;

Whose frothy mouth, bepainted all with red,
Like milk and blood being mingled both together,
A second fear through all her sinews spread,
Which madly hurries her she knows not whither:
This way she runs, and now she will no further,
But back retires, to rate the boar for murder.

A thousand spleens bear her a thousand ways;
She treads the path that she untreads again;
Her more than haste is mated<sup>a</sup> with delays,
Like the proceedings of a drunken brain,
Full of respect,<sup>b</sup> yet nought at all respecting,
In hand with all things, nought at all effecting.

Here kennel'd in a brake she finds a hound,
And asks the weary caitiff for his master;
And there another licking of his wound,
'Gainst venom'd sores the only sovereign plaster:
And here she meets another sadly scowling,
To whom she speaks, and he replies with howling.

When he hath ceas'd his ill-resounding noise,
Another flap-mouth'd mourner, black and grim,
Against the welkin volleys out his voice;
Another and another answer him,
Clapping their proud tails to the ground below,
Shaking their scratch'd ears, bleeding as they go.

Look, how the world's poor people are amaz'd
At apparitions, signs, and prodigies,
Whereon with fearful eyes they long have gaz'd,
Infusing them with dreadful prophecies:
So she at these sad signs draws up her breath,
And, sighing it again, exclaims on Death.

"Hard-favour'd tyrant, ugly, meagre, lean, Hateful divorce of love," (thus chides she Death),
"Grim-grinning ghost, earth's worm, what dost thou mean
To stifle beauty, and to steal his breath,
Who when he liv'd, his breath and beauty set Gloss on the rose, smell to the violet?"

"If he be dead,—O no, it cannot be,
Seeing his beauty, thou shouldst strike at it—

<sup>a</sup> Mated—confounded.

<sup>b</sup> Respect—~~attention~~ may; thou hast no eyes to see,

 fully at random dost thou hit.
 mark is feeble age; but thy false dart
 kes that aim, and cleaves an infant's heart.

thou but bid beware, then he had spoke,
 ring him thy power had lost his<sup>a</sup> power.
 tinies will curse thee for this stroke;
 I thee crop a weed, thou pluck'st a flower:
 golden arrow at him should have fled,
 ot Death's ebon dart, to strike him dead.

ou drink tears, that thou provok'st such weeping?
 ay a heavy groan advantage thee?
 it thou cast into eternal sleeping es that taught all other eyes to see?
 Nature cares not for thy mortal vigour,
 her best work is ruin'd with thy rigour.

ecome, as one full of despair,
 d<sup>b</sup> her eyelids, who, like sluices, stopp'd tal tide that from her two cheeks fair reet channel of her bosom dropp'd;
 rough the floodgates breaks the silver min,
 ith his strong course opens them again.

er eyes and tears did lend and borrow!
 een in the tears, tears in her eye;
 stals, where they view'd each other's sorrow,
 hat friendly sighs sought still to dry;
 ke a stormy day, now wind, now rain,
 dry her cheeks, tears make them wet again.

passions throng her constant woe,
 og who should best become her grief;
 tain'd, each passion labours so ry present sorrow seemeth chief,
 one is best; then join they all together,
 nany clouds consulting for foul weather.

far off she hears some huntsmen hollo:<sup>c</sup>
 s song ne'er pleas'd her babe so well:
 'imagination she did follow
 nd of hope doth labour to expel;
 w reviving joy bids her rejoice,
 atters her it is Adonis' voice.

her tears began to turn their tide,
 ison'd in her eye, like pearls in glass;
 stimes falls an orient drop beside,
 er cheek melts, as scorning it should pass,
 sh the foul face of the sluttish ground, s but drunken when she seemeth drown'd.

elieving love, how strange it seems elieve, and yet too credulous!
 I and woe are both of them extremes,
 and hope make thee ridiculous:
 ee doth flatter thee in thoughts unlikely,
 ely thoughts the other kills thee quickly.

unweaves the web that she hath wrought;
 ives, and Death is not to blame;
 t she that call'd him all-to<sup>d</sup> naught;
 adds honours to his hateful name;
 eges him king of graves, and grave for kings,
 ous supreme of all mortal things.

"'T quoth she, "sweet Death, I did but jest;
 on me, I felt a kind of fear,
 I met the boar, that bloody beast, nows no pity, but is still severe;
 gentle shadow (truth I must confess),
 d on thee, fearing my love's decease.

<sup>a</sup> See. <sup>b</sup> Fall'd—lowered.
 er hollow, is not quite the same word as holla, which already noticed, although the usual spelling of this e passage before us is holla.
 —entirely—altogether

"'T is not my fault: the boar provok'd my tongue,
 Be wreak'd on him, invisible commander;
 'T is he, foul creature, that hath done thee wrong;
 I did but act, he 's author of thy slander:
 Grief hath two tongues, and never woman yet,
 Could rule them both, without ten women's wit."

Thus, hoping that Adonis is alive,
 Her rash suspect she doth extenuate;
 And that his beauty may the better thrive,
 With Death she humbly doth insinuate;
 Tells him of trophies, statues, tombs; and stories
 His victories, his triumphs, and his glories.

"O Jove," quoth she, "how much a fool was I,
 To be of such a weak and silly mind,
 To wail his death who lives, and must not die,
 Till mutual overthrow of mortal kind!
 For he being dead, with him is beauty slain,
 And, beauty dead, black chaos comes again.

"Fie, fie, fond love, thou art so full of fear
 As one with treasure laden, hemm'd with thieves;
 Trifles, unwitnessed with eye or ear,
 Thy coward heart with false bethinking grieves."
 Even at this word she hears a merry horn,
 Whereat she leaps that was but late forlorn.

As falcon to the lure away she flies;
 The grass stoops not, she treads on it so light;
 And in her haste unfortunately spies
 The foul boar's conquest on her fair delight;
 Which seen, her eyes, as murder'd with the view,
 Like stars asham'd of day, themselves withdrew.

Or, as the snail, whose tender horns being hit,
 Shrinks backward in his shelly cave with pain,
 And there, all smother'd up, in shade doth sit,
 Long after fearing to creep forth again;
 So, at his bloody view, her eyes are fled
 Into the deep dark cabins of her head;

Where they resign their office and their light
 To the disposing of her troubled brain;
 Who bids them still consort with ugly night,
 And never wound the heart with looks again;
 Who, like a king perplexed in his throne,
 By their suggestion gives a deadly groan,

Whereat each tributary subject quakes:
 As when the wind, imprison'd in the ground,
 Struggling for passage, earth's foundation shakes,
 Which with cold terror doth men's minds confound,
 The mutiny each part doth so surprise,
 That from their dark beds once more leap her eyes;

And, being open'd, threw unwilling light
 Upon the wide wound that the boar had trench'd
 In his soft flank; whose wonted lily white
 With purple tears, that his wound wept, was drench'd:
 No flower was nigh, no grass, herb, leaf, or weed,
 But stole his blood, and seem'd with him to bleed.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth;
 Over one shoulder doth she hang her head;
 Dumbly she passions, frantically she doteth;
 She thinks he could not die, he is not dead.
 Her voice is stopp'd, her joints forget to bow;
 Her eyes are mad that they have wept till now.

Upon his hurt she looks so steadfastly
 That her sight dazzling makes the wound seem three;
 And then she reprehends her mangling eye
 That makes more gashes where no breach should be:
 His face seems twain, each several limb is doubled;
 For oft the eye mistakes, the brain being troubled.

"My tongue cannot express my grief for one,
 And yet," quoth she, "behold two Adons dead!"

My sighs are blown away, my salt tears gone,
Mine eyes are turn'd to fire, my heart to lead :
Heavy heart's lead melt at mine eyes' red fire !
So shall I die by drops of hot desire.

" Alas, poor world, what treasure hast thou lost !
What face remains alive that 's worth the viewing ?
Whose tongue is music now ? what canst thou boast
Of things long since, or anything ensuing ?
The flowers are sweet, their colours fresh and trim ;
But true-sweet beauty liv'd and died with him.

" Bonnet nor veil henceforth no creature wear ;
Nor sun nor wind will ever strive to kiss you :
Having no fair* to lose, you need not fear ;
The sun doth scorn you, and the wind doth hiss you :
But when Adonis liv'd, sun and sharp air
Lurk'd like two thieves to rob him of his fair ;

" And therefore would he put his bonnet on,
Under whose brim the gaudy sun would peep ;
The wind would blow it off, and, being gone,
Play with his locks ; then would Adonis weep :
And straight, in pity of his tender years,
They both would strive who first should dry his tears.

" To see his face the lion walk'd along Behind some hedge, because he would not fear him :
To recreate himself, when he hath sung,
The tiger would be tame and gently hear him ;
If he had spoke the wolf would leave his prey,
And never fright the silly lamb that day.

" When he beheld his shadow in the brook
The fishes spread on it their golden gills ;
When he was by the birds such pleasure took
That some would sing, some other in their bills
Would bring him mulberries, and ripe-red cherries ;
He fed them with his sight, they him with berries.

" But this foul, grim, and urchin-snouted<sup>b</sup> boar, Whose downward eye still looketh for a grave,
Ne'er saw the beauteous livery that he wore :
Witness the entertainment that he gave ;
If he did see his face, why then I know
He thought to kiss him, and hath kill'd him so.

" 'T is true, 't is true ; thus was Adonis slain ;
He ran upon the boar with his sharp spear,
Who did not whet his teeth at him again,
But by a kiss thought to persuade him there ;
And nuzzling in his flank the loving swine
Sheath'd, unaware, the tusk in his soft groin.

" Had I been tooth'd like him I must confess With kissing him I should have kill'd him first ;
But he is dead, and never did he bless
My youth with his ; the more am I accurst."
With this she falleth in the place she stood,
And stains her face with his congeal'd blood.

She looks upon his lips, and they are pale ;
She takes him by the hand, and that is cold ;
She whispers in his ears a heavy tale,
As if they heard the woeful words she told :
She lifts the coffer-lids that close his eyes,
Where, lo ! two lamps, burnt out, in darkness lies :

Two glasses where herself herself beheld
A thousand times, and now no more reflect ;
Their virtue lost, wherein they late excell'd,
And every beauty robb'd of his effect :

* Fair—beauty.

<sup>b</sup> Urchin-snouted—with the snout of the urchin, or hedgehog.

" Wonder of time," quoth she, " this is my side,
That you being dead the day should yet be light.

" Since thou art dead, lo ! here I prophesy,
Sorrow on love hereafter shall attend ;
It shall be waited on with jealousy,
Find sweet beginning, but unsavoury end ;
Ne'er settled equally, but high or low ;
That all love's pleasure shall not match his woe.

" It shall be fickle, false, and full of fraud ;
Bud and be blasted in a breathing while ;
The bottom poison, and the top o'erstraw'd*
With sweets that shall the truest sight beguile :
The strongest body shall it make most weak,
Strike the wise dumb, and teach the fool to speak.

" It shall be sparing, and too full of riot,
Teaching decrepit age to tread the measures ;
The staring ruffian shall it keep in quiet,
Pluck down the rich, enrich the poor with treasures :
It shall be raging mad, and silly mild,
Make the young old, the old become a child.

" It shall suspect where is no cause of fear ;
It shall not fear where it should most mistrust ;
It shall be merciful, and too severe,
And most deceiving when it seems most just ;
Perverse it shall be where it shows most toward,
Put fear to valour, courage to the coward.

" It shall be cause of war and dire events,
And set dissention 'twixt the son and sire ;
Subject and servile to all discontents,
As dry combustious matter is to fire ;
Sith in his prime death doth my love destroy,
They that love best their loves shall not enjoy."

By this, the boy* that by her side lay kill'd
Was melted like a vapour from her sight,
And in his blood that on the ground lay spill'd,
A purple flower sprung up, chequer'd with white,
Resembling well his pale cheeks, and the blood
Which in round drops upon their whiteness stall.

She bows her head, the new-sprung flower to smell,
Comparing it to her Adonis' breath ;
And says, within her bosom it shall dwell,
Since he himself is reft from her by death :
She crops the stalk, and in the breach appears Green dropping sap, which she compares to tears.

" Poor flower," quoth she, " this was thy father's grave
(Sweet issue of a more sweet smelling sire,)
For every little grief to wet his eyes ;
To grow unto himself was his desire,
And so 't is thine ; but know, it is as good
To wither in my breast as in his blood.

" Here was thy father's bed, here in my breast ;
Thou art the next of blood, and 't is thy right ;
Lo ! in this hollow cradle take thy rest,
My throbbing heart shall rock thee day and night :
There shall not be one minute in an hour
Wherein I will not kiss my sweet love's flower."

Thus weary of the world, away she hies,
And yokes her silver doves ; by whose swift aid
Their mistress mounted, through the empty skies
In her light chariot quickly is convey'd,
Holding their course to Paphos, where their quest
Means to immure herself, and not be seen.

* O'erstraw'd—o'erstrewn.

<sup>b</sup> Measures—grave dances suited to age.

TO

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE HENRY WRIOTHESLEY.

EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON, AND BARON OF TITCHFIELD.

THE love I dedicate to your Lordship is without end, whereof this pamphlet, without beginning, is but a superfluous moiety.* The warrant I have of your honourable disposition, not the worth of my untutored lines, makes it assured of acceptance. What I have done is yours, what I have to do is yours; being part in all I have, devoted yours. Were my worth greater my duty would show greater: meantime, as it is, it is bound to your Lordship; to whom I wish long life, still lengthened with all happiness.

Your Lordship's in all duty,
WILLIAM SHAKESPEARE.

* Moiety. In 'Henry IV.,' Part I., and in 'Lear,' Shakspeare uses moiety as it is here used, meaning a portion, not a half.

THE ARGUMENT.

LUCIUS TARQUINIUS (for his excessive pride surnamed Superbus), after he had caused his own father-in-law, Servius Tullius, to be cruelly murdered, and, contrary to the Roman laws and customs, not requiring or staying for the people's suffrages, had possessed himself of the kingdom, went, accompanied with his sons and other noblemen of Rome, to besiege Ardea. During which siege the principal men of the army meeting one evening at the tent of Sextus Tarquinius, the king's son, in their discourses after supper, every one commended the virtues of his own wife; among whom, Collatinus extolled the incomparable chastity of his wife Lucretia. In that pleasant humour they all posted to Rome; and intending by their secret and sudden arrival to make trial of that which every one had before avouched, only Collatinus finds his wife (though it were late in the night) spinning amongst her maids: the other ladies were all found dancing and reveling, or in several disports. Whereupon the noblemen yielded Collatinus the victory, and his wife the fame. At that time Sextus Tarquinius, being inflamed with Lucretia's beauty, yet smothering his passions for the present, departed with the rest back to the camp; from whence he shortly after privily withdrew himself, and was (according to his estate) royally entertained and lodged by Lucretia at Collatium. The same night he treacherously stealth into her chamber, violently ravished her, and early in the morning speedeth away. Lucretia, in this lamentable plight, hastily despatcheth messengers, one to Rome for her father, another to the camp for Collatine. They came, the one accompanied with Junius Brutus, the other with Publius Valerius; and finding Lucretia attired in mourning habit, demanded the cause of her sorrow. She, first taking an oath of them for her revenge, revealed the actor, and whole manner of his dealing, and withal suddenly stabbed herself. Which done, with one consent they all vowed to root out the whole hated family of the Tarquins; and, bearing the dead body to Rome, Brutus acquainted the people with the doer and manner of the vile deed, with a bitter invective against the tyranny of the king: wherewith the people were so moved, that with one consent and a general acclamation the Tarquins were all exiled, and the state government changed from kings to consuls.

THE RAPE OF LUCRECE.

FROM the besieged Ardea all in post,
Borne by the trustless wings of false desire,
Least-breathed Tarquin leaves the Roman host,
And to Collatium bears the lightless fire
Which, in pale embers hid, lurks to aspire,
And girdle with embracing flames the waist
Of Collatine's fair love, Lucretia the chaste.

Happy that name of chaste unhappy set
This bateless edge on his keen appetite;
When Collatine unwisely did not let
To praise the clear unmatched red and white
Which triumph'd in that sky of his delight,
Where mortal stars, as bright as heaven's beauties,
With pure aspects did him peculiar duties.

For he the night before, in Tarquin's tent,
Unlock'd the treasure of his happy state;
What priceless wealth the heavens had him lent
In the possession of his beauteous mate;
Reckoning his fortune at such high-proud rate,

* Let--forbear.

That kings might be espoused to more fame,
But king nor peer to such a peerless dame.

O happiness enjoy'd but of a few!
And, if possess'd, as soon decay'd and done*
As is the morning's silver-melting dew
Against the golden splendour of the sun!
An expir'd date, cancell'd ere well begun:
Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms,
Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.

Beauty itself doth of itself persuade
The eyes of men without an orator;
What needeth then apologies be made
To set forth that which is so singular?
Or why is Collatine the publisher
Of that rich jewel he should keep unknown
From thievish ears, because it is his own?

* Done. The word is here used as in a previous passage of the 'Venus and Adonis':—

"Wasted, thaw'd, and done,
As mountain-snow melts with the midday sun."

Perchance his boast of Lucrece' sovereignty
Suggested <sup>a</sup> this proud issue of a king;
For by our ears our hearts oft tainted be:
Perchance that envy of so rich a thing,
Braving compare, disdainfully did sting
His high-pitch'd thoughts, that meaner men should vaunt

That golden hap which their superiors want.

But some untimely thought did instigate
His all-too-timeless speed, if none of those:
His honour, his affairs, his friends, his state,
Neglected all, with swift intent he goes
To quench the coal which in his liver glows.
O rash false heat, wrapp'd in repentant cold,
Thy hasty spring still blasts, <sup>b</sup> and ne'er grows old!

When at Collatium this false lord arriv'd,
Well was he welcom'd by the Roman dame,
Within whose face beauty and virtue striv'd
Which of them both should underprop her fame:
When virtue bragg'd, beauty would blush for shame;
When beauty boasted blushes, in despite Virtue would stain that or <sup>c</sup> with silver white.

But beauty, in that white intitled,<sup>d</sup>
From Venus' doves doth challenge that fair field:
Then virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden age, to gild
Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield;
Teaching them thus to use it in the fight,—
When shame assail'd, the red should fence the white.

This heraldry in Lucrece' face was seen,
Argued by beauty's red, and virtue's white
Of either's colour was the other queen,
Proving from world's minority their right:
Yet their ambition makes them still to fight;
The sovereignty of either being so great,
That oft they interchange each other's seat.

This silent war of lilies and of roses
Which Tarquin view'd in her fair face's field,
In their pure ranks his traitor eye encloses;
Where, lest between them both it should be kill'd,
The coward captive vanquished doth yield
To those two armies that would let him go,
Rather than triumph in so false a foe.

Now thinks he that her husband's shallow tongue
(The niggard prodigal that prais'd her so)
In that high task hath done her beauty wrong,
Which far exceeds his barren skill to show:
Therefore that praise which Collatine doth owe,<sup>e</sup>
Enchanted Tarquin answers with surmise,
In silent wonder of still-gazing eyes.

This earthly saint, adored by this devil,
Little suspecteth the false worshipper;
For unstain'd thoughts do seldom dream on evil;
Birds never lim'd no secret bushes fear:
So guiltless she securely gives good cheer

<sup>a</sup> Suggested—tempted.

<sup>b</sup> Blasts is here used as a verb neuter.

<sup>c</sup> Or. The line usually stands thus:—

"Virtue would stain that or with silver white."

The original has ore. Malone has suggested, but he does not act upon the suggestion, that "the word intended was perhaps or, i.e. gold, to which the poet compares the deep colour of a blush." We have no doubt whatever of the matter. The lines in the subsequent stanza complete the heraldic allusion:—

"Then virtue claims from beauty beauty's red,
Which virtue gave the golden age, to gild
Their silver cheeks, and call'd it then their shield."

<sup>d</sup> Intituled—having a title to, or in.

<sup>e</sup> The object of praise which Collatine doth possess.

And reverend welcome to her princely guest,
Whose inward ill no outward harm express'd:

For that he colour'd with his high estate,
Hiding base sin in plaits of majesty;
That nothing in him seem'd inordinate,
Save sometime too much wonder of his eye,
Which, having all, all could not satisfy;
But poorly rich, so wanteth in his store
That cloy'd with much he pineth still for more.

But she, that never cop'd with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their parling <sup>a</sup> looks,
Nor read the subtle-shining secrecies
Writ in the glassy margents of such books;
She touch'd no unknown baits, nor fear'd no hooks,
Nor could she moralize <sup>b</sup> his wanton sight
More than his eyes were open'd to the light.

He stories to her ears her husband's fame,
Won in the fields of fruitful Italy;
And decks with praises Collatine's high name,
Made glorious by his manly chivalry,
With bruised arms and wreaths of victory;
Her joy with heav'd-up hand she doth express,
And, wordless, so greets heaven for his success.

Far from the purpose of his coming thither,
He makes excuses for his being there.
No cloudy show of stormy blustering weather
Doth yet in his fair welkin once appear;
Till sable Night, mother of Dread and Fear,
Upon the world dim darkness doth display,
And in her vaulty prison stows the day.

For then is Tarquin brought unto his bed,
Intending <sup>c</sup> weariness with heavy spright;
For, after supper, long he questioned <sup>d</sup>
With modest Lucrece, and wore out the night:
Now leaden slumber with life's strength doth fight,
And every one to rest himself betakes,
Save thieves, and cares, and troubled minds, that wake

As one of which doth Tarquin lie revolving
The sundry dangers of his will's obtaining;
Yet ever to obtain his will resolving,
Though weak-built hopes persuade him to abstaining;
Despair to gain doth traffic oft for gaining;
And when great treasure is the meed propos'd,
Though death be adjunct, there's no death suppos'd

Those that much covet are with gain so fond,
That what they have not, that which they possess
They scatter and unloose it from their bond,<sup>e</sup>
And so, by hoping more, they have but less;
Or, gaining more, the profit of excess
Is but to surfeit, and such griefs sustain,
That they prove bankrupt in this poor-rich gain.

The aim of all is but to nurse the life
With honour, wealth, and ease, in waning age;
And in this aim there is such thwarting strife,
That one for all, or all for one we gage;
As life for honour in fell battles' rage;
Honour for wealth; and oft that wealth doth cost
The death of all, and all together lost.

So that in vent'ring ill we leave to be
The things we are, for that which we expect
And this ambitious foul infirmity,

<sup>a</sup> Parling—speaking.

<sup>b</sup> Moralize—interpret.

<sup>c</sup> Intending—pretending.

<sup>d</sup> Questioned—conversed.

<sup>e</sup> The meaning, though obscurely expressed, is that the covetous are so fond of gaining what they have not, that they scatter and unloose from their bond (safe hold) that which they possess.

ing much, torments us with defect
t we have : so then we do neglect thing we have, and, all for want of wit,
e something nothing, by augmenting it.

azard now must doting Tarquin make,
ng his honour to obtain his lust ;
r himself himself he must forsake :
where is truth if there be no self-trust ?
shall he think to find a stranger just,
en he himself himself confounds, betrays landerous tongues, and wretched hateful days ?

tole upon the time the dead of night,
heavy sleep had clos'd up mortal eyes ;
nfortable star did lend his light,
se but owls' and wolves' death-boding cries ;
erves the season that they may surprise silly lambs ; pure thoughts are dead and still,
de lust and murder wake to stain and kill.

ow this lustful lord leap'd from his bed,
ng his mantle rudely o'er his arm ;
ly toss'd between desire and dread ;
o sweetly flatters, th' other feareth harm ;
nest Fear, bewitch'd with lust's foul charm,
too too oft betake him to retire,
en away by brain-sick rude Desire.

chion on a flint he softly smiteth,
om the cold stone sparks of fire do fly,
at a waxen torch forthwith he lighteth,
must be lode-star to his lustful eye ;
the flame thus speaks advisedly :
from this cold flint I enforc'd this fire, ucrece must I force to my desire."

ale with fear he doth premeditate ngers of his loathsome enterprise, his inward mind he doth debate
following sorrow may on this arise ;
oking scornfully, he doth despise naked armour of still-slaughter'd lust, justly thus controls his thoughts unjust :

torch, burn out thy light, and lend it not ten her whose light excelleth thine !
e unhallow'd thoughts, before you blot our uncleanness that which is divine !
ure incense to so pure a shrine :
fair humanity abhor the deed spots and stains love's modest snow-white weed.*

me to knighthood and to shining arms !
dishonour to my household's grave !
ous act, including all foul harms !
ial man to be soft fancy's slave ;<sup>b</sup> dour still a true respect should have ;
my digression <sup>c</sup> is so vile, so base,
it will live engraven in my face.

though I die, the scandal will survive,
an eyesore in my golden coat ;
athsome dash the herald will contrive,
er me how fondly I did do ;
y posterity, sham'd with the note,
urse my bones, and hold it for no sin
ish that I their father had not been.

t win I if I gain the thing I seek ?
n, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy :
ys a minute's mirth to wail a week ?

d—garment.
eg's slave—love's slave.
ision is here used in the sense of transgressus.

Or sells eternity to get a toy ?
For one sweet grape who will the vine destroy ?
Or what fond beggar, but to touch the crown,
Would with the sceptre straight be stricken down ?

" If Collatinus dream of my intent,
Will he not wake, and in a desperate rage
Post hither, this vile purpose to prevent ?
This siege that hath engirt his marriage,
This blur to youth, this sorrow to the sage,
This dying virtue, this surviving shame,
Whose crime will bear an ever-during blame ?

" O what excuse can my invention make,
When thou shalt charge me with so black a deed ?
Will not my tongue be mute, my frail joints shake ?
Mine eyes forego their light, my false heart bleed ?
The guilt being great the fear doth still exceed ;
And extreme fear can neither fight nor fly,
But, coward-like, with trembling terror die.

" Had Collatinus kill'd my son or sire,
Or lain in ambush to betray my life,
Or were he not my dear friend, this desire
Might have excuse to work upon his wife ;
As in revenge or quittal of such strife :
But as he is my kinsman, my dear friend,
The shame and fault finds no excuse nor end.

" Shameful it is ;—ay, if the fact be known :
Hateful it is ;—there is no hate in loving :
I 'll beg her love ;—but she is not her own ;
The worst is but denial, and reproving :
My will is strong, past reason's weak removing.
Who fears a sentence or an old man's saw Shall by a painted cloth be kept in awe."

Thus, graceless, holds he disputation T'ween frozen conscience and hot-burning will,
And with good thoughts makes dispensation,
Urging the worse sense for vantage still ;
Which in a moment doth confound and kill
All pure effects, and doth so far proceed,
That what is vile shows like a virtuous deed.

Quoth he, " She took me kindly by the hand,
And gaz'd for tidings in my eager eyes,
Fearing some hard news from the warlike band
Where her beloved Collatinus lies.
O how her fear did make her colour rise !
First red as roses that on lawn we lay,
Then white as lawn, the roses took away.*

" And how her hand, in my hand being lock'd, Forc'd it to tremble with her loyal fear ;
Which struck her sad, and then it faster rock'd,
Until her husband's welfare she did hear ;
Whereat she smiled with so sweet a cheer,
That had Narcissus seen her as she stood,
Self-love had never drown'd him in the flood.

" Why hunt I then for colour or excuses ?
All orators are dumb when beauty pleadeth ;
Poor wretches have remorse in poor abuses ;
Love thrives not in the heart that shadows dreadeth :
Affection is my captain, and he leadeth ;
And when his gaudy banner is display'd,
The coward fights, and will not be dismay'd.

" Then, childish fear, avaunt ! debating, die !
Respect <sup>b</sup> and reason wait on wrinkled age !
My heart shall never countermand mine eye :

* Take away—being taken away.

<sup>b</sup> Respect—prudence,—in the sense of the original Latin, looking again.

Sad<sup>a</sup> pause and deep regard besem the sage;
My part is youth, and beats these from the stage:
Desire my pilot is, beauty my prize;
Then who fears sinking where such treasure lies?<sup>b</sup>

As corn o'ergrown by weeds, so heedful fear
Is almost chok'd by unresisted lust.
Away he steals with open listening ear,
Full of foul hope, and full of fond mistrust;
Both which, as servitors to the unjust,
So cross him with their opposite persuasion,
That now he vows a league, and now invasion.

Within his thought her heavenly image sits,
And in the selfsame seat sits Collatine:
That eye which looks on her confounds his wits;
That eye which him beholds, as more divine,
Unto a view so false will not incline;
But with a pure appeal seeks to the heart,
Which once corrupted takes the worse part;

And therein heartens up his servile powers,
Who, flatter'd by their leader's jocund show,
Stuff up his lust, as minutes fill up hours;
And as their captain, so their pride doth grow,
Paying more slavish tribute than they owe.
By reprobate desire thus madly led,
The Roman lord marcheth to Lucrece's bed.

The locks between her chamber and his will,
Each one by him enforc'd, retires his ward;
But as they open they all rate his ill,
Which drives the creeping thief to some regard;
The threshold grates the door to have him heard;
Night-wand'ring weasels shriek to see him there;
They fright him, yet he still pursues his fear.

As each unwilling portal yields him way,
Through little vents and crannies of the place
The wind wars with his torch, to make him stay,
And blows the smoke of it into his face,
Extinguishing his conduct<sup>c</sup> in this case;
But his hot heart, which fond desire doth scorch,
Puffs forth another wind that fires the torch;

And being lighted, by the light he spies
Lucretia's glove, wherein her needle sticks;
He takes it from the rushes where it lies,
And griping it, the need<sup>c</sup> his finger pricks:
As who should say, this glove to wanton tricks
Is not inur'd; return again in haste;
Thou seest our mistress' ornaments are chaste.

But all these poor forbiddings could not stay him;
He in the worst sense construes their denial:
The doors, the wind, the glove that did delay him,
He takes for accidental things of trial;
Or as those bars which stop the hourly dial,
Who with a lingering stay his course doth let,<sup>d</sup>
Till every minute pays the hour his debt.

"So, so," quoth he, "these lets attend the time,
Like little frosts that sometime threat the spring,
To add a more rejoicing to the prime,
And give the sneaped<sup>e</sup> birds more cause to sing.
Pain pays the income of each precious thing;
Huge rocks, high winds, strong pirates, shelves and sands,
The merchant fears, ere rich at home he lands."<sup>f</sup>

Now is he come unto the chamber door
That shuts him from the heaven of his thought,
Which with a yielding latch, and with no more,

<sup>a</sup> Sad—grave. <sup>b</sup> Conduct—conductor. <sup>c</sup> Need—needle.
<sup>d</sup> Let—obstruct. <sup>e</sup> Sneaped—checked.

Hath barr'd him from the blessed thing he sought,
So from himself impiety hath wrought,
That for his prey to pray he doth begin,
As if the heaven should countenance his sin.

But in the midst of his unfruitful prayer,
Having solicited the eternal power,
That his foul thoughts might compass his fair fair,
And they would stand auspicious to the hour,
And they would stand auspicious to the hour,
Even there he starts:—quoth he, "I must deflower;
The powers to whom I pray abhor this fact,
How can they then assist me in the act?"

"Then Love and Fortune be my gods, my guide!
My will is back'd with resolution;
Thoughts are but dreams till their effects be tried,
The blackest sin is clear'd with absolution;
Against love's fire fear's frost hath dissolution.
The eye of heaven is out, and misty night
Covers the shame that follows sweet delight."

This said, his guilty hand pluck'd up the latch,
And with his knee the door he opens wide:
The dove sleeps fast that this night-owl will catch;
Thus treason works ere traitors be espied.
Who sees the lurking serpent steps aside;
But she, sound sleeping, fearing no such thing,
Lies at the mercy of his mortal sting.

Into the chamber wickedly he stalks,<sup>g</sup>
And gazeth on her yet unstained bed.
The curtains being close, about he walks,
Rolling his greedy eyeballs in his head:
By their high treason is his heart misled;
Which gives the watchword to his hand full set,
To draw the cloud that hides the silver moon.

Look, as the fair and fiery-pointed sun,
Rushing from forth a cloud, bereaves our sight;
Even so, the curtain drawn, his eyes begun
To wink, being blinded with a greater light:
Whether it is that she reflects so bright,
That dazzleth them, or else some shame supposed;
But blind they are, and keep themselves enclosed.

O, had they in that darksome prison died,
Then had they seen the period of their ill!
Then Collatine again by Lucrece's side
In his clear bed might have reposed still;
But they must ope, this blessed league to kill
And holy-thoughted Lucrece to their sight
Must sell her joy, her life, her world's delight.

Her lily hand her rosy cheek lies under,
Cozening the pillow of a lawful kiss;
Who therefore angry, seems to part in under,
Swelling on either side to want his bliss;
Between whose hills her head entomb'd is:
Where, like a virtuous monument, she lies,
To be admir'd of lewd unhallow'd eyes.

Without the bed her other fair hand was,
On the green coverlet; whose perfect white
Show'd like an April daisy on the grass,
With pearly sweat, resembling dew of night.
Her eyes, like marigolds, had sheath'd their light,
And canopied in darkness sweetly lay,
Till they might open to adorn the day.

Her hair, like golden threads, play'd with her head:
O modest wantons! wanton modesty!
Showing life's triumph in the map of death.

<sup>g</sup> Stalks. To stalk literally means, to go warily or softly. It is the Anglo-Saxon stalcen—peducantia ire. The hawk creeps upon the birds stalks, and his stalking here takes its name from the character of the fowler's movement.

ath's dim look in life's mortality :
 her sleep themselves so beautify,
 between them twain there were no strife,
 that life liv'd in death, and death in life.

asts, like ivory globes circled with blue,
 of maiden worlds unconquered,
 their lord no bearing yoke they knew,
 in by oath they truly honoured.
 worlds in Tarquin new ambition bred :
 like a foul usurper, went about this fair throne to heave the owner out.

ould he see but mightily he noted ?
 did he note but strongly he desir'd ?
 he beheld on that he firmly doted,
 his will his wilful eye he tir'd.*
 more than admiration he admir'd azure veins, her alabaster skin,
 coral lips, her snow-white dimpled chin.

grim lion fawneth o'er his prey, hunger by the conquest satisfied,
 this sleeping soul doth Tarquin stay,
 re of lust by gazing qualified ;
 L, not suppress'd ; for standing by her side,
 eye, which late this mutiny restrains,
 a greater uproar tempts his veins :

ey, like straggling slaves for pillage fighting,
 ate vassals, fell exploits effecting,
 dy death and ravishment delighting, ildren's tears, nor mothers' groans respecting,
 n their pride, the onset still expecting :
 n his beating heart, alarm striking,
 s the hot charge, and bids them do their liking.

umming heart cheers up his burning eye,
 e commends the leading to his hand ;
 nd, as proud of such a dignity,
 g with pride, march'd on to make his stand bare breast, the heart of all her land ;
 se ranks of blue veins, as his hand did scale,
 their round turrets destitute and pale.

nustering to the quiet cabinet their dear governess and lady lie her she is dreadfully beset, ight her with confusion of their cries :
 uch amaz'd, breaks ope her lock'd-up eyes,
 peeping forth this tumult to behold,
 by his flaming torch dimm'd and controll'd.

er as one in dead of night
 orth dull sleep by dreadful fancy waking,
 links she bath beheld some ghastly sprite, grim aspect sets every joint a shaking ;
 error 't is ! but she, in worsen taking,
 sleep disturbed, heedfully doth view sight which makes supposed terror true.

'd and confounded in a thousand fears,
 a new-kill'd bird she trembling lies ;
 res not look ; yet, winking, there appears shifting antics, ugly in her eyes :
 adows are the weak brain's forgeries :
 s, angry that the eyes fly from their lights,
 arkness daunts them with more dreadful sights.

nd, that yet remains upon her breast,
 ram, to batter such an ivory wall !
 el her heart, poor citizen, distress'd,
 ling itself to death, rise up and fall,
 her bulk, that his hand shakes withal.

* d—astiated, glitted—as a falcon stirs on his prey.
 † Bulk—the body, the whole mass.

This moves in him more rage, and lesser pity,
 To make the breach, and enter this sweet city.

First, like a trumpet, doth his tongue begin
 To sound a parley to his heartless foe,
 Who o'er the white sheet peers her whiter chin,
 The reason of this rash alarm to know,
 Which he by dumb demeanour seeks to show ;
 But she with vehement prayers urgeth still Under what colour he commits this ill.

Thus he replies : " The colour in thy face (That even for anger makes the lily pale,
 And the red rose blush at her own disgrace)
 Shall plead for me, and tell my loving tale :
 Under that colour am I come to scale
 Thy never-conquer'd fort ; the fault is thine,
 For those thine eyes betray thee unto mine.

" Thus I forestall thee, if thou mean to chide :
 Thy beauty hath ensnar'd thee to this night,
 Where thou with patience must my will abide,
 My will that marks thee for my earth's delight,
 Which I to conquer sought with all my might ;
 But as reproof and reason beat it dead,
 By thy bright beauty was it newly bred.

" I see what crosses my attempt will bring ;
 I know what thorns the growing rose defends ;
 I think the honey guarded with a sting :
 All this, beforehand, counsel comprehends :
 But will is deaf, and hears no heedful friends ;
 Only he hath an eye to gaze on beauty,
 And dotes on what he looks, 'gainst law or duty.

" I have debated, even in my soul,
 What wrong, what shame, what sorrow I shall breed ;
 But nothing can Affection's course control,
 Or stop the headlong fury of his speed.
 I know repentant tears ensue the deed,
 Reproach, disdain, and deadly enmity ;
 Yet strive I to embrace mine infamy."

This said, he shakes aloft his Roman blade,
 Which, like a falcon towering in the skies,
 Coucheth* the fowl below with his wing's shade,
 Whose crooked beak threats if he mount he dies :
 So under his insulting falchion lies Harmless Lucretia, marking what he tells With trembling fear, as fowl hear falcon's bells.

" Lucrece," quoth he, " this night I must enjoy thee :
 If thou deny, then force must work my way,
 For in thy bed I purpose to destroy thee ;
 That done, some worthless slave of thine I'll slay,
 To kill thine honour with thy life's decay ;
 And in thy dead arms do I mean to place him,
 Swearing I slew him, seeing thee embrace him.

" So thy surviving husband shall remain
 The scornful mark of every open eye ;
 Thy kinsmen hang their heads at this disdain,
 Thy issue blurr'd with nameless bastardy :
 And thou, the author of their obloquy,
 Shalt have thy trespass cited up in rhymes,
 And sung by children in succeeding times.

" But if thou yield I rest thy secret friend :
 The fault unknown is as a thought unacted ;
 A little harm, done to a great good end,
 For lawful policy remains enacted.
 The poisonous simple sometimes is compacted
 In a pure compound ; being so applied
 His venom in effect is purified.

* Coucheth—causes to crouch.

"Then for thy husband and thy children's sake,
Tender<sup>a</sup> my suit: bequeath not to their lot
The shame that from them no device can take,
The blemish that will never be forgot;
Worse than a slavish wipe, or birth-hour's blot:<sup>b</sup>
For marks descried in men's nativity
Are nature's faults, not their own infamy."

Here with a cockatrice' dead-killing eye
He rouseth up himself, and makes a pause;
While she, the picture of pure piety,
Like a white hind under the grype's<sup>c</sup> sharp claws,
Pleads in a wilderness, where are no laws,
To the rough beast that knows no gentle right,
Nor aught obeys but his foul appetite:

But when a black-fac'd cloud the world doth threat,
In his dim mist the aspiring mountains hiding,
From earth's dark womb some gentle gust doth get,
Which blows these pitchy vapours from their biding,
Hindering their present fall by this dividing;
So his unhallow'd haste her words delays,
And moody Pluto winks while Orpheus plays.

Yet, foul night-waking cat, he doth but dally,
While in his holdfast foot the weak mouse panteth;
Her sad behaviour feeds his vulture folly,
A swallowing gulf that even in plenty wanteth:
His ear her prayers admits, but his heart granteth
No penetrable entrance to her plaining:
Tears harden lust, though marble wear with raining.

Her pity-pleading eyes are sadly fix'd
In the remorseless wrinkles of his face;
Her modest eloquence with sighs is mix'd,
Which to her oratory adds more grace.
She puts the period often from his place,
And 'midst the sentence so her accent breaks,
That twice she doth begin ere once she speaks.

She conjures him by high almighty Jove,
By knighthood, gentry, and sweet friendship's oath,
By her untimely tears, her husband's love,
By holy human law, and common troth,
By heaven and earth, and all the power of both,
That to his borrow'd bed he make retire,
And stoop to honour, not to foul desire.

Quoth she, "Reward not hospitality
With such black payment as thou hast pretended;<sup>d</sup>
Mud not the fountain that gave drink to thee;
Mar not the thing that cannot be amended;
End thy ill aim, before thy shoot be ended:
He is no woodman that doth bend his bow
To strike a poor unseasonable doe.

"My husband is thy friend, for his sake spare me;
Thyself art mighty, for thine own sake leave me;
Myself a weakling, do not then ensnare me;
Thou look'st not like deceit; do not deceive me:
My sighs, like whirlwinds, labour hence to heave
thee.

If ever man were mov'd with woman's moans,
Be moved with my tears, my sighs, my groans:

"All which together, like a troubled ocean,
Beat at thy rocky and wreck-threatening heart;
To soften it with their continual motion;
For stones dissolv'd to water do convert.
O, if no harder than a stone thou art,

<sup>a</sup> Tender—heed, regard.

<sup>b</sup> Birth-hour's blot—corporal blemish.

<sup>c</sup> Stevens says the grype is properly the griffin. But in the passage before us, as in the early English writers, the word is applied to birds of prey,—the eagle especially.

<sup>d</sup> Pretended—proposed.

Melt at my tears, and be compassionate!
Soft pity enters at an iron gate.

"In Tarquin's likeness I did entertain thee;
Hast thou put on his shape to do him shame?
To all the host of heaven I complain me,
Thou wrong'st his honour, wound'st his princely name.
Thou art not what thou seem'st; and if the same
Thou seem'st not what thou art, a god, a king;
For kings like gods should govern everything.

"How will thy shame be seeded in thine age,
When thus thy vices bud before thy spring!
If in thy hope thou dar'st do such outrage,
What dar'st thou not when once thou art a king!
O be remember'd, no outrageous thing
From vassal actors can be wip'd away;
Then kings' misdeeds cannot be hid in clay.

"This deed will make thee only lov'd for fear,
But happy monarchs still are fear'd for love;
With foul offenders thou perforce must bear,
When they in thee the like offences prove:
If but for fear of this thy will remove;
For princes are the glass, the school, the book,
Where subjects' eyes do learn, do read, do look.

"And wilt thou be the school where Lust shall learn!
Must he in thee read lectures of such shame?
Wilt thou be glass, wherein it shall discern Authority for sin, warrant for blame,
To privilege dishonour in thy name?
Thou back'st reproach against long-lived laud,
And mak'st fair reputation but a bawd.

"Hast thou command? by him that gave it thee,
From a pure heart command thy rebel will:
Draw not thy sword to guard iniquity,
For it was lent thee all that brood to kill.
Thy princely office how canst thou fulfil,
When, pattern'd by thy fault, foul Sin may say,
He learn'd to sin, and thou didst teach the way!

"Think but how vile a spectacle it were
To view thy present trespass in another.
Men's faults do seldom to themselves appear;
Their own transgressions partially they smother:
This guilt would seem death-worthy in thy brother.
O how are they wrapp'd in with infamies,
That from their own misdeeds asquance their eyes!

"To thee, to thee, my heav'd-up hands appeal,
Not to seducing lust, thy rash reliev;
I sue for exil'd majesty's repeal;<sup>e</sup>
Let him return, and flattering thoughts retire:
His true respect will 'prison false desire,
And wipe the dim mist from thy dotting eyes,
That thou shalt see thy state, and pity mine."

"Have done," quoth he; "my uncontrolled tide Turns not, but swells the higher by this let.
Small lights are soon blown out, huge fires abide,
And with the wind in greater fury fret:
The petty streams that pay a daily debt
To their salt sovereign, with their fresh falls' lute, Add to his flow, but alter not his taste."

"Thou art," quoth she, "a sea, a sovereign king,
And lo, there falls into thy boundless flood
Black lust, dishonour, shame, misgoverning,
Who seek to stain the ocean of thy blood.
If all these petty ills shall change thy good,
Thy sea within a puddle's womb is born'd,
And not the puddle in thy sea dispers'd.

<sup>e</sup> Repeal—recall; from the French rappeir.

hall these slaves be king, and thou their slave;
nobly base, they basely dignified;
their fair life, and they thy fouler grave;
loathed in their shame, they in thy pride:
less thing should not the greater hide;
cedar stoops not to the base shrub's foot,
low shrubs wither at the cedar's root.

et thy thoughts, low vassals to thy state"—
more," quoth he, "by heaven, I will not hear thee:
to my love; if not, enforced hate,
d of love's coy touch, shall rudely tear thee;
ions, despitefully I mean to bear thee to the base bed of some rascal groom, be thy partner in this shameful doom."

aid, he sets his foot upon the light,
ght and lust are deadly enemies:
folded up in blind concealing night,
most unseen, then most doth tyrannize.
olf hath seiz'd his prey, the poor lamb cries
l with her own white fleece her voice controll'd ombs her outcry in her lips' sweet fold:

ith the nightly linen that she wears ns her piteous clamours in her head;
g his hot face in the chastest tears
ver modest eyes with sorrow shed.
t prone<sup>a</sup> lust should stain so pure a bed!
spots whereof could weeping purify,
tears should drop on them perpetually.

se hath lost a dearer thing than life,
e hath won what he would lose again,
breed league doth force a further strife,
nomentary joy breeds months of pain,
ot desire converts to cold disdain:
e Chastity is rifled of her store,
l Lust, the thief, far poorer than before.

as the full-fed hound or gorged hawk,
for tender smell or speedy flight,
slow pursuit, or altogether balk
rey wherein by nature they delight;
feit-taking Tarquin fares this night:
taste delicious, in digestion souring,
ours his will that liv'd by foul devouring.

per sin than bottomless conceit
mprehend in still imagination!
en desire must vomit his receipt,
can see his own abomination.
lust is in his pride no exclamation curb his heat, or rein his rash desire, like a jade, self-will himself doth tire.

sen with lank and lean discolour'd cheek,
heavy eye, knit brow, and strengthless pace,
desire, all recreant, poor, and meek,
o a bankrupt beggar wails his case:
sh being proud, desire doth fight with grace,
there it revels; and when that decays, guilty rebel for remission prays.

as it with this faultful lord of Rome,
his accomplishment so hotly chas'd;
w against himself he sounds his doom,
rough the length of times he stands disgrac'd:
s, his soul's fair temple is defac'd;
whose weak ruins muster troops of cares,
ask the spotted princess how she fares.

ys, her subjects with foul insurrection batter'd down her consecrated wall, y their mortal fault brought in subjection

me—having inclination or propensity, and so self-willed, og.

Her immortality, and make her thrall
To living death, and pain perpetual:
Which in her prescience she controlled still,
But her foresight could not forestall their will.

Even in this thought through the dark night he stealeth,
A captive victor that hath lost in gain;
Bearing away the wound that nothing healeth,
The scar that will, despite of cure, remain,
Leaving his spoil perplex'd in greater pain.
She bears the load of lust he left behind,
And he the burthen of a guilty mind.

He like a thievish dog creeps sadly thence;
She like a wearied lamb lies panting there;
He scowls, and hates himself for his offence;
She, desperate, with her nails her flesh doth tear;
He faintly flies, sweating with guilty fear;
She stays exclaiming on the direful night;
He runs, and chides his vanish'd, loath'd delight.

He thence departs a heavy convertite;
She there remains a hopeless castaway;
He in his speed looks for the morning light;
She prays she never may behold the day;
"For day," quoth she, "night's scapes doth open lay;
And my true eyes have never practis'd how
To cloak offences with a cunning brow.

"They think not but that every eye can see
The same disgrace which they themselves behold;
And therefore would they still in darkness be,
To have their unseen sin remain untold;
For they their guilt with weeping will unfold,
And grave, like water, that doth eat in steel,
Upon my cheeks what helpless shame I feel."

Here she exclaims against repose and rest,
And bids her eyes hereafter still be blind.
She wakes her heart by beating on her breast,
And bids it leap from thence, where it may find
Some purer chest, to close so pure a mind.
Frantic with grief thus breathes she forth her spite
Against the unseen secrecy of night:

"O comfort-killing night, image of hell!
Dim register and notary of shame!
Black stage for tragedies and murders fell!
Vast sin-concealing chaos! nurse of blame!
Blind muffled bawd! dark harbour for defame!
Grim cave of death, whispering conspirator,
With close-tongued treason and the ravisher!

"O hateful, vaporous, and foggy night,
Since thou art guilty of my cureless crime,
Muster thy mists to meet the eastern light,
Make war against proportion'd course of time!
Or if thou wilt permit the sun to climb
His wonted height, yet ere he go to bed,
Knit poisonous clouds about his golden head.

"With rotten damps ravish the morning air;
Let their exhal'd unwholesome breaths make sick
The life of purity, the supreme fair,
Ere he arrive his weary noontide prick:
And let thy misty vapours march so thick,
That in their smoky ranks his smother'd light
May set at noon, and make perpetual night.

"Were Tarquin night, (as he is but night's child),
The silver-shining queen he would distain;
Her twinkling handmaids too, by him defil'd,
Through night's black bosom should not peep again;
So should I have copartners in my pain:

<sup>a</sup> Noontide peick—the point of noon.

And fellowship in woe doth woe assuage,
As palmers' coat makes short their pilgrimage.

"Where<sup>a</sup> now I have no one to blush with me,
To cross their arms, and hang their heads with mine,
To mask their brows, and hide their infamy;
But I alone alone must sit and pine,
Seasoning the earth with showers of silver brine,
Mingling my talk with tears, my grief with groans,
Poor wasting monuments of lasting moans.

"O night, thou furnace of foul-reeking smoke,
Let not the jealous day behold that face
Which underneath thy black all-hiding cloak Immodestly lies martyr'd with disgrace!
Keep still possession of thy gloomy place,
That all the faults w<sup>ich</sup> in thy reign are made
May likewise be sepulchred<sup>b</sup> in thy shade!

"Make me not object to the tell-tale day!
The light will show, character'd<sup>c</sup> in my brow,
The story of sweet chastity's decay,
The impious breach of holy wedlock vow:
Yea, the illiterate, that know not how
To cipher what is writ in learned books,
Will quote<sup>d</sup> my loathsome trespass in my looks.

"The nurse, to still her child, will tell my story,
And fright her crying babe with Tarquin's name,
The orator, to deck his oratory,
Will couple my reproach to Tarquin's shame:
Feast-finding minstrels, tuning my defame,
Will tie the hearers to attend each line,
How Tarquin wronged me, I Collatine.

"Let my good name, that senseless reputation,
For Collatine's dear love be kept unspotted:
If that be made a theme for disputation,
The branches of another root are rotted,
And undeserv'd reproach to him allotted,
That is as clear from this attain of mine,
As I, ere this, was pure to Collatine.

"O unseen shame! invisible disgrace!
O unfelt sore! crest-wounding, private scar!
Reproach is stamp'd in Collatinus' face,
And Tarquin's eye may read the mot<sup>e</sup> afar,
How he in peace is wounded, not in war.
Alas, how many bear such shameful blows,
Which not themselves but he that gives them
knows!

"If, Collatine, thine honour lay in me,
From me by strong assault it is bereft.
My honey lost, and I, a drone-like bee,
Have no perfection of my summer left,
But robb'd and ransack'd by injurious theft:
In thy weak hive a wandering wasp hath crept,
And suck'd the honey which thy chaste bee kept.

"Yet am I guilty of thy honour's wrack,— Yet for thy honour did I entertain him;
Coming from thee, I could not put him back,
For it had been dishonour to disdain him:
Besides of weariness he did complain him,
And talk'd of virtue;—O, unlook'd for evil,
When virtue is profan'd in such a devil!

<sup>a</sup> Where—whereas.

<sup>b</sup> Sepulchred. Milton uses the word with the same accent, in his lines on Shakspeare:—

"And so sepulchred in such pomp does lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die."

<sup>c</sup> Character'd. Here again is an accentuation different from the present, but which is common to all Shakspeare's contemporaries.

<sup>d</sup> Quote—observe.

<sup>e</sup> Mot—motto.

"Why should the worm intrude the maiden bed?
Or hateful cuckoos hatch in sparrows' nests?
Or toads infect fair fountains with venom mud?
Or tyrant folly lurk in gentle breasts?<sup>a</sup>
Or kings be breakers of their own behests?
But no perfection is so absolute,
That some impurity doth not pollute.

"The aged man that coffers up his gold
Is plagued with cramps, and gout, and painful fits,
And scarce hath eyes his treasure to behold,
But like still-pining Tantalus he sits,
And useless barns the harvest of his wits;
Having no other pleasure of his gain
But torment that it cannot cure his pain

"So then he bath it, when he cannot use it,
And leaves it to be master'd by his young,
Who in their pride do presently abuse it:
Their father was too weak, and they too strong,
To hold their curst-blessed fortune long.
The sweets we wish for turn to loathed sour,
Even in the moment that we call them ours.

"Unruly blasts wait on the tender spring;
Unwholesome weeds take root with precious flowers;
The adder hisses where the sweet birds sing:
What virtue breeds iniquity devours:
We have no good that we can say is ours.
But ill-annexed Opportunity
Or kills his life, or else his quality.

"O Opportunity! thy guilt is great:
'T is thou that execut'st the traitor's treason;
Thou sett'st the wolf where he the lamb may get;
Whoever plots the sin, thou point'st the season;
'T is thou that spurn'st at right, at law, at reason;
And in thy shady cell, where none may spy him,
Sits Sin, to seize the souls that wander by him.

"Thou mak'st the vestal violate her oath;
Thou blow'st the fire when temperance is thaw'd;
Thou smother'st honesty, thou murder'st truth;
Thou foul abetter! thou notorious bawd;
Thou plantest scandal, and displacest laud:
Thou ravisher, thou traitor, thou false thief,
Thy honey turns to gall, thy joy to grief!

"Thy secret pleasure turns to open shame,
Thy private feasting to a public fast;
Thy smoothing<sup>b</sup> titles to a ragged<sup>c</sup> name;
Thy sugar'd tongue to bitter wormwood taste:
Thy violent vanities can never last.
How comes it then, vile Opportunity,
Being so bad, such numbers seek for thee?

"When wilt thou be the humble suppliant's friend,
And bring him where his suit may be obtain'd?
When wilt thou sort<sup>d</sup> an hour great strifes to end?
Or free that soul which wretchedness hath chain'd?
Give physic to the sick, ease to the pain'd?
The poor, lame, blind, halt, creep, cry out for thee;
But they ne'er meet with Opportunity.

"The patient dies while the physician sleeps;
The orphan pines while the oppressor feeds;
Justice is feasting while the widow weeps;
Advice is sporting while infection breeds;<sup>e</sup>
Thou grant'st no time for charitable deeds:

<sup>a</sup> Folly is here used in the sense of wile or deceit; and poth is that of well-born.

<sup>b</sup> Smoothing—flattering.

<sup>c</sup> Ragged is here used in the sense of contumacious.

<sup>d</sup> Sort—assign, appropriate.

<sup>e</sup> Advice is here used in the sense of government, managing

or civil; and the line too correctly describes the carelessness of those in high places, who abated not their feasting and their revelry while pestilence was doing its terrible work around them.

th, envy, treason, rape, and murder's rages,
heinous hours wait on them as their pages.

n truth and virtue have to do with thee sand crosses keep them from thy aid ;
ay thy help : but Sin ne'er gives a fee,
tis comes ; and thou art well appay'd *
l to hear as grant what he hath said.
Collatine would else have come to me n Tarquin did, but he was stay'd by thee.

ty thou art of murder and of theft ;
of perjury and subornation ;
of treason, forgery, and shift ;
of incest, that abomination :
essary by thine inclination
ll sins past, and all that are to come,
n the creation to the general doom.

shapen Time, copesmate of ugly night,
subtle post, carrier of grisly care,
f youth, false slave to false delight,
atch of woes, sin's pack-horse, virtue's snare ;
urset all, and murderest all that are.
ar me then, injurious, shifting Time !
ilty of my death, since of my crime.

hath thy servant, Opportunity,
d the hours thou gav'st me to repose ?
I'd my fortunes, and enchained me less date of never-ending woes ?
office is to fine <sup>b</sup> the bate of foes ;
at up errors by opinion bred,
spend the dowry of a lawful bed.

's glory is to calm contending kings,
nask falsehood, and bring truth to light,
op the seal of time in aged things,
e the morn, and sentinel the night,
ng the wronger till he render right ;
uinate proud buildings with thy hours,
smear with dust their glittering golden towers :

l with worm-holes stately monuments,
oblivion with decay of things,
old books, and alter their contents,
ck the quills from ancient ravens' wings,
the old oak's sap, and cherish springs ;
poll antiquities of hammer'd steel,
turn the giddy round of Fortune's wheel ;

ow the beldame daughters of her daughter,
e the child a man, the man a child,
e the tiger that doth live by slaughter,
e the unicorn and lion wild,
k the subtle, in themselves beguil'd ;
beer the ploughman with increaseful crops,
waste huge stones with little water-drops.

work'st thou mischief in thy pilgrimage,
thou couldst return to make amends ?
or retiring <sup>d</sup> minute in an age purchase thee a thousand thousand friends,
g him wit that to bad debtors lends :
is dread night, wouldst thou one hour come back,
ld prevent this storm, and shun thy wrack !

ceaseless lackey to eternity,
me mischance cross Tarquin in his flight :
extremes beyond extremity,

ay'd—satisfied, pleased. <sup>b</sup> To fine—to bring to an end.
ags—shouts—applings.
ere is here used in the sense of coming back again.

To make him curse this cursed crimeful night :
Let ghastly shadows his lewd eyes affright ;
And the dire thought of his committed evil
Shape every bush a hideous shapeless devil.

“ Disturb his hours of rest with restless trances,
Afflict him in his bed with bedrid groans ;
Let there bechance him pitiful mischances,
To make him moan, but pity not his moans :
Stone him with harden'd hearts, harder than stones ;
And let mild women to him lose their mildness,
Wilder to him than tigers in their wildness.

“ Let him have time to tear his curled hair,
Let him have time against himself to rave,
Let him have time of Time's help to despair,
Let him have time to live a loathed slave,
Let him have time a beggar's orts to crave ;
And time to see one that by alms doth live
Disdain to him disdain'd scraps to give.

“ Let him have time to see his friends his foes,
And merry fools to mock at him resort ;
Let him have time to mark how slow time goes
In time of sorrow, and how swift and short
His time of folly and his time of sport :
And ever let his unrecalling* crime
Have time to wail the abusing of his time.

“ O Time, thou tutor both to good and bad,
Teach me to curse him that thou taught'st this ill !
At his own shadow let the thief run mad !
Himself himself seek every hour to kill !
Such wretched hands such wretched blood should spill :
For who so base would such an office have
As slanderous death's-man to so base a slave ?

“ The baser is he, coming from a king,
To shame his hope with deeds degenerate.
The mightier man, the mightier is the thing
That makes him honour'd, or begets him hate ;
For greatest scandal waits on greatest state.
The moon being clouded presently is miss'd,
But little stars may hide them when they list.

“ The crow may bathe his coal-black wings in mire,
And unperceiv'd fly with the filth away ;
But if the like the snow-white swan desire,
The stain upon his silver down will stay.
Poor grooms are sightless night, kings glorious day.
Gnats are unnoted wheresoe'er they fly,
But eagles gaz'd upon with every eye.

“ Out, idle words, servants to shallow fools !
Unprofitable sounds, weak arbitrators !
Busy yourselves in skill-contending schools,
Debate where leisure serves with dull debaters ;
To trembling clients be you mediators :
For me, I force <sup>b</sup> not argument a straw,
Since that my case is past the help of law.

“ In vain I rail at Opportunity,
At time, at Tarquin, and uncheerful night ;
In vain I cavil with my infamy,
In vain I spurn at my confirm'd despite :
This helpless smoke of words doth me no right.
The remedy indeed to do me good,
Is to let forth my foul, defiled blood.

“ Poor hand, why quiver'st thou at this decree ?
Honour thyself to rid me of this shame ;
For if I die my honour lives in thee,

* Unrecalling—not to be recalled.

<sup>b</sup> Force is here used in the sense of value or worth.

But if I live thou liv'st in my defame :
 Since thou couldst not defend thy loyal dame,
 And wast afraid to scratch her wicked foe,
 Kill both thyself and her for yielding so."

This said, from her betumbled couch she starteth,
 To find some desperate instrument of death :
 But this no-slaughter-house no tool imparteth,
 To make more vent for passage of her breath,
 Which thronging through her lips so vanisheth
 As smoke from Ætna, that in air consumes,
 Or that which from discharged cannon fumes.

"In vain," quoth she, "I live and seek in vain
 Some happy mean to end a hapless life.
 I fear'd by Tarquin's falchion to be slain,
 Yet for the selfsame purpose seek a knife :
 But when I fear'd I was a loyal wife ;
 So am I now :—O no, that cannot be ;
 Of that true type hath Tarquin rifled me.

"O ! that is gone for which I sought to live,
 And therefore now I need not fear to die.
 To clear this spot by death, at least I give
 A badge of fame to slander's livery ;"
 A dying life to living infamy ;
 Poor helpless help, the treasure stolen away,
 To burn the guiltless casket where it lay !

"Well, well, dear Collatine, thou shalt not know
 The stained taste of violated troth ;
 I will not wrong thy true affection so
 To flatter thee with an infringed oath ;
 This bastard graff shall never come to growth :
 He shall not boast who did thy stock pollute
 That thou art doting father of his fruit.

"Nor shall he smile at thee in secret thought,
 Nor laugh with his companions at thy state ;
 But thou shalt know thy interest was not bought Basely with gold, but stolen from forth thy gate.
 For me, I am the mistress of my fate,
 And with my trespass never will dispense,
 Till life to death acquit my fore'd offence.

"I will not poison thee with my attaind,
 Nor fold my fault in cleanly-coin'd excuses ;
 My sable ground of sin I will not paint,
 To hide the truth of this false night's abuses :
 My tongue shall utter all : mine eyes like sluices,
 As from a mountain-spring that feeds a dale,
 Shall gush pure streams to purge my impure tale."

By this, lamenting Philomel had ended
 The well-tun'd warble of her nightly sorrow,
 And solemn night with slow-sad gait descended
 To ugly hell ; when lo, the blushing morrow
 Lends light to all fair eyes that light will borrow ;
 But cloudy Lucrece shames herself to see,
 And therefore still in night would cloister'd be.

Revealing day through every cranny spies,
 And seems to point her out where she sits weeping ;
 To whom she sobbing speaks : "O eye of eyes,
 Why priest thou through my window? leave thy peeping ;
 Mock with thy tickling beams eyes that are sleeping :
 Brand not my forehead with thy piercing light,
 For day hath nought to do what 's done by night."

Thus cavils she with everything she sees :
 True grief is fond<sup>b</sup> and testy as a child,
 Who wayward once, his mood with nought agrees.

<sup>a</sup> An allusion to the badges which servants or retainers of families of rank wore on their liveries.
<sup>b</sup> Fond—foolish.

Old woes, not infant sorrows, bear them mild ;
 Continuance tames the one ; the other wild,
 Like an unpractis'd swimmer plunging still
 With too much labour drowns for want of skill

So she, deep-drenched in a sea of care,
 Holds disputation with each thing she views,
 And to herself all sorrow doth compare ;
 No object but her passion's strength renews ;
 And as one shifts, another straight ensues :
 Sometime her grief is dumb, and hath no words ;
 Sometime 't is mad, and too much talk affords.

The little birds that tune their morning's joy
 Make her moans mad with their sweet melody.
 For mirth doth search the bottom of annoy ;
 Sad souls are slain in merry company ;
 Grief best is pleas'd with grief's society :
 True sorrow then is feelingly suffic'd
 When with like semblance it is sympathis'd.

'T is double death to drown in ken of shore ;
 He ten times pines that pines beholding dead ;
 To see the salve doth make the wound ache more ;
 Great grief grieves most at that would do it good ;
 Deep woes roll forward like a gentle flood,
 Who, being stopp'd, the bounding banks overflow :
 Grief dallied with nor law nor limit knows.

"You mocking birds," quoth she, "your tunes entice Within your hollow-swell'd feather'd breasts,
 And in my hearing be you mute and dumb !
 (My restless discord loves no stops nor rests ;
 A woeful hostess brooks not merry guests :)
 Relish your nimble notes to pleasing ears ;
 Distress likes dumps<sup>a</sup> when time is kept with hours

"Come, Philomel, that sing'st of ravishment,
 Make thy sad grove in my dishevell'd hair.
 As the dank earth weeps at thy languishment,
 So I at each sad strain will strain a tear,
 And with deep groans the diapason bear :
 For burthen-wise I 'll hum on Tarquin still,
 While thou on Tereus descant'st better skill."

"And whiles against a thorn thou bear'st thy part,
 To keep thy sharp woes waking, wretched I,
 To imitate thee well, against my heart
 Will fix a sharp knife, to affright mine eye ;
 Who, if it wink, shall thereon fall and die.
 These means, as frets upon an instrument,
 Shall tune our heartstrings to true languishment.

"And for, poor bird, thou sing'st not in the day,
 As shaming any eye should thee behold,
 Some dark deep desert, seated from the way,
 That knows nor parching heat nor freezing cold,
 We will find out ; and there we will unfold
 To creatures stern sad tunes, to change their kind :
 Since men prove beasts let beasts bear gentle mind."

As the poor frighted deer, that stands at gaze,
 Wildly determining which way to fly,
 Or one encompass'd with a winding maze,
 That cannot tread the way out readily ;
 So with herself is she in mutiny,
 To live or die which of the twain were better.
 When life is sham'd, and Death reproach's desert.

"To kill myself," quoth she, "alack ! what end'st,
 But with my body my poor soul's pollution ?
 They that lose half with greater patience bear it

<sup>a</sup> Dumps—melancholy airs.
<sup>b</sup> Better skill. We must probably here understand skill better skill.

hey whose whole is swallow'd in confusion,
 other tries a merciless conclusion
 , having two sweet babes, when death takes one,
 slay the other, and be nurse to none.

ody or my soul, which was the dearer?
 he one pure, the other made divine.
 love of either to myself was nearer?
 both were kept for heaven and Collatine.
 ! the bark peel'd from the lofty pine,
 eaves will wither, and his sap decay;
 ust my soul, her bark being peel'd away.

ouse is sack'd, her quiet interrupted,
 nsion batter'd by the enemy;
 red temple spotted, spoil'd, corrupted,
 engirt with daring infamy:
 t it not be call'd impiety
 this blemish'd fort I make some hole
 agh which I may convey this troubled soul.

ie I will not till my Collatine eard the cause of my untimely death;
 may vow, in that sad hour of mine,
 e on him that made me stop my breath.
 ned blood to Tarquin I'll bequeath,
 h by him tainted shall for him be spent,
 as his due writ in my testament.

onour I'll bequeath unto the knife
 unds my body so dishonour'd.
 our to deprive dishonour'd life;
 will live, the other being dead:
 ame's ashes shall my fame be bred;
 y my death I murder shameful scorn:
 name so dead, mine honour is new-born.

lord of that dear jewel I have lost,
 gacy shall I bequeath to thee?
 lution, Love, shall be thy boast,
 e example thou reveng'd mayst be.
 rquin must be used, read it in me:
 If, thy friend, will kill myself, thy foe,
 for my sake, serve thou false Tarquin so.

rief abridgment of my will I make:
 and body to the skies and ground;
 lution, husband, do thou take;
 our be the knife's that makes my wound;
 ne be his that did my fame confound;
 ill my fame that lives disbursed be ose that live, and think no shame of me.

Collatine, shalt oversee this will;<sup>a</sup>
 s I overseen that thou shalt see it!
 el shall wash the slander of mine ill;
 s foul deed my life's fair end shall free it.
 it faint heart, but stoutly say, 'so be it.'
 to my hand; my hand shall conquer thee;
 dead, both die, and both shall victors be."

t of death when sadly she had laid,
 y'd the brinish pearl from her bright eyes,
 itou'd tongue she hoarsely call'd her maid, wift obedience to her mistress hies;
 -wing'd duty with thought's feathers flies.
 Lucrece' cheeks unto her maid seem so nter meads when sun doth melt their snow.

ress she doth give demure good-morrow,
 ft-slow tongue, true mark of modesty,
 s a sad look to her lady's sorrow,

ecutor of a will was sometimes called the overseer:
 essors often appointed overseers as well as exe-

(For why? her face wore sorrow's livery.)
 But durst not ask of her audaciously
 Why her two suns were cloud-eclipsed so,
 Nor why her fair cheeks over-wash'd with woe.

But as the earth doth weep, the sun being set,
 Each flower moisten'd like a melting eye;
 Even so the maid with swelling drops 'gan wet
 Her circled eyne, enforc'd by sympathy
 Of those fair suns, set in her mistress' sky,
 Who in a salt-wav'd ocean quench their light,
 Which makes the maid weep like the dewy night.

A pretty while these pretty creatures stand,
 Like ivory conduits coral cisterns filling:
 One justly weeps; the other takes in hand
 No cause, but company, of her drops spilling:
 Their gentle sex to weep are often willing;
 Grieving themselves to guess at others' smarts,
 And then they drown their eyes, or break their hearts.

For men have marble, women waxen minds,
 And therefore are they form'd as marble will;<sup>a</sup>
 The weak oppress'd, the impression of strange kinds
 Is form'd in them by force, by fraud, or skill:
 Then call them not the authors of their ill,
 No more than wax shall be accounted evil,
 Wherein is stamp'd the semblance of a devil.

Their smoothness, like a goodly champaign plain,
 Lays open all the little worms that creep;
 In men, as in a rough-grown grove, remain
 Cave-keeping evils that obscurely sleep:
 Through crystal walls each little mote will peep:
 Though men can cover crimes with bold stern looks,
 Poor women's faces are their own faults' books.

No man inveigh against the wither'd flower,
 But chide rough winter that the flower hath kill'd!
 Not that devour'd, but that which doth devour
 Is worthy blame. O, let it not be hild b
 Poor women's faults that they are so fullfill'd<sup>c</sup>
 With men's abuses! those proud lords, to blame,
 Make weak-made women tenants to their shame.

The precedent whereof in Lucrece view,
 Assail'd by night with circumstances strong
 Of present death, and shame that might ensue
 By that her death, to do her husband wrong:
 Such danger to resistance did belong,
 That dying fear through all her body spread;
 And who cannot abuse a body dead?

By this, mild patience bid fair Lucrece speak
 To the poor counterfeit<sup>d</sup> of her complaining:
 "My girl," quoth she, "on what occasion break
 Those tears from thee, that down thy cheeks are raining?
 If thou dost weep for grief of my sustaining,
 Know, gentle wench, it small avails my mood:
 If tears could help mine own would do me good.

"But tell me, girl, when went"—(and there she stay'd Till after a deep groan)<sup>e</sup> "Tarquin from hence?"
 "Madam, ere I was up," replied the maid,
 "The more to blame my sluggard negligence:
 Yet with the fault I thus far can dispense;
 Myself was stirring ere the break of day,
 And, ere I rose, was Tarquin gone away.

<sup>a</sup> Marble here stands for men, whose minds have just been compared to marble.

<sup>b</sup> Hild—held. Such a change for the sake of rhyme is frequent in Spenser.

<sup>c</sup> Fullfill'd—completely filled.

<sup>d</sup> Counterfeit—a likeness or copy.

"But, lady, if your maid may be so bold,
She would request to know your heaviness."
"O peace!" quoth Lucrece; "if it should be told,
The repetition cannot make it less;
For more it is than I can well express:
And that deep torture may be call'd a hell,
When more is felt than one hath power to tell.

"Go, get me hither paper, ink, and pen—
Yet save that labour, for I have them here.
What should I say?—One of my husband's men
Bid thou be ready, by and by, to bear
A letter to my lord, my love, my dear;
Bid him with speed prepare to carry it:
The cause craves haste, and it will soon be writ."

Her maid is gone, and she prepares to write,
First hovering o'er the paper with her quill:
Conceit and grief an eager combat fight;
What wit sets down is blotted straight with will;
This is too curious-good, this blunt and ill:
Much like a press of people at a door,
Through her inventions, which shall be before.

At last she thus begins:—"Thou worthy lord
Of that unworthy wife that greeteth thee,
Health to thy person! next vouchsafe to afford
(If ever, love, thy Lucrece thou wilt see)
Some present speed to come and visit me:
So I commend me from our house in grief,
My woes are tedious, though my words are brief."

Here folds she up the tenor of her woe,
Her certain sorrow writ uncertainly.
By this short schedule Collatine may know
Her grief, but not her grief's true quality;
She dares not thereof make discovery,
Lest he should hold it her own gross abuse.
Ere she with blood had stain'd her stain'd excuse.

Besides, the life and feeling of her passion
She hoards, to spend when he is by to hear her;
When sighs, and groans, and tears may grace the fashion
Of her disgrace, the better so to clear her
From that suspicion which the world might bear her.
To shun this blot, she would not blot the letter
With words, till action might become them better.

To see sad sights moves more than hear them told;
For then the eye interprets to the ear
The heavy motion that it doth behold,<sup>a</sup>
When every part a part of woe doth bear.
'T is but a part of sorrow that we hear:
Deep sounds make lesser noise than shallow fords.
And sorrow ebbs, being blown with wind of words.

Her letter now is seal'd, and on it writ,
"At Ardea to my lord with more than haste:"
The post attends, and she delivers it,
Charging the sour-fac'd groom to hie as fast
As lagging fowls before the northern blast.
Speed more than speed but dull and slow she deems:
Extremity still urgeth such extremes.

The homely villein court'sies to her low;
And blushing on her, with a steadfast eye
Receives the scroll, without or yea or no,
And forth with bashful innocence doth hie.
But they whose guilt within their bosoms lie
Imagine every eye beholds their blame;
For Lucrece thought he blush'd to see her shame;

When, silly groom! God wot, it was defect
Of spirit, life, and bold audacity.
Such harmless creatures have a true respect

<sup>a</sup> Motion—lump show.

To talk in deeds, while others saucily
Promise more speed, but do it leisurely:
Even so, this pattern of the worn-out age
Pawn'd honest looks, but laid no words to gage.

His kindled duty kindled her mistrust,
That two red fires in both their faces blaz'd;
She thought he blush'd, as knowing Tarquin's lust,
And, blushing with him, wistly on him gaz'd;
Her earnest eye did make him more amaz'd:
The more she saw the blood his cheeks replenish,
The more she thought he spied in her some blench.

But long she thinks till he return again,
And yet the duteous vassal scarce is gone.
The weary time she cannot entertain,
For now 't is stale to sigh, to weep, and groan:
So woe hath wearied woe, moan tired moan,
That she her plaints a little while doth stay,
Pausing for means to mourn some newer way.

At last she calls to mind where hangs a piece
Of skilful painting, made for Priam's Troy;
Before the which is drawn<sup>b</sup> the power of Greece,
For Helen's rape the city to destroy,
Threat'ning cloud-kissing Ilion with annoy;
Which the conceited<sup>c</sup> painter drew so proud,
As heaven (it seem'd) to kiss the turrets bow'd.

A thousand lamentable objects there,
In scorn of Nature, Art gave lifeless life:
Many a dry drop seem'd a weeping tear,
Shed for the slaughter'd husband by the wife;
The red blood reek'd to show the painter's strife;
And dying eyes gleam'd forth their ashy lights,
Like dying coals burnt out in tedious nights.

There might you see the labouring pioneer
Begrin'd with sweat, and smeared all with dust;
And from the towers of Troy there would appear
The very eyes of men through loopholes thrust,
Gazing upon the Greeks with little lust:
Such sweet observance in this work was had,
That one might see those far-off eyes look sad.

In great commanders grace and majesty
You might behold, triumphing in their faces;
In youth, quick bearing and dexterity;
And here and there the painter interlaces
Pale cowards, marching on with trembling faces;
Which heartless peasants did so well resemble,
That one would swear he saw them quake and tremble.

In Ajax and Ulysses, O what art
Of physiognomy might one behold!
The face of either cipher'd either's heart;
Their face their manners most expressly told:
In Ajax' eyes blunt rage and rigour roll'd;
But the mild glance that sly Ulysses lent
Show'd deep regard and smiling government.

There pleading might you see grave Nestor stand,
As 't were encouraging the Greeks to fight;
Making such sober action with his hand
That it beguil'd attention, charm'd the sight:
In speech, it seem'd, his beard all silver white
Wagg'd up and down, and from his lips did fly Thin winding breath, which pur'd up to the sky.

About him were a press of gaping faces,
Which seem'd to swallow up his sound advice;
All jointly listening, but with several graces.

<sup>a</sup> Drawn—drawn out into the field.

<sup>b</sup> Conceited—ingenious, imaginative.

some mermaid did their ears entice ;
high, some low, the painter was so nice :
scalps of many, almost hid behind,
jump up higher seem'd to mock the mind.

one man's hand lean'd on another's head,
one being shadow'd by his neighbour's ear ;
one being throng'd bears back, all boll'n<sup>a</sup> and red ;
er smother'd seems to pelt<sup>b</sup> and swear ;
in their rage such signs of rage they bear,
but for loss of Nestor's golden words,
seem'd they would debate with angry swords.

such imaginary work was there ;
fit deceitful, so compact, so kind,<sup>c</sup>
for Achilles' image stood his spear,
l in an armed hand ; himself, behind,
left unseen, save to the eye of mind :
and, a foot, a face, a leg, a head,
od for the whole to be imagined.

from the walls of strong-besieged Troy their brave hope, bold Hector, march'd to field, many Trojan mothers, sharing joy
e their youthful sons bright weapons wield ;
to their hope they such odd action yield,
at through their light joy seemed to appear ke bright things stain'd) a kind of heavy fear.

from the strond of Dardan where they fought,
mois' reedy banks, the red blood run,
e waves to imitate the battle sought swelling ridges ; and their ranks began ak upon the galled shore, and than<sup>d</sup> fire again, till meeting greater ranks
ey join, and shoot their foam at Simois' banks.

is well-painted piece is Lucrece come, id a face where all distress is stel'd.<sup>e</sup>
f she sees where cares have carved some, one where all distress and dolour dwell'd,
he despairing Hecuba beheld,
ring on Priam's wounds with her old eyes,
ich bleeding under Pyrrhus' proud foot lies.

r the painter had anatomiz'd
's ruin, beauty's wrack, and grim care's reign ;
heeks with chaps and wrinkles were disguis'd ;
at she was no semblance did remain :
blue blood, chang'd to black in every vein,
uting the spring that those shrunk pipes had fed,
w'd life imprison'd in a body dead.

is sad shadow Lucrece spends her eyes,
shapes her sorrow to the beldame's woes,
nothing wants to answer her but cries,
bitter words to ban her cruel foes :
ainter was no God to lend her those ;
d therefore Lucrece swears he did her wrong,
give her so much grief, and not a tongue.

r instrument," quoth she, " without a sound,
one thy woes with my lamenting tongue :
drop sweet balm in Priam's painted wound, ail on Pyrrhus that hath done him wrong,
with my tears quench Troy that burns so long ;

<sup>d</sup>—swollen

st—to be clamorous, to discharge hasty words as pellets.

<sup>ed</sup>—natural.

<sup>has</sup> used for then.

st<sup>d</sup>. A passage in the twenty-fourth Sonnet may ex-

be lines in the text :—

" Mine eye hath play'd the painter and hath stel'd

" Thy beauty's form in table of my heart."

ears to us that the word is connected in Shakspeare's with the word stille, the pencil by which forms are traced

and

And with my knife scratch out the angry eyes
Of all the Greeks that are thine enemies.

" Show me the strumpet that began this stir,
That with my nails her beauty I may tear.
Thy heat of lust, fond Paris, did incur
This load of wrath that burning Troy doth bear ;
Thy eye kindled the fire that burneth here :
And here in Troy, for trespass of thine eye,
The sire, the son, the dame, and daughter, die.

" Why should the private pleasure of some one Become the public plague of many mo :<sup>a</sup>
Let sin, alone committed, light alone
Upon his head that hath transgressed so.
Let guiltless souls be freed from guilty woe :
For one's offence why should so many fall,
To plague a private sin in general ?

" Lo, here weeps Hecuba, here Priam dies,
Here manly Hector faints, here Troilus swoonds ;<sup>b</sup>
Here friend by friend in bloody channel lies,
And friend to friend gives unadvised<sup>c</sup> wounds,
And one man's lust these many lives confounds ;<sup>d</sup>
Had doting Priam check'd his son's desire,
Troy had been bright with fame, and not with fire."

Here feelingly she weeps Troy's painted woes :
For sorrow, like a heavy-hanging bell,
Once set on ringing, with his own weight goes ;
Then little strength rings out the doleful knell :
So Lucrece set a-work sad tales doth tell
To pencill'd pensiveness and colour'd sorrow ;
She lends them words, and she their looks dots horror.

She throws her eyes about the painting, round,
And whom she finds forlorn she doth lament :
At last she sees a wretched image bound,
That piteous looks to Phrygian shepherds lent ;
His face, though full of cares, yet show'd content :
Onward to Troy with the blunt swains he goes,
So mild that Patience seem'd to scorn his woes.

In him the painter labour'd with his skill
To hide deceit, and give the harmless show
An humble gait, calm looks, eyes wailing still,
A brow unbent, that seem'd to welcome woe ;
Cheeks neither red nor pale, but mingled so
That blushing red no guilty instance gave,
Nor ashy pale the fear that false hearts have.

But, like a constant and confirmed devil,
He entertain'd a show so seeming just,
And therein so ensconce'd his secret evil,
That jealousy itself could not mistrust
False-creeping craft and perjury should thrust
Into so bright a day such black-fac'd storms,
Or blot with hell-born sin such saint-like forms.

The well-skill'd workman this mild image drew
For perjurd Sinon, whose enchanting story
The credulous old Priam after slew ;
Whose words, like wild-fire, burnt the shining glory
Of rich-built Ilion, that the skies were sorry,
And little stars shot from their fixed places,
When their glass fell wherein they view'd their faces.

This picture she advisedly<sup>e</sup> perus'd,
And chid the painter for his wondrous skill ;
Saying, some shape in Sinon's was abus'd,

<sup>a</sup> Mo—more.

<sup>b</sup> Swoonds—swoons. It is probable that the word was at usually pronounced. In Drayton swoond rhymes to wound.

<sup>c</sup> Unadvised—unknowing.

<sup>d</sup> Confounds is here used in the sense of destroys.

<sup>e</sup> Advisedly—attentively.

ecessary yieldings, but still pure in her poison'd closet yet endure."

the helpless merchant of this loss, sad declin'd, and voice damm'd up with woe,
d-set eyes, and wretched arms across,
his new-waxen pale begins to blow away that stops his answer so:
retched as he is he strives in vain;
he breathes out his breath drinks up again.

ugh an arch the violent roaring tide
the eye that doth behold his haste;
he eddy boundeth in his pride
the strait that forc'd him on so fast;
sent out, recall'd in rage, being past:
so he sighs, his sorrows make a saw,
ash grief on, and back the same grief draw.

speechless woe of his poor she attendeth,
untimely frenzy thus awaketh:
ord, thy sorrow to my sorrow lendeth power; no flood by raining slaketh.
too sensible thy passion maketh
feeling-painful: let it then suffice own one woe, one pair of weeping eyes.

or my sake, when I might charm thee so,
that was thy Lucrece,—now attend me;
lenly revenged on my foe,
nine, his own; suppose thou dost defend me hat is past: the help that thou shalt lend me
s all too late, yet let the traitor die;
paring justice feeds iniquity.

e I name him, you, fair lords," quoth she, ng to those that came with Collatine) plight your honourable faiths to me, rift pursuit to venge this wrong of mine;
a meritorious fair design
ase injustice with revengeful arms:
ats, by their oaths, should right poor ladies' harms."

request, with noble disposition esent lord began to promise aid,
d in knighthood to her imposition,
to hear the hateful foe bewray'd.
that yet her sad task hath not said, rotestation stops. "O speak," quoth she,
e may this forced stain be wip'd from me?"

is the quality of mine offence, onstrain'd with dreadful circumstance?
y pure mind with the foul act dispense,
declined honour to advance?
y terms acquit me from this chance?
oison'd fountain clears itself again;
why not I from this compelled stain?"

is, they all at once began to say,
y's stain her mind untainted clears;
rith a joyless smile she turns away
s, that map which deep impression bears misfortune, carv'd in it with tears.
no," quoth she, "no dame, hereafter living,
y excuse shall claim excuse's giving."

th a sigh, as if her heart would break,
ws forth Tarquin's name: "He, he," she says,
e than "he" her poor tongue could not speak;
r many accents and delays,
y breathings, sick and short assays, tters this: "He, he, fair lords. 'Tis he,
guiltes this hand to give this wound to me."

Even here she sheathed in her harmless breast
A harmful knife, that thence her soul unsheath'd;
That blow did bail it from the deep arrest
Of that polluted prison where it breath'd:
Her contrite sighs unto the clouds bequeath'd
Her winged sprite, and through her wounds doth fly
Life's lasting date from cancell'd destiny.

Stone-still, astonish'd with this deadly deed,
Stood Collatine and all his lordly crew;
Till Lucrece' father, that beholds her bleed,
Himself on her self-slaughter'd body threw;
And from the purple fountain Brutus drew
The murderous knife, and as it left the place,
Her blood, in poor revenge, held it in chase;

And bubbling from her breast, it doth divide
In two slow rivers, that the crimson blood
Circles her body in on every side,
Who like a late-sack'd island vastly<sup>a</sup> stood
Bare and unpeopled, in this fearful flood.
Some of her blood still pure and red remain'd,
And some look'd black, and that false Tarquin stain'd.

About the mourning and congealed face
Of that black blood a watery rigol<sup>b</sup> goes,
Which seems to weep upon the tainted place:
And ever since, as pitying Lucrece' woes,
Corrupted blood some watery token shows;
And blood untainted still doth red abide,
Blushing at that which is so putrefied.

"Daughter, dear daughter," old Lucretius cries,
"That life was mine which thou hast here depriv'd.
If in the child the father's image lies,
Where shall I live now Lucrece is unliv'd?
Thou wast not to this end from me deriv'd.
If children predecease progenitors,
We are their offspring, and they none of ours.

"Poor broken glass, I often did behold
In thy sweet semblance my old age new born;
But now that fair fresh mirror, dim and old,
Shows me a barebon'd death by time outworn;
O, from thy cheeks my image thou hast torn!
And shiver'd all the beauty of my glass,
That I no more can see what once I was.

"O time, cease thou thy course, and last no longer,
If they surcease to be that should survive.
Shall rotten death make conquest of the stronger,
And leave the faltering feeble souls alive?
The old bees die, the young possess their hive:
Then live, sweet Lucrece, live again, and see Thy father die, and not thy father thee!"

By this starts Collatine as from a dream,
And bids Lucretius give his sorrow place;
And then in key-cold<sup>c</sup> Lucrece' bleeding stream
He falls, and bathes the pale fear in his face,
And counterfoits to die with her a space;
Till manly shame bids him possess his breath,
And live, to be revenged on her death.

The deep vexation of his inward soul
Hath serv'd a dumb arrest upon his tongue;
Who, mad that sorrow should his use control,
Or keep him from heart-easing words so long,
Begins to talk; but through his lips do throng
Weak words, so thick come, in his poor heart's aid,
That no man could distinguish what he said.

<sup>a</sup> Vastly—like a waste.      <sup>b</sup> Rigol—creek.
<sup>c</sup> Key-cold. So in "Richard III," Act I. scene 2:—
"Poor key-cold figure of a holy king."

Yet sometime Tarquin was pronounced plain,
But through his teeth, as if the name he tore.
This windy tempest, till it blow up rain,
Held back his sorrow's tide, to make it more;
At last it rains, and busy winds give o'er:
Then sun and father weep with equal strife,
Who should weep most for daughter or for wife.

The one doth call her his, the other his,
Yet neither may possess the claim they lay.
The father says, "She 's mine." "O, mine she is,"
Replies her husband: "do not take away
My sorrow's interest; let no mourner say
He weeps for her, for she was only mine,
And only must be wail'd by Collatine."

"O," quoth Lucretius, "I did give that life Which she too early and too late<sup>a</sup> hath spill'd."
"Woe, woe," quoth Collatine, "she was my wife,
I ow'd her, and 't is mine that she hath kill'd."
"My daughter" and "my wife" with clamours fill'd
The dispers'd air, who, holding Lucrece's life,
Answer'd their cries, "my daughter" and "my wife."

Brutus, who pluck'd the knife from Lucrece's side,
Seeing such enulation in their woe,
Began to clothe his wit in state and pride,
Burying in Lucrece's wound his folly's show.
He with the Romans was esteemed so
As silly jeering idiots are with kings,
For sportive words, and uttering foolish things.

But now he throws that shallow habit by Wherein deep policy did him disguise;
And arm'd his long-hid wits advisedly,
To check the tears in Collatinus' eyes.
"Thou wronged lord of Rome," quoth he, "arise;
Let my unsounded self, suppos'd a fool,
Now set thy long-experienc'd wit to school.

"Why, Collatine, is woe the cure for woe?
Do wounds help wounds, or grief help grievous deeds?
Is it revenge to give thyself a blow,

<sup>a</sup> Too late—too recently.

For his foul act by whom thy fair wife bleeds?
Such childish humour from weak minds proceeds
Thy wretched wife mistook the matter so,
To slay herself, that should have slain her foe.

"Courageous Roman, do not steep thy heart
In such relenting dew of lamentations,
But kneel with me, and help to bear thy part,
To rouse our Roman gods with invocations,
That they will suffer these abominations,
(Since Rome herself in them doth stand digna
By our strong arms from forth her fair chas'd.

"Now, by the Capitol that we adore,
And by this chaste blood so unjustly stain'd,
By heaven's fair sun that breeds the fast<sup>c</sup>
store,
By all our country rights in Rome maintain'd,
And by chaste Lucrece's soul that late complain'd
Her wrongs to us, and by this bloody knife,
We will revenge the death of this true wife."

This said, he struck his hand upon his breast,
And kiss'd the fatal knife to end his vow;
And to his protestation urg'd the rest,
Who, wondering at him, did his words allow.<sup>b</sup>
Then jointly to the ground their knees they bow;
And that deep vow which Brutus made before,
He doth again repeat, and that they swore.

When they had sworn to this advised doom,
They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence;
To show her bleeding body thorough Rome,
And so to publish Tarquin's foul offence:
Which being done with speedy diligence,
The Romans plausibly<sup>c</sup> did give consent
To Tarquin's everlasting banishment.

<sup>c</sup> Complain'd was formerly used without a subject action.

<sup>b</sup> Allow—approve.

<sup>c</sup> Plausibly—with expressions of applause—with a Plausively, applausively.

SONNETS.

I.

fairest creatures we desire increase,
 ere<sup>b</sup> beauty's rose might never die,
 the riper should by time decease,
 under heir might bear his memory :
 but, contracted to thine own bright eyes,
 thy light's flame with self-substantial fuel,
 as a famine where abundance lies,
 I thy foe, to thy sweet self too cruel.
 What art now the world's fresh ornament,
 and herald to the gaudy spring,
 from thine own bud buried thy content,
 under churl, mak'st waste in niggarding.
 Turn from the world, or else this glutton be,
 at the world's due, by the grave and thee.

II.

Forty winters shall besiege thy brow,
 and deep trenches in thy beauty's field,
 thy youth's proud livery, so gaz'd on now, will be a tatter'd weed,<sup>a</sup> of small worth held :
 then being ask'd where all thy beauty lies,
 where all the treasure of thy lusty days;
 will they to thee, within thine own deep sunken eyes,
 see all-seeing shame and thriftless praise.
 How much more praise deserv'd thy beauty's use,
 if thou couldst answer—"This fair child of mine am my count, and make my old excuse—"—
 'Tis his beauty by succession thine !
 But were to be new-made when thou art old,
 see thy blood warm when thou feel'st it cold.

III.

Break in thy glass, and tell the face thou viewest,
 when the time that face should form another;
 dost thou fresh repair if now thou not renewest,
 dost thou beguile the world, unbless some mother.
 ere is she so fair whose unear'd<sup>b</sup> womb bears the tillage of thy husbandry ?
 or is he so fond<sup>c</sup> will be the tomb of thy self-love, to stop posterity ?
 'Tis thy mother's glass, and she in thee looks back the lovely April of her prime :
 through windows of thine age shalt see,
 how wrinkles, this thy golden time.
 if thou live, remember'd not to be,
 single, and thine image dies with thee.

IV.

Why lov'st thou that which doth not love thee, thy lovelliness, why dost thou spend thyself thy beauty's legacy ?
 thy gift's bequest gives nothing, but doth lend,
 being frank she lends to those are free.
 why dost thou tease the unteuous niggard, why dost thou abuse unteuous largess given thee to give ?
 why dost thou use as usurer, why dost thou use but a sum of sums, yet canst not live ?
 why dost thou traffic with thyself alone,
 if thyself thy sweet self dost deceive.
 how, when nature calls thee to be gone,
 acceptable audit canst thou leave ?

<sup>a</sup> Weed—garment.
<sup>b</sup> Unear'd—unploughed.
<sup>c</sup> Fond—foolish.

The unus'd beauty must be tomb'd with thee,
 Which, used, lives thy executor to be.

V.

Those hours that with gentle work did frame
 The lovely gaze where every eye doth dwell,
 Will play the tyrants to the very same,
 And that unfair<sup>a</sup> which fairly doth excel ;
 For never-resting time leads summer on
 To hideous winter, and confounds him there ;
 Sap check'd with frost, and lusty leaves quite gone,
 Beauty o'ersnow'd, and bareness everywhere ;
 Then, were not summer's distillation left,
 A liquid prisoner pent in walls of glass,
 Beauty's effect with beauty were bereft,
 Nor it, nor no remembrance what it was,
 But flowers distill'd, though they with winter meet, Leese<sup>b</sup> but their show ; their substance still lives sweet.

VI.

Then let not winter's ragged hand deface
 In thee thy summer, ere thou be distill'd :
 Make sweet some phial ; treasure thou some place
 With beauty's treasure, ere it be self-kill'd.
 That use is not forbidden usury,
 Which happies<sup>c</sup> those that pay the willing loan,
 That 's for thyself to breed another thee,
 Or ten times happier, be it ten for one ;
 Ten times thyself were happier than thou art,
 If ten of thine ten times refigur'd thee :
 Then what could death do if thou shouldst depart,
 Leaving thee living in posterity ?
 Be not self-will'd, for thou art much too fair
 To be Death's conquest, and make worms thine heir

VII.

Lo, in the orient when the gracious light
 Lifts up his burning oad, each under eye
 Doth homage to his new-appearing sight,
 Serving with looks his sacred majesty ;
 And having clim'd the steep-up heavenly hill,
 Resembling strong youth in his middle age,
 Yet mortal looks adore his beauty still,
 Attending on his golden pilgrimage ;
 But when from high-most pitch, with weary ear,
 Like feeble age, he reeleth from the day,
 The eyes, fore duteous, now converted are
 From his low tract, and look another way :
 So thou, thyself outgoing in thy noon,
 Unlook'd on diest, unless thou get a son.

VIII.

Music to hear, why hear'st thou music sadly ?<sup>d</sup>
 Sweets with sweets war not, joy delights in joy.
 Why lov'st thou that which which thou receiv'st not gladly ?
 Or else receiv'st with pleasure thine annoy ?
 If the true concord of well-tuned sounds,
 By unions married, do offend thine ear,
 They do but sweetly chide thee, who confounds
 In singleness the parts that thou shouldst bear.

<sup>a</sup> Unfair—a verb—deprive of fairness, of beauty.
<sup>b</sup> Leese—lose.
<sup>c</sup> Happies—make happy.
<sup>d</sup> Malone thus explains this passage:—"O thou whom to hear is music, why hear'st thou," &c.

Mark how one string, sweet husband to another,
Strikes each in each by mutual ordering;<sup>a</sup>
Resembling sire and child and happy mother,
Who, all in one, one pleasing note do sing:
Whose speechless song, being many, seeming one,
Sings this to thee, "thou single wilt prove none."

ix.

Is it for fear to wet a widow's eye
That thou consum'st thyself in single life?
Ah! if thou issueless shalt hap to die,
The world will wail thee, like a makeless<sup>b</sup> wife:
The world will be thy widow, and still weep
That thou no form of thee hast left behind,
When every private widow well may keep,
By children's eyes, her husband's shape in mind.
Look, what an untimely fortune doth spend Shifts but his place, for still the world enjoys it;
But beauty's waste bath in the world an end,
And kept unus'd, the user so destroys it.
No love toward others in that bosom sits,
That on himself such murderous shame commits.

x.

For shame! deny that thou bear'st love to any,
Who for thyself art so unprovident.
Grant if thou wilt thou art below'd of many,
But that thou none lov'st is most evident;
For thou art so possess'd with murderous hate,
That 'gainst thyself thou stick'st not to conspire,
Seeking that beauteous roof to ruinate,
Which to repair should be thy chief desire.
O change thy thought, that I may change my mind!
Shall hate be fairer lodg'd than gentle love?
Be, as thy presence is, gracious and kind,
Or to thyself, at least, kind-hearted prove;
Make thee another self, for love of me,
That beauty still may live in thine or thee.

xi.

As fast as thou shalt wane, so fast thou grow'st
In one of thine, from that which thou departest;
And that fresh blood which youngly thou bestow'st,
Thou mayst call thine, when thou from youth convertest.
Herein lives wisdom, beauty, and increase;
Without this, folly, age, and cold decay:
If all were minded so the times should cease,
And threescore years would make the world away.
Let those whom Nature hath not made for store,
Harsh, featureless, and rude, barrenly perish:
Look whom she best endow'd, she gave thee more;
Which bounteous gift thou shouldst in bounty cherish;
She carv'd thee for her seal, and meant thereby Thou shouldst print more, nor let that copy die.

xii.

When I do count the clock that tells the time,
And see the brave day sunk in hideous night;
When I behold the violet past prime,
And sable curls, all silver'd o'er with white;
When lofty trees I see barren of leaves,
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves,
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard;
Then of thy beauty do I question make,
That thou among the wastes of time must go,
Since sweets and beauties do themselves forsake,
And die as fast as they see others grow;

<sup>a</sup> If two strings are tuned in perfect unison, and one only is struck, a very sensible vibration takes place in the other. This is called sympathetic vibration.

<sup>b</sup> Makeless—ma'sless. Make and mate are synonymous in an older writers.

<sup>c</sup> All. The original has or.

And Save

O that
No loy Against
And yo
So abou
Find ne
Yoursel
When y
Who le
Which Against
And ba
O! r
You

Not fro
And ye
But not
Of plag
Nor ca
Pointin
Or say
By of
But fro
And (c
As tru
If from
Or el Thy

When Holds
That t
Wherec
When Cheeres Vault
And w
Then t
Sets yo
Where
To cha
And
As h

But wh
Make v
And fo
With n
Now st
And m
With v
Much l
So shou
Which Neither
Can m
To g
And

Who w
If it w

<sup>a</sup> Cow
<sup>b</sup> Fair
teth Son

th yet, Heaven knows, it is but as a tomb
 h hides your life, and shows not half your parts.
 ould write the beauty of your eyes,
 in fresh numbers number all your graces, ege to come would say this poet lies,
 heavenly touches ne'er touch'd earthly faces.
 ould my papers, yellow'd with their age,
 orn'd, like old men of less truth than tongue ;
 your true rights be term'd a poet's rage,
 stretched metre of an antique song :
 t were some child of yours alive that time,
 u should live twice;—in it, and in my rhyme.

XVIII.

I compare thee to a summer's day ?
 art more lovely and more temperate :
 h winds do shake the darling buds of May,
 summer's lease hath all too short a date :
 time too hot the eye of heaven shines,
 often is his gold complexion dimm'd ;
 every fair from fair sometime declines,
 lance, or nature's changing course, untrimm'd ;
 by eternal summer shall not fade,
 ose possession of that fair thou owest ;
 hall Death brag thou wander'st in his shade, s in eternal lines to time thou growest ;
 long as men can breathe, or eyes can see,
 long lives this, and this gives life to thee.

XIX.

uring Time, blunt thou the lion's paws,
 make the earth devour her own sweet brood ;
 k the keen teeth from the fierce tiger's jaws,
 burn the long-liv'd phoenix in her blood ;
 e glad and sorry seasons, as thou fleet'st,
 do whate'er thou wilt, swift-footed Time,
 e wide world, and all her fading sweets ;
 I forbid thee one most heinous crime :
 rve not with thy hours my love's fair brow,
 draw no lines there with thine antique pen ;
 in thy course untainted do allow,
 eauty's pattern to succeeding men.
 t, do thy worst, old Time : despite thy wrong,
 y love shall in my verse ever live young.

XX.

man's face, with nature's own hand painted,
 thou, the master-mistress of my passion ;
 man's gentle heart, but not acquainted
 i shifting change, as is false women's fashion ;
 ye more bright than theirs, less false in rolling,
 ing the object whereupon it gazeth ;
 an in hue, all hues in his controlling,
 ch steals men's eyes, and women's souls amazeth.
 for a woman wert thou first created ;
 Nature, as she wrought thee, fell a-doting,
 by addition me of thee defeated,
 dding one thing to my purpose nothing.
 it since she prick'd thee out for women's pleasure,
 me be thy love, and thy love's use their treasure.

XXI.

it not with me as with that muse,
 d by a painted beauty to his verse ;
 heaven itself for ornament doth use,
 every fair with his fair doth rehearse ;
 ing a complement<sup>b</sup> of proud compare,
 s sun and moon, with earth and sea's rich gems,
 s April's firstborn flowers, and all things rare heaven's air in his huge rondure<sup>c</sup> hema.
 t me, true in love, but truly write,
 then believe me, my love is as fair

<sup>a</sup> Untrimm'd—undecorated.    <sup>b</sup> Complement—union.
<sup>c</sup> Rondure—circumference.

As any mother's child, though not so bright
 As those gold candles fix'd in heaven's air :
 Let them say more that like of hearsay well ;
 I will not praise, that purpose not to sell.

XXII.

My glass shall not persuade me I am old,
 So long as youth and thou are of one date ;
 But when in thee time's furrows I behold,
 Then look I death my days should expiate.
 For all that beauty that doth cover thee
 Is but the seemly raiment of my heart,
 Which in thy breast doth live, as thine in me ;
 How can I then be elder than thou art ?
 O therefore, love, be of thyself so wary,
 As I not for myself but for thee will ;
 Bearing thy heart, which I will keep so chary
 As tender nurse her babe from faring ill.
 Presume not on thy heart when mine is slain ;
 Thou gav'st me thine, not to give back again.

XXIII.

As an imperfect actor on the stage,
 Who with his fear is put besides his part,
 Or some fierce thing replete with too much rage,
 Whose strength's abundance weakens his own heart ;
 So I, for fear of trust, forget to say
 The perfect ceremony of love's rite,
 And in mine own love's strength seem to decay,
 O'ercharg'd with burthen of mine own love's might.
 O let my books be then the eloquence
 And dumb presagers of my speaking breast ;
 Who plead for love, and look for recompence,
 More than that tongue that more hath more ex-press'd.
 O learn to read what silent love hath writ :
 To hear with eyes belongs to love's fine wit.

XXIV.

Mine eye hath play'd the painter, and hath stel'd
 Thy beauty's form in table<sup>a</sup> of my heart ;
 My body is the frame wherein 't is held,
 And perspective it is best painter's art.
 For through the painter must you see his skill,
 To find where your true image pictur'd lies,
 Which in my bosom's shop is hanging still,
 That hath his windows glazed with thine eyes.
 Now see what good turns eyes for eyes have done ;
 Mine eyes have drawn thy shape, and thine for me
 Are windows to my breast, where-through the sun
 Delights to peep, to gaze therein on thee ;
 Yet eyes this cunning want to grace their art,
 They draw but what they see, know not the heart.

XXV.

Let those who are in favour with their stars,
 Of public honour and proud titles boast,
 Whilst I, whom fortune of such triumph bars,
 Unlook'd for joy in that I honour most.
 Great princes' favourites their fair leaves spread
 But as the marigold at the sun's eye ;
 And in themselves their pride lies buried,
 For at a frown they in their glory die.
 The painful warrior famoused for fight,
 After a thousand victories once foil'd,
 Is from the book of honour razed quite,
 And all the rest forgot for which he toil'd ;
 Then bappy I, that love and am belov'd
 Where I may not remove, nor be remov'd.

<sup>a</sup> Table, though sometimes used in the sense of a picture, more commonly means the tabular surface upon which a picture is painted.

XXVI.

Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage
Thy merit hath my duty strongly knit,
To thee I send this written embassy,
To witness duty, not to show my wit.
Duty so great, which wit so poor as mine
May make seem bare, in wanting words to show it;
But that I hope some good conceit of thine
In thy soul's thought, all naked, will bestow it:
Till whatsoever star that guides by moving,
Points on me graciously with fair aspect,
And puts apparel on my tatter'd loving,
To show me worthy of thy sweet respect:
Then may I dare to boast how I do love thee,
Till then, not show my head where thou mayst prove me.

XXVII.

Weary with toil, I haste me to my bed,
The dear repose for limbs with travel tir'd;
But then begins a journey in my head,
To work my mind, when body's work's expir'd:
For then my thoughts (from far where I abide) Intend a zealous pilgrimage to thee,
And keep my drooping eyelids open wide,
Looking on darkness which the blind do see:
Save that my soul's imaginary sight
Presents thy shadow to my sightless view,
Which, like a jewel hung in ghastly night,
Makes black night beautiful, and her old face new.
Lo, thus, by day my limbs, by night my mind,
For thee, and for myself, no quiet find.

XXVIII.

How can I then return in happy plight,
That am debarr'd the benefit of rest?
When day's oppression is not eas'd by night,
But day by night and night by day oppress'd?
And each, though enemies to either's reign,
Do in consent shake hands to torture me,
The one by toil, the other to complain
How far I toil, still farther off from thee.
I tell the day, to please him, thou art bright,
And dost him grace when clouds do blot the heaven:
So flatter I the swart-complexion'd night;
When sparkling stars twine not, thou gild'st the even.
But day doth daily draw my sorrows longer,
And night doth nightly make grief's length seem stronger.

XXIX.

When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone bewep my outcast state,
And trouble deaf Heaven with my bootless cries,
And look upon myself, and curse my fate,
Wishing me like to one more rich in hope,
Featur'd like him, like him with friends possess'd,
Desiring this man's art, and that man's scope,
With what I most enjoy contented least;
Yet in these thoughts myself almost despising,
Haply I think on thee,—and then my state (Like to the lark at break of day arising From sullen earth) sings hymns at heaven's gate;
For thy sweet love remember'd such wealth brings,
That then I scorn to change my state with kings.

XXX.

When to the sessions of sweet silent thought
I summon up remembrance of things past,
I sigh the lack of many a thing I sought,
And with old woes new wail my dear time's waste:

* Twere. Gifford, in a note upon Ben Jonson's 'Sad Shepherd' explains that in the passage before us the meaning is 'as the stars do not gleam or appear at intervals.'

Then can I drown an eye, unnam'd to flow,
For precious friends hid in death's dateless night,
And weep afresh love's long-since cancell'd woe,
And moan the expense of many a vanish'd sight.
Then can I grieve at grievances foregone,
And heavily from woe to woe tell o'er
The sad account of fore-bemoaned moan,
Which I new pay as if not paid before.
But if the while I think on thee, dear friend,
All losses are restor'd, and sorrows end.

XXXI.

Thy bosom is endeared with all hearts,
Which I by lacking have supposed dead;
And there reigns love and all love's loving parts,
And all those friends which I thought buried.
How many a holy and obsequious tear
Hath dear religious love stolen from mine eye,
As interest of the dead, which now appear
But things remov'd, that hidden in thee lie!
Thou art the grave where buried love doth lie,
Hung with the trophies of my lovers gone,
Who all their parts of me to thee did give;
That due of many now is thine alone:
Their images I lov'd I view in thee,
And thou (all they) hast all the all of me.

XXXII.

If thou survive my well-contented day,
When that churl Death my bones with dust cover,
And shalt by fortune once more re-survy
These poor rude lines of thy deceased lover,
Compare them with the bettering of the time;
And though they be outstripp'd by every pen,
Reserve<sup>d</sup> them for my love, not for their rhyme,
Exceeded by the height of happier men,
O then vouchsafe me but this loving thought!
"Had my friend's muse grown with this growing age,
A dearer birth than this his love had brought
To march in ranks of better equipage:
But since he died, and poets better prove,
Theirs for their style I'll read, his for his love."

XXXIII.

Full many a glorious morning have I seen
Flatter the mountain-tops with sovereign eye,
Kissing with golden face the meadows green,
Gilding pale streams with heavenly alchemy;
Anon permit the basest clouds to ride
With ugly rack<sup>e</sup> on his celestial face,
And from the forlorn world his visage hide,
Stealing unseen to west with this disgrace:
Even so my sun one early morn did shine
With all triumphant splendour on my brow;
But out! alack! he was but one hour mine,
The region cloud hath mask'd him from me now.
Yet him for this my love no whit disdaineth,
Suns of the world may stain, when heaven's sun staineth.<sup>f</sup>

XXXIV.

Why didst thou promise such a beauteous day,
And make me travel forth without my cloak,

<sup>a</sup> Dateless—endless—having no certain time of expiration.
<sup>b</sup> If we understand expense to be used as an adjective expensive away, there is no difficulty in this line. What we regard as gone from us; and so the poet means the expense of time is vanished sight.
<sup>c</sup> Obsequious—tender.
<sup>d</sup> Reserve—the same as preserve.
<sup>e</sup> Rack. Tooke, in his full discussion of the meaning of this word, holds that rack means "merely that which is valued."
<sup>f</sup> Stain and staineth are here used with the significance of the verb neutral. Suns of the world may be stained as heaven's sun is valued.

base clouds o'ertake me in my way,
 thy bravery in their rotten smoke?
 not enough that through the cloud thou break,
 thy rain on my storm-beaten face,
 so man well of such a salve can speak,
 heals the wound, and cures not the disgrace:
 can thy shame give physic to my grief;
 though thou repent, yet I have still the loss:
 offender's sorrow lends but weak relief to him that bears the strong offence's cross.
 Ah! but those tears are pearl which thy love sheds,
 and they are rich, and ransom all ill deeds.

XXXV.

How can I be griev'd at that which thou hast done:
 I have thorns, and silver fountains mud;
 Rain and eclipses stain both moon and sun,
 Loathsome canker lives in sweetest bud.
 All men make faults, and even I in this,
 For my trespass with compare,
 If corrupting, salving thy amiss,
 Singing thy sins more than thy sins are:
 Only my sensual fault I bring in sense,
 (My adverse party is thy advocate,) 'gainst myself a lawful plea commence:
 From civil war is in my love and hate,
 At I an accessory needs must be,
 That sweet thief which sourly robs from me.

XXXVI.

How can I confess that we two must be twain,
 Though our undivided loves are one:
 All those blots that do with me remain,
 Without thy help, by me be borne alone.
 Two loves there is but one respect,
 Which in our lives a separable spite,
 Though it alter not love's sole effect,
 Which it steal sweet hours from love's delight,
 I nevermore acknowledge thee,
 My bewailed guilt should do thee shame;
 Thou with public kindness honour me,
 Yet thou take that honour from thy name:
 I do not so; I love thee in such sort,
 That being mine, mine is thy good report.

XXXVII.

How can my father takes delight
 In his active child do deeds of youth,
 Made lame by fortune's dearest spite,
 All my comfort of thy worth and truth;
 Whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
 Any of these all, or all, or more,
 Or in thy parts do crown'd sit,
 Whence my love engrafted to this store:
 In I am not lame, poor, nor despis'd,
 That that this shadow doth such substance give,
 In thy abundance am suffic'd,
 In thy part of all thy glory live.
 Ask what is best, that best I wish in thee;
 My wish I have; then ten times happy me!

XXXVIII.

How can my muse want subject to invent,
 When thou dost breathe, that pour'st into my verse
 Thine own sweet argument, too excellent
 For every vulgar paper to rehearse?
 O! give thyself the thanks, if aught in me
 Thy peevish stand against thy sight;
 So shall I not be dumb that cannot write to thee,
 Though thyself dost give invention light?

* Muse—inspiration.

* Separable—separating.

Be thou the tenth muse, ten times more in worth
 Than those old nine which rhymers invoke;
 And he that calls on thee, let him bring forth
 Eternal numbers to outlive long date.
 If my slight muse do please these curious days,
 The pain be mine, but thine shall be the praise.

XXXIX.

O, how thy worth with manners may I sing,
 When thou art all the better part of me?
 What can mine own praise to mine own self bring?
 And what is 't but mine own, when I praise thee?
 Even for this let us divided live,
 And our dear love lose name of single one,
 That by this separation I may give
 That due to thee, which thou deserv'st alone.
 O absence, what a torment wouldst thou prove,
 Were it not thy sour leisure gave sweet leave
 To entertain the time with thoughts of love,
 (Which time and thoughts so sweetly doth deceive,
 And that thou teachest how to make one twain,
 By praising him here, who doth hence remain!

XL.

Take all my loves, my love, yea, take them all;
 What hast thou then more than thou hadst before?
 No love, my love, that thou mayst true love call;
 All mine was thine, before thou hadst this more.
 Then if for my love thou my love receivest,
 I cannot blame thee for my love thou ushest;
 But yet be blam'd, if thou thyself deceivest
 By wilful taste of what thyself refuseth.
 I do forgive thy robbery, gentle thief,
 Although thou steal thee all my poverty;
 And yet, love knows, it is a greater grief
 To bear love's wrong, than hate's known injury.
 Lascivious grace, in whom all ill well shows,
 Kill me with spites; yet we must not be foes.

XLI.

Those pretty wrongs that liberty commits
 When I am sometime absent from thy heart,
 Thy beauty and thy years full well befits,
 For still temptation follows where thou art.
 Gentle thou art, and therefore to be won,
 Beauteous thou art, therefore to be assail'd;
 And when a woman woos, what woman's sou
 Will sourly leave her till she have prevail'd?
 Ah me! but yet thou might'st my seat forbear,
 And chide thy beauty and thy straying youth,
 Who lead thee in their riot even there
 Where thou art forc'd to break a two-fold truth;
 Hers, by thy beauty tempting her to thee,
 Thine, by thy beauty being false to me.

XLII.

That thou hast her, it is not all my grief,
 And yet it may be said I lov'd her dearly;
 That she hath thee, is of my wailing chief,
 A loss in love that touches me more nearly.
 Loving offenders, thus I will excuse ye:
 Thou dost love her, because thou knew'st I love her
 And for my sake even so doth she abuse me,
 Suffering my friend for my sake to approve her.
 If I lose thee, my loss is my love's gain,
 And, losing her, my friend hath found that loss;
 Both find each other, and I lose both twain,
 And both for my sake lay on me this cross:
 But here's the joy; my friend and I are one;
 Sweet flattery! then she loves but me alone.

* For were she given become.

XLIII.

When most I wink, then do mine eyes best see,
For all the day they view things unrespected;<sup>a</sup>
But when I sleep, in dreams they look on thee,
And, darkly bright, are bright in dark directed;
Then thou whose shadow shadows doth make bright,
How would thy shadow's form form happy show
To the clear day with thy much clearer light,
When to unseeing eyes thy shade shines so!
How would (I say) mine eyes be blessed made
By looking on thee in the living day,
When in dead night thy fair imperfect shade
Through heavy sleep on sightless eyes doth stay?†
All days are nights to see, till I see thee,
And nights, bright days, when dreams do show thee me.<sup>b</sup>

XLIV.

If the dull substance of my flesh were thought,
Injurious distance should not stop my way;
For then, despite of space, I would be brought
From limits far remote, where thou dost stay.
No matter then, although my foot did stand
Upon the farthest earth remov'd from thee,
For nimble thought can jump both sea and land,
As soon as think the place where he would be.
But ah! thought kills me, that I am not thought,
To leap large lengths of miles when thou art gone,
But that, so much of earth and water wrought,<sup>c</sup>
I must attend time's leisure with my moan;
Receiving nought by elements so slow
But heavy tears, badges of either's woe:

XLV.

The other two, slight air and purging fire,
Are both with thee, wherever I abide;
The first my thought, the other my desire,
These present-absent with swift motion slide.
For when these quicker elements are gone
In tender embassy of love to thee,
My life, being made of four, with two alone
Sinks down to death, oppress'd with melancholy;
Until life's composition be recur'd
By those swift messengers return'd from thee,
Who even but now come back again, assur'd
Of thy fair health, recounting it to me:
This told, I joy; but then no longer glad,
I send them back again, and straight grow sad.

XLVI.

Mine eye and heart are at a mortal war,
How to divide the conquest of thy sight;
Mine eye my heart thy picture's sight would bar,
My heart mine eye the freedom of that right.
My heart doth plead that thou in him dost lie,
(A closet never pierc'd with crystal eyes,
But the defendant doth that plea deny,
And says in him thy fair appearance lies.
To 'cide<sup>d</sup> this title is impannelled
A quest<sup>e</sup> of thoughts, all tenants to the heart;
And by their verdict is determined
The clear eye's moiety,<sup>f</sup> and the dear heart's part:

<sup>a</sup> Unrespected—unregarded.<sup>b</sup> Thee me—thee to me.<sup>c</sup> A passage in Henry V. explains this:—"He is pure air and fire; and the dull elements of earth and water never appear in him."<sup>d</sup> Thy. The original has their; and it is remarkable that the same typographical error occurs four times in this one Sonnet—a pretty convincing proof that no competent or authorized person superintended the publication.<sup>e</sup> A quest. Maloué explains that this is a contraction of decide.<sup>f</sup> A reads side.

Inquest or jury.

1. Moiety—portion.

As thus; mine eye's due is thine outward part,
And my heart's right thine inward love of heart.

XLVII.

Betwixt mine eye and heart a league is took,
And each doth good turns now unto the other:
When that mine eye is famish'd for a look,
Or heart in love with sighs himself doth smother,
With my love's picture then my eye doth feast,
And to the painted banquet bids my heart;
Another time mine eye is my heart's guest,
And in his thoughts of love doth share a part:
So, either by thy picture or my love,
Thyself away art present still with me,
For thou not farther than my thoughts canst move,
And I am still with them, and they with thee;
Or if they sleep, thy picture in my sight
Awakes my heart to heart's and eye's delight.

XLVIII.

How careful was I when I took my way,
Each trifle under truest bars to thrust,
That, to my use, it might unused stay
From hands of falsehood, in sure wards of trust:
But thou, to whom my jewels trifles are,
Most worthy comfort, now my greatest grief,
Thou, best of dearest, and mine only care,
Art left the prey of every vulgar thief.
Thee have I not lock'd up in any chest,
Save where thou art not, though I feel thou art,
Within the gentle closure of my breast,
From whence at pleasure thou mayst come and part;
And even thence thou wilt be stolen I fear,
For truth proves thievish for a prize so dear.

XLIX.

Against that time, if ever that time come,
When I shall see thee frown on my defects,
Whenas<sup>a</sup> thy love hath cast his utmost sum,
Call'd to that audit by advis'd respects;
Against that time, when thou shalt strangely part,
And scarcely greet me with that sun, thine eye,
When love, converted from the thing it was,
Shall reasons find of settled gravity;
Against that time do I ensconce<sup>b</sup> me here
Within the knowledge of mine own desert,
And this my hand against myself uprear,
To guard the lawful reasons on thy part:
To leave poor me thou hast the strength of laws,
Since, why to love, I can allege no cause.

L.

How heavy do I journey on the way,
When what I seek—my weary travel's end—
Doth teach that ease and that repose to say,
"Thus far the miles are measur'd from thy friend!"
The beast that bears me, tired with my woe,
Plods dully on, to bear that weight in me,
As if by some instinct the wretch did know
His rider lov'd not speed, being made from thee:
The bloody spur cannot provoke him on
That sometimes anger thrusts into his hide,
Which heavily he answers with a groan,
More sharp to me than spurring to his side;
For that same groan doth put this in my mind,
My grief lies onward, and my joy behind.

LI.

Thus can my love excuse the slow offence
Of my dull bearer, when from thee I speed:
From where thou art why should I haste me hence?
Till I return, of posting is no need.

<sup>a</sup> Whenas—when.<sup>b</sup> Ensconce—hide.

at excuse will my poor beast then find,
 swift extremity can seem but slow ?
 should I spur, though mounted on the wind ;
 ged speed no motion shall I know :
 can no horse with my desire keep pace ;
 ore desire, of perfect love being made,
 igh (no dull flesh) in his fiery race ;
 re, for love, thus shall excuse my jade ;
 re from thee going he went wilful slow,
 ards thee I 'll run, and give him leave to go.

LII.

I as the rich, whose blessed key
 ing him to his sweet up-locked treasure, hich he will not every hour survey,
 anting the fine point of seldom pleasure.
 ore are feasts so solemn and so rare,
 seldom coming, in the long year set,
 tones of worth they thinly placed are,
 ain * jewels in the carcanet.<sup>b</sup>
 he time that keeps you, as my chest,
 he wardrobe which the robe doth hide,
 ke some special instant special-blest,
 e unfolding his imprison'd pride.
 sed are you, whose worthiness gives scope,
 g had, to triumph, being lack'd, to hope.

LIII.

is your substance, whereof are you made,
 illions of strange shadows on you tend ?
 very one hath, every one, one's shade,
 ou, but one, can every shadow lend.
 be Adonis, and the counterfeit<sup>c</sup>
 ly imitated after you ;
 dien's check all art of beauty set,
 ou in Grecian tines are painted new :
 of the spring, and foizon of the year ;<sup>d</sup>
 e doth shadow of your beauty show, her as your bounty doth appear,
 ou in every blessed shape we know.
 ll external grace you have some part,
 you like none, none you, for constant heart.

LIV.

much more doth beauty beauteous seem,
 t sweet ornament which truth doth give !
 so looks fair, but fairer we it deem it sweet odour which doth in it live.
 nker-blooms * have full as deep a dye perfumed tincture of the roses, on such thorns, and play as wantonly summer's breath their masked buds discloses :
 e their virtue only is their show,
 ive unwoo'd, and unrespected fade ;
 themselves. Sweet roses do not so ;
 ir sweet deaths are sweetest odours made :
 o of you, beauteous and lovely youth,
 m that shall fade, by verse distils your truth.

LV.

arble, not the gilded monuments
 ces, shall outlive this powerful rhyme ;
 u shall shine more bright in these contents
 nswept stone, besmear'd with sluttish time.
 wasteful war shall statues overturn,
 rolls root out the work of masonry, ars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn ing record of your memory.

<sup>a</sup> hails—used adjectively for chief.
<sup>b</sup> carcanet—necklace.
<sup>c</sup> counterfeit—portrait.
<sup>d</sup> foizon is plenty ; and the foizon of the year is the autumn.
<sup>e</sup> lifel seasons.
<sup>f</sup> inker-blooms—the flowers of the canker or dog-rose.

'Gainst death and all-oblivious enmity
 Shall you pace forth ; your praise shall still find room,
 Even in the eyes of all posterity
 That wear this world out to the ending doom.
 So, till the judgment that yourself arise,
 You live in this, and dwell in lovers' eyes.

LVI.

Sweet love, renew thy force ; be it not said,
 Thy edge should blunter be than appetite,
 Which but to-day by feeding is allay'd,
 To-morrow sharpen'd in his former might :
 So, love, be thou : although to-day thou fill
 Thy hungry eyes, even till they wink with fulness,
 To-morrow see again, and do not kill
 The spirit of love with a perpetual dulness.
 Let this sad interim like the ocean be Which parts the shore, where two contracted-new Come daily to the banks, that, when they see Return of love, more blest may be the view ;
 Or call it winter, which, being full of care,
 Makes summer's welcome thrice more wish'd, more rare.

LVII.

Being your slave, what should I do but tend Upon the hours and times of your desire ?
 I have no precious time at all to spend,
 Nor services to do, till you require.
 Nor dare I chide the world-without-end hour,
 Whilst I, my sovereign, watch the clock for you,
 Nor think the bitterness of absence sour,
 When you have bid your servant once adieu ;
 Nor dare I question with my jealous thought
 Where you may be, or your affairs suppose,
 But, like a sad slave, stay and think of nought,
 Save, where you are how happy you make those :
 So true a fool is love, that in your will (Though you do anything) he thinks no ill.

LVIII.

That God forbid, that made me first your slave,
 I should in thought control your times of pleasure,
 Or at your hand the account of hours to crave,
 Being your vassal, bound to stay your leisure !
 O, let me suffer (being at your beck)
 The imprison'd absence of your liberty,
 And patience, tame to sufferance, bide each check
 Without accusing you of injury.
 Be where you list ; your charter is so strong,
 That you yourself may privilege your time :
 Do what you will, to you it doth belong
 Yourself to pardon of self-doing crime.
 I am to wait, though waiting so be hell ;
 Not blame your pleasure, be it ill or well.

LIX.

If there be nothing new, but that which is Hath been before, how are our brains beguil'd,
 Which labouring for invention bear amiss
 The second burthen of a former child !
 O, that record could with a backward look,
 Even of five hundred courses of the sun,
 Show me your image in some antique book,
 Since mind at first in character was done !
 That I might see what the old world could say
 To this composed wonder of your frame ;
 Whether we are mended, or wher * better they,
 Or whether revolution be the same.
 O ! sure I am, the wits of former days
 To subjects worse have given admiring praise.

* Wher—whethers.

the golden tresses of the dead,
 ight of sepulchres, were shorn away,
 re a second life on second head,
 auty's dead fleece made another gay :
 n those holy antique hours are seen,
 ut all ornament, itself, and true,
 ng no summer of another's green,
 ng no old to dress his beauty new ;
 d him as for a map doth Nature store,
 show false Art what beauty was of yore.

LXIX.

parts of thee that the world's eye doth view nothing that the thought of hearts can mend :
 ngues (the voice of souls) give thee that due,
 ng bare truth, even so as foes commend.
 outward thus with outward praise is crown'd ;
 hose same tongues that give thee so thine own, er accents do this praise confound,
 eing farther than the eye hath shown.
 look into the beauty of thy mind,
 hat, in guess, they measure by thy deeds ; (churls) their thoughts, although their eyes were kind,
 y fair flower add the rank smell of weeds :
 t why thy odour matcheth not thy show,
 solve* is this,—that thou dost common grow.

LXX.

thou art blam'd shall not be thy defect,
 ander's mark was ever yet the fair ;
 nament of beauty is suspect,<sup>b</sup>
 w that flies in heaven's sweetest air, n be good, slander doth but approve orth the greater, being woo'd of time ;
 nker vice the sweetest buds doth love,
 hou present'at a pure unstained prime.
 hast pass'd by the ambush of young days,
 not assail'd, or victor being charg'd ;
 is thy praise cannot be so thy praise,
 up envy, evermore enlarg'd :
 ome suspect of ill mask'd not thy show, n thou alone kingdoms of hearts shouldst owe.<sup>c</sup>

LXXI.

nger mourn for me when I am dead
 you shall hear the surly sullen bell warning to the world that I am fled this vile world, with vilest worms to dwell :
 if you read this line, remember not and that writ it : for I love you so,
 I in your sweet thoughts would be forgot,
 asking on me then should make you woe.
 I say) you look upon this verse,
 I perhaps compounded am with clay,
 t so much as my poor name rehearse ;
 t your love even with my life decay :
 t the wise world should look into your moan,
 d mock you with me after I am gone.

LXXII.

t the world should task you to recite merit liv'd in me, that you should love my death,—dear love, forget me quite, ou in me can nothing worthy prove ;
 s you would devise some virtuous lie,
 more for me than mine own desert, ang more praise upon deceased I niggard truth would willingly impart :

sw. Malone reads solve in the sense of solution. We have cited example of the use of solve as a noun.

* Suspect—suspicion.

<sup>c</sup> Owe—own.

O, lest your true love may seem false in this,
 That you for love speak well of me untrue,
 My name be buried where my body is,
 And live no more to shame nor me nor you.
 For I am sham'd by that which I bring forth,
 And so should you, to love things nothing worth.

LXXIII.

That time of year thou mayst in me behold
 When yellow leaves, or none, or few, do hang Upon those boughs which shake against the cold,
 Bare ruin'd choirs, where late the sweet birds sang.
 In me thou seest the twilight of such day
 As after sunset fadeth in the west,
 Which by and by black night doth take away,
 Death's second self, that seals up all in rest.
 In me thou seest the glowing of such fire,
 That on the ashes of his youth doth lie,
 As the death-bed whereon it must expire,
 Consum'd with that which it was nourish'd by.
 This thou perceiv'st, which makes thy love more strong
 To love that well which thou must leave ere long :

LXXIV.

But be contented : when that fell arrest
 Without all bail shall carry me away,
 My life hath in this line some interest,
 Which for memorial still with thee shall stay.
 When thou reviewest this, thou dost review
 The very part was consecrate to thee.
 The earth can have but earth, which is his due ;
 My spirit is thine, the better part of me :
 So then thou hast but lost the dregs of life,
 The prey of worms, my body being dead ;
 The coward conquest of a wretch's knife,
 Too base of thee to be remembered.
 The worth of that, is that which it contains,
 And that is this, and this with thee remains.

LXXV.

So are you to my thoughts, as food to life,
 Or as sweet-season'd showers are to the ground ;
 And for the peace of you I hold such strife
 As 'twixt a miser and his wealth is found :
 Now proud as an enjoyer, and anon
 Doubting the filching age will steal his treasure ;
 Now counting best to be with you alone,
 Then better'd that the world may see my pleasure :
 Sometime all full with feasting on your sight,
 And by and by clean starved for a look ;
 Possessing or pursuing no delight,
 Save what is had or must from you be took.
 Thus do I pine and surfeit day by day,
 Or gluttoning on all, or all away.

LXXVI.

Why is my verse so barren of new pride?
 So far from variation or quick change?
 Why, with the time, do I not glance aside
 To new-found methods and to compounds strange?
 Why write I still all one, ever the same,
 And keep invention in a noted weed,<sup>a</sup>
 That every word doth almost tell my name,
 Showing their birth, and where they did proceed?
 O know, sweet love, I always write of you,
 And you and love are still my argument ;
 So all my best is dressing old words new,
 Spending again what is already spent :
 For as the sun is dally new and old,
 So is my love still telling what is told.

<sup>a</sup> A noted weed—a dress known and familiar, through long always the same.

LXXXII.

Thy glass will show thee how thy beauties wear,
 Thy dial how thy precious minutes waste;
 The vacant leaves thy mind's imprint will bear,
 And of this book this learning mayst thou taste.
 The wrinkles which thy glass will truly show,
 Of mouthed graves will give thee memory:
 Thus by thy dial's shady侧面 mayst thou know
 Time's thievish progress to eternity.
 Look, what thy memory cannot contain,
 Commit to these waste blanks, and thou shalt find
 Those children nursed, deliver'd from thy brain,
 To take a new acquaintance of thy mind.
 These offices, as oft as thou wilt look,
 Shall profit thee, and much enrich thy book.

LXXXIII.

So oft have I look'd thee for my muse,
 And found such fair assistance in my verse,
 As every alien pen hath for my use,
 And under thee their poesy disperses.
 Thine eyes, that taught me to aim in high to sing,
 And heavy ignorance aloft to fly,
 Have added feathers to the learned's wing,
 And given grace a child's majesty.
 Yet be most proud of that which I compile,
 Whose influence is thine, and born of thee:
 In others' works thou dost but mend the style,
 And arts with thy sweet graces race to see:
 But thou art all my art, and dost advance
 As high as learning my rude ignorance.

LXXXIV.

Whilst I alone did call upon thy aid,
 My verse alone had all thy gentle grace:
 But now my gracious numbers are decay'd,
 And my sick Muse doth give another place.
 I grant, sweet love, thy lovely argument
 Deserves the travail of a wretched pen:
 Yet what of thee thy poet doth invent,
 He robs thee of, and pays it thee again.
 He lends thee virtue, and he stole that word
 From thy behaviour; beauty doth he give,
 And found it in thy cheek: he can afford
 No praise to thee but what in thee doth live.
 Then thank him not for that which he doth say,
 Since what he owes thee thou thyself dost pay.

LXXXV.

O, how I faint when I of you do write,
 Knowing a better spirit doth use your name,
 And in the praise thereof spends all his might,
 To make me tongue-tied, speaking of your fame!
 But since your worth, wide as the ocean is,
 The humble as the pen test sail doth bear,
 My swooty bark, inferior far to his,
 On your broad main doth wilfully appear.
 Your shallowest help will hold me up afloat,
 Whilst he upon your soundless deep doth ride;
 Or, being wreck'd, I am a worthless boat,
 He of tall building, and of goodly pride:
 Then if he thrive, and I be cast away,
 The worst was this;—my love was my decay.

LXXXVI.

Or I shall live your epitaph to make,
 Or you survive when I in earth am rotten:
 From hence your memory death cannot take,
 Although in me each part will be forgotten.
 Your name from hence immortal life shall have,
 Though I, once gone, to all the world must die:
 The earth can yield me but a common grave,
 While you entomb'd in men's eyes shall lie.

Your
 Which
 And t
 When
 You Wh

I gran
 And t
 The de
 Of the Thou Findin
 And th
 Scene
 And d
 What Thou
 In tra
 And Wh

I neve
 And ti
 I foun
 The br
 And th
 That y
 How f
 Speaki
 This si
 Which
 For I When
 The Tha

Who is Than t
 In wh
 Which Lean p
 That t
 But be
 That y
 Let bir
 Not m
 And su Making
 You
 Bein

My tor
 While Reserve
 And pa
 I think
 And, li
 To eve
 In poli
 Hearin
 And to
 But th
 Thought
 Then
 Me f

LXXXVI.

he proud full sail of his great verse,
 or the prize of all-too-precious you,
 my ripe thoughts in my brain inberse,
 their tomb the womb wherein they grew?
 is spirit, by spirits taught to write mortal pitch, that struck me dead?
 er he, nor his compeers by night
 in aid, my verse astonished.
 hat affable familiar ghost
 ightly gulls him with intelligence,
 s, of my silence cannot boast;
 sick of any fear from thence.
 en your countenance fill'd<sup>b</sup> up his line,
 ack'd I matter; that enfeebled mine.

LXXXVII.

I thou art too dear for my possessing,
 enough thou know'st thy estimate:
 ter of thy worth gives thee releasing;
 s in thee are all determinate.
 do I hold thee but by thy granting?
 hat riches where is my deserving?
 e of this fair gift in me is wanting,
 y patent back again is swerving.
 hou gav'st, thy own worth then not knowing,
 whom thou gav'st it, else mistaking;
 eat gift, upon misprision growing,
 me again, on better judgment making.
 ave I had thee, as a dream doth flatter,
 p a king, but, waking, no such matter.

LXXXVIII.

ou shalt be dispos'd to set me light,
 e my merit in the eye of scorn,
 side against myself I'll fight,
 e thee virtuous, though thou art forsworn.
 he own weakness being best acquainted, part I can set down a story
 conceal'd, wherein I am attain'd;
 s, in losing me, shalt win much glory:
 this will be a gainer too;
 ng all my loving thoughts on thee,
 tes that to myself I do,
 e vantage, double-vantage me.
 y love, to thee I so belong,
 r thy right myself will bear all wrong.

LXXXIX.

thou didst forsake me for some fault,
 ll comment upon that offence:
 my lameness, and I straight will halt;
 by reasons making no defence.
 st not, love, disgrace me half so ill,
 form upon desired change,
 yself disgrace: knowing thy will,
 uaintance strangle, and look strange:
 from thy walks; and in my tongue
 t-beloved name no more shall dwell;
 o much profane) should do it wrong,
 y of our old acquaintance tell.
 e, against myself I'll vow debate,
 ust ne'er love him whom thou dost hate.

XC.

me when thou wilt; if ever, now;
 le the world is bent my deeds to cross,
 the spite of fortune, make me bow,
 ot drop in for an after-loss:

as conjectures that this is an allusion to Dr. Dee's intercourse with a familiar spirit.
 ave the last polish.

Ah! do not, when my heart hath scap'd this sorrow,
 Come in the rearward of a conquer'd woe;
 Give not a windy night a rainy morrow,
 To linger out a purpos'd overthrow.
 If thou wilt leave me, do not leave me last,
 When other petty griefs have done their spite
 But in the onset come; so shall I taste
 At first the very worst of fortune's might;
 And other strains of woe, which now seem woe,
 Compar'd with loss of thee will not seem so.

XCI.

Some glory in their birth, some in their skill,
 Some in their wealth, some in their body's force,
 Some in their garments, though new-fangled ill;
 Some in their hawks and hounds, some in their horse;
 And every humour hath his adjunct pleasure,
 Wherein it finds a joy above the rest;
 But these particulars are not my measure,
 All these I better in one general best.
 Thy love is better than high birth to me,
 Richer than wealth, prouder than garments' cost,
 Of more delight than hawks or horses be;
 And, having thee, of all men's pride I boast.
 Wretched in this alone, that thou mayst take
 All this away, and me most wretched make.

XCII.

But do thy worst to steal thyself away,
 For term of life thou art assured mine;
 And life no longer than thy love will stay,
 For it depends upon that love of thine.
 Then need I not to fear the worst of wrongs,
 When in the least of them my life hath end.
 I see a better state to me belongs
 Than that which on thy humour doth depend.
 Thou canst not vex me with inconstant mind,
 Since that my life on thy revolt doth lie.
 O what a happy title do I find,
 Happy to have thy love, happy to die!
 But what's so blessed-fair that fears no blot?—
 Thou mayst be false, and yet I know it not:

XCIII.

So shall I live, supposing thou art true,
 Like a deceived husband; so love's face
 May still seem love to me, though alter'd-new;
 Thy looks with me, thy heart in other place:
 For there can live no hatred in thine eye,
 Therefore in that I cannot know thy change.
 In many's looks the false heart's history
 Is writ, in moods and frowns and wrinkles strange
 But Heaven in thy creation did decree
 That in thy face sweet love should ever dwell;
 Whate'er thy thoughts or thy heart's workings be,
 Thy looks should nothing thence but sweetness tell.
 How like Eve's apple doth thy beauty grow,
 If thy sweet virtue answer not thy show!

XCIV.

They that have power to hurt and will do none,
 That do not do the thing they most do show,
 Who, moving others, are themselves as stone,
 Unmoved, cold, and to temptation slow;
 They rightly do inherit Heaven's graces,
 And husband nature's riches from expense;
 They are the lords and owners of their faces,
 Others but stewards of their excellence.
 The summer's flower is to the summer sweet,
 Though to itself it only live and die;
 But if that flower with base infection meet,
 The basest weed outbraves his dignity:
 For sweetest things turn sourest by their deeds;
 Lilies that fester smell far worse than weeds.

CIV.

My friend, you never can be old,
 As were when first your eye I ey'd,
 As was your beauty still. Three winters' cold
 In the forests shook three summers' pride;
 And sateous springs to yellow autumn turn'd
 As of the seasons have I seen;
 And April perfumes in three hot Junes burn'd,
 Yet I saw you fresh, which yet are green.
 O doth beauty, like a dial hand,
 Steal from his figure, and no pace perceiv'd;
 Sweet hue, which methinks still doth stand,
 Time, and mine eye may be deceiv'd.
 Of which, hear this, thou age unbred,
 As were born, was beauty's summer dead.

CV.

My love be call'd idolatry,
 As loved as an idol show,
 As like my songs and praises be,
 Of one, still such, and ever so.
 My love to-day, to-morrow kind,
 Constant in a wondrous excellence;
 My verse, to constancy confin'd,
 As expressing, leaves out difference.
 True, and true, is all my argument,
 True, and true, varying to other words;
 As change is my invention spent,
 True, and true, which wondrous scope affords.
 True, and true, have often liv'd alone,
 True, till now, never kept seat in one.

CVI.

The chronicle of wasted time
 I see in the fairest wights,
 And make of ladies dead and lovely knights,
 Of the blazon of sweet beauty's best,
 Of foot, of lip, of eye, of brow,
 And antique pen would have express'd
 As a beauty as you master now.
 But time, all you prefiguring;
 They look'd but with divining eyes,
 They had not skill enough your worth to sing:
 O, which now behold these present days,
 How they to wonder, but lack tongues to praise.

CVII.

My own fears, nor the prophetic soul
 Of the world dreaming on things to come,
 Can yet lease of my true love control,
 As forfeit to a confin'd doom.
 The moon hath her eclipse endur'd,
 And augurs mock their own presage;
 Her eclipses now crown themselves assur'd,
 And proclaim olives of endless age.
 O, the drops of this most balmy time
 Look fresh, and Death to me subscribes,
 As if him I 'll live in this poor rhyme,
 And insults o'er dull and speechless tribes;
 And thou in this shalt find thy monument,
 When tyrants' crests and tombs of brass are spent.

CVIII.

In the brain that ink may character,
 Which not figur'd to thee my true spirit
 I would speak, what now to register,
 To express my love, or thy dear merit?
 'Tis sweetest boy; but yet, like prayers divine,
 Each day say o'er the very same;

submits—submits—acknowledges as a superior.

Counting no old thing old, thou mine, I thine,
 Even as when first I hallow'd thy fair name.
 So that eternal love in love's fresh cause
 Weighs not the dust and injury of age,
 Nor gives to necessary wrinkles place,
 But makes antiquity for aye his page;
 Finding the first conceit of love there bred,
 Where time and outward form would show it dead.

CIX.

O, never say that I was false of heart,
 Though absence seem'd my flame to qualify!
 As easy might I from myself depart,
 As from my soul, which in thy breast doth lie:
 That is my home of love; if I have rang'd,
 Like him that travels, I return again;
 Just to the time, not with the time exchange'd,—
 So that myself bring water for my stain.
 Never believe, though in my nature reign'd
 All frailties that besiege all kinds of blood,
 That it could so preposterously be stain'd,
 To leave for nothing all thy sum of good;
 For nothing this wide universe I call,
 Save thou, my rose; in it thou art my all.

CX.

Alas, 't is true, I have gone here and there,
 And made myself a motley<sup>a</sup> to the view,
 For<sup>b</sup> mine own thoughts, sold cheap what is most dear,
 Made old offences of affections new.
 Most true it is, that I have look'd on truth
 Askance and strangely; but, by all above,
 These blenches<sup>c</sup> gave my heart another youth,
 And worse essays prov'd thee my best of love.
 Now all is done, have<sup>d</sup> what shall have no end:
 Mine appetite I never more will grind
 On newer proof, to try an older friend,
 A God in love, to whom I am confin'd.
 Then give me welcome, next my heaven the best,
 Even to thy pure and most most loving breast.

CXI.

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
 The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
 That did not better for my life provide,
 Than public means, which public manners breeds.
 Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
 And almost thence my nature is subdued
 To what it works in, like the dyer's hand:
 Pity me then, and wish I were renew'd;
 Whilst, like a willing patient, I will drink
 Potions of eysell,<sup>e</sup> 'gainst my strong infection;
 No bitterness that I will bitter think,
 Nor double penance, to correct correction.
 Pity me then, dear friend, and I assure ye,
 Even that your pity is enough to cure me.

CXII.

Your love and pity doth the impression fill
 Which vulgar scandal stamp'd upon my brow;
 For what care I who calls me well or ill,
 So you o'ergreen my bad, my good allow?<sup>f</sup>

<sup>a</sup> Motley was the dress of the domestic fool, or jester; and thus the buffoon himself came to be called a motley.

<sup>b</sup> For<sup>d</sup>—wounded.

<sup>c</sup> Blenches—deviations.

<sup>d</sup> Have. This is the word of the old copy. The reading of all modern editions is—

"Now all is done, have what shall have no end."

"Now all is done" clearly applies to the blenches, the worse essays; but the poet then adds, "Assure thou what shall have no end,"—my constant affection, my unaltered friendship.

<sup>e</sup> Eysell—vinegar.

<sup>f</sup> Allow—approve.

If it be not, then love doth well denote Love's eye is not so true as all men's: no,
 How can it? O how can Love's eye be true,
 That is so vex'd with watching and with tears?
 No marvel then though I mistake my view;
 The sun itself sees not, till heaven clears.
 O cunning Love! with tears thou keep'st me blind,
 Lest eyes well-seeing thy foul faults should find.

CXLIX.

Canst thou, O cruel! say I love thee not,
 When I, against myself, with thee partake?<sup>a</sup>
 Do I not think on thee, when I forgot
 Am of myself, all tyrant, for thy sake?
 Who hateth thee that I do call my friend?
 On whom frown'st thou that I do fawn upon?
 Nay if thou lov'st on me, do I not spend Revenge upon myself with present moan?
 What merit do I in myself respect,
 That is so proud thy service to despise,
 When all my best doth worship thy defect,
 Commanded by the motion of thine eyes?
 But, love, hate on, for now I know thy mind;
 Those that can see thou lov'st, and I am blind.

CL.

O, from what power hast thou this powerful might,
 With insufficiency my heart to sway?
 To make me give the lie to my true sight,
 And swear that brightness doth not grace the day?
 Whence hast thou this becoming of things ill,
 That in the very refuse of thy deeds
 There is such strength and warrantise of skill,
 That, in my mind, thy worst all best exceeds?
 Who taught thee how to make me love thee more,
 The more I hear and see just cause of hate?
 O, though I love what others do abhor,
 With others thou shouldst not abhor my state;
 If thy unworthiness rais'd love in me,
 More worthy I to be belov'd of thee.

CLI.

Love is too young to know what conscience is;
 Yet who knows not, conscience is born of love?
 Then, gentle cheater, urge not my amiss,<sup>b</sup>
 Lest guilty of my faults thy sweet self prove.
 For thou betraying me, I do betray
 My nobler part to my gross body's treason;
 My soul doth tell my body that he may Triumph in love; flesh stays no farther reason;

<sup>a</sup> Partake—take part. A partaker was a confederate.
<sup>b</sup> Amiss—fault

But, rise
 As his t
 He is co
 To stam
 No w
 Her—

In lovin
 But tho
 In act t
 In vowi
 But wh
 When I
 For all
 And all
 For I h
 Oaths o
 And, to
 Or mad
 For I
 To s

Cupid l
 A maid
 And his
 In a col
 Which
 A datel
 And gr Against
 But at
 The boy
 I, sick
 And thi
 But t
 Whe

The litt Laid by Whilst Came t
 The fai
 Which
 And so
 Was ale
 This br
 Which Growin
 For me Came
 Love

A LOVER'S COMPLAINT.

hill whose concave womb re-worded<sup>a</sup> story from a sistering vale,
 to attend this double voice accorded,
 I laid<sup>b</sup> to list the sad-tun'd tale :
 pried a fickle maid full pale,
 papers, breaking rings a-twain,
 or world with sorrow's wind and rain.

had a platted hive of straw,
 fled her visage from the sun,
 she thought might think sometime it saw
 of a beauty spent and done.
 not scythed all that youth begun,
 all quit : but, spite of Heaven's fell rage,<sup>c</sup>
 she peep'd through lattice of sear'd age.

heave her napkin<sup>e</sup> to her eyne,
 she had conceited characters,<sup>d</sup>
 she the silken figures in the brine had woo had pelleted<sup>f</sup> in tears, reading what contents it bears ;
 seeking undistinguish'd woe,
 of all size, both high and low.

her levell'd eyes their carriage ride, battery to the spheres intend ;
 inverted their poor balls are tied to earth : sometimes they do extend right on ; anon their gazes lend pace at once, and nowhere fix'd, and sight distractedly commix'd.

or loose, nor tied in formal plat,
 in her a careless hand of pride ;
 entuck'd, descended her sheav'd<sup>g</sup> hat, or pale and pined cheek beside ;
 she threaten fillet still did bide,
 her bondage, would not break from thence,
 thickly braided in loose negligence.

favours from a maund<sup>h</sup> she drew crystal, and of bedded jet,<sup>i</sup> by one she in a river threw,
 she weeping margent she was set ;
 she applying wet to wet,
 she's hands, that let not bounty fall
 she cries "some," but where excess begs all.

chedules had she many a one,
 perus'd, sigh'd, tore, and gave the flood ;
 she my a ring of posied gold and boue,
 she m find their sepulchres in mud ;
 she mo<sup>k</sup> letters sadly penn'd in blood,

<sup>a</sup>—echoed.

to the original. But it is usually more correctly
 "The idiomatic grammar of Shakspeare's age ought to be observed."

<sup>b</sup>—handkerchief.

<sup>c</sup> characters—fanciful figures worked on the hand-

<sup>d</sup>—washing.

<sup>e</sup>—formed into pellets, or small balls.

<sup>f</sup>—made of straw, collected from sheaves.

<sup>g</sup> basket.

<sup>h</sup> So the original, the word probably meaning jet set, in some other substance.

<sup>i</sup>—

With sleided silk<sup>a</sup> feat and affectedly
 Enswarth'd, and seal'd to curious secrecy.

These often bath'd she in her fluxive eyes,
 And often kiss'd, and often gave<sup>b</sup> to tear ;
 Cried, "O false blood ! thou register of lies,
 What unapproved witness dost thou bear !
 Ink would have seem'd more black and damned
 here !"

This said, in top of rage the lines she rents,
 Big discontent so breaking their contents.

A reverend man that graz'd his cattle nigh,
 Sometime a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
 Of court, of city, and had let go by
 The swiftest hours, observed as they flew,
 Towards this afflicted fancy<sup>c</sup> fastly drew ;
 And privileg'd by age, desires to know
 In brief the grounds and motives of her woe.

So slides he down upon his grained bat,<sup>d</sup>
 And comely-distant sits he by her side ;
 When he again desires her, being sat,
 Her grievance with his bearing to divide :
 If that from him there may be aught applied
 Which may her suffering ecstasy assuage,
 'T is promis'd in the charity of age.

"Father," she says, "though in me you behold
 The injury of many a blasting hour,
 Let it not tell your judgment I am old ;
 Not age, but sorrow, over me hath power :
 I might as yet have been a spreading flower,
 Fresh to myself, if I had self-applied
 Love to myself, and to no love beside.

"But woe is me ! too early I attended
 A youthful suit (it was to gain my grace
 Of one by nature's outwards so commended,
 That maiden's eyes stuck over all his face :
 Love lack'd a dwelling, and made him her place :
 And when in his fair parts she did abide,
 She was new lodg'd, and newly deified.

"His browny locks did hang in crooked curls ;
 And every light occasion of the wind
 Upon his lips their silken parcels hurls.
 What 's sweet to do, to do will aptly find :
 Each eye that saw him did enchant the mind ;
 For on his visage was in little drawn,
 What largeness thinks in paradise was sown."

"Small show of man was yet upon his chin ;
 His phoenix down began but to appear,
 Like unshorn velvet, on that termless skin,

<sup>a</sup> Sleided silk. In Mr. Ramsay's Introduction to his edition of the Paston Letters, the old mode of sealing a letter is clearly described :—"It was carefully folded, and fastened at the end by a sort of paper strap, upon which the seal was affixed ; and under the seal a string, a silk thread, or even a straw, was frequently placed running around the letter."

<sup>b</sup> Gave is here used in the sense of gave the mind to, contemplated, made a movement towards, incited to.

<sup>c</sup> Fancy is often used by Shakspeare in the sense of love ; but here it means one that is possessed by fancy.

<sup>d</sup> Bat—club.

<sup>e</sup> Sown. Boswell says that the word means sown and that it is still so pronounced in Scotland.

their sickly radiance do amend ;
 heaven-hued sapphire and the opal blend objects manifold ; each several stone, wit well blazon'd, smil'd or made some moan.

! all these trophies of affections hot,
 unsiv'd and subdued desires the tender,
 ere hath charg'd me that I board them not,
 yield them up where I myself must render,
 is, to you, my origin and ender :
 these, of force, must your oblations be,
 I their altar, you enpatron me.

When advance of yours that phraseless hand,
 the white weighs down the airy scale of praise ;
 all these similes to your own command,
 sw'd with sighs that burning lungs did raise ;
 I me your minister, for you obey,
 I stand under you ; and to your audit comes
 I distract parcels in combined sums.

! this device was sent me from a nun,
 the sterner sanctified of holiest note ;
 she late her noble suit<sup>a</sup> in court did shun,
 the rarest havings<sup>b</sup> made the blossoms<sup>c</sup> dote ;
 she was sought by spirits of richest coat,<sup>d</sup>
 she kept cold distance, and did thence remove,
 and end her living in eternal love.

! O, my sweet, what labour is 't to leave the thing we have not, mastering what not strives ?
 I seek the place which did no form receive,
 I bring patient sports in unconstrained gyves :
 I wait her fame so to herself contrives,
 I care of battle 'scape by the flight,
 I make her absence valiant, not her night.

! pardon me, in that my boast is true ;
 the accident which brought me to her eye,
 the moment did her force subdued,
 I know she would the caged cloister fly :
 I know 'tis love put out religion's eye :
 I know she would be tempted, would she be immur'd,
 I know, to tempt all, liberty procur'd.

! O, my mighty then you are, O hear me tell !
 I know the tokens bosoms that to me belong
 I know they emptied all their fountains in my well,
 I know mine I pour your ocean all among :
 I know you o'er them, and you o'er me being strong,
 I know for your victory us all congest,
 I know I compound love to physic your cold breast.

! I know parts had power to charm a sacred sun,
 I know disciplin'd and dieted in grace,
 I know 'd her eyes when they to assail begun,
 I know vows and consecrations giving place.
 I know 'tis potential love ! vow, bond, nor space,
 I know 'tis e bath neither sting, knot, nor confine,
 I know 'tis you art all, and all things else are thine.

! I know when thou impresses, what are precepts worth the cold example ? When thou wilt inflame,
 I know coldly those impediments stand forth

it. "The noble suit in court" is, we think, the suit she offers to her in court.

single. Malone receives this as accomplishments—Mr. Dyce single.—young men ; the flower of the nobility.

richest coat—of highest descent.

Of wealth, of filial fear, law, kindred, fame !
 Love's arms are peace, 'gainst rule, 'gainst sense, 'gainst
 shame,

And sweetens, in the suffering pangs it bears,
 The aloes of all forces, shocks, and tears.

" Now all these hearts that do on mine depend,
 Feeling it break, with bleeding groans they pine.
 And supplicant their sighs to you extend,
 To leave the battery that you make 'gainst mine,
 Leading soft audience to my sweet design,
 And credent soul to that strong-bonded oath,
 That shall prefer and undertake my truth.

" This said, his watery eyes he did dismount,
 Whose sights till then were levell'd on my face
 Each check a river running from a fount
 With brinish current downward flow'd apace :
 O how the channel to the stream gave grace !
 Who, glaz'd with crystal, gate<sup>a</sup> the glowing roses
 That flame through water which their hue encloses.

" O father, what a hell of witchcraft lies
 In the small orb of one particular tear !
 But with the inundation of the eyes
 What rocky heart to water will not wear ?
 What breast so cold that is not warmed here ?
 O cleft effect ! cold modesty, hot wrath,
 Both fire from hence and chill extinctive hath !

" For lo ! his passion, but an art of craft,
 Even there resolv'd my reason into tears ;
 There my white stole of chastity I daff'd,
 Shook off my sober guards, and civil<sup>b</sup> fears ;
 Appear to him, as he to me appears,
 All melting ; though our drops this difference bore,
 His poison'd me, and mine did him restore.

" In him a plenitude of subtle matter,
 Applied to cauteles,<sup>c</sup> all strange forms receives,
 Of burning blushes, or of weeping water,
 Or swooning paleness ; and he takes and leaves,
 In either's aptness, as it best deceives,
 To blush at speeches rank, to weep at woes,
 Or to turn white and swoon at tragic shows ;

" That not a heart which in his level came Could scape the hail of his all-hurting aim,
 Showing fair nature is both kind and tame ;
 And veil'd in them, did win whom he would maim :
 Against the thing he sought he would exclaim ;
 When he must burn'd in heart-wish'd luxury,
 He preach'd pure maid, and prais'd cold chastity.

" Thus merely with the garment of a Grace
 The naked and concealed fiend he cover'd,
 That the unexperienc'd gave the tempter place,
 Which, like a cherubin, above them hover'd.
 Who, young and simple, would not be so lover'd ?
 Ah me ! I fell ; and yet do question make
 What I should do again for such a sake.

" O, that infected moisture of his eye,
 O, that false fire which in his cheek so glow'd,
 O, that forc'd thunder from his heart did fly,
 O, that sad breath his spongy lungs bestow'd,
 O, all that borrow'd motion, seeming ow'd,<sup>d</sup>
 Would yet again betray the fore-betray'd,
 And new pervert a reconciled maid !"

<sup>a</sup> Gate—got, procured.      <sup>b</sup> Civil—decorous.
<sup>c</sup> Cauteles—deceitful purposes.      <sup>d</sup> Ow'd—owned ; his own

VIII.

weet rose, fair flower, untimely pluck'd, soon vaded,<sup>a</sup> uck'd in the bud, and vaded in the spring!
 ight orient pearl, alack! too timely shaded!
 ir creature, kill'd too soon by death's sharp sting!
 Like a green plum that hangs upon a tree,
 And falls, through wind, before the fall should be.

reep for thee, and yet no cause I have;
 e why? thou left'st me nothing in thy will.
 id yet thou left'st me more than I did crave;
 e why? I craved nothing of thee still:
 O yes, dear friend, I pardon crave of thee;
 Thy discontent thou didst bequeath to me.

IX.

nus, with Adonis<sup>b</sup> sitting by her,
 ider a myrtle shade, began to woo him:
 e told the youngling how god Mars did try her,
 id as he fell to her, she fell to him.
 en thus, quoth she, the warlike god embrac'd me;
 id then she clipp'd Adonis in her arms:
 en thus, quoth she, the warlike god unlac'd me:
 if the boy should use like loving charms.
 en thus, quoth she, he seized on my lips,
 id with her lips on his did act the seizure;
 id as she fetched breath, away he skips,
 id would not take her meaning nor her pleasure.
 Ah! that I had my lady at this bay,
 To kiss and clip me till I run away!

X.

Crabbed age and youth
 Cannot live together;
 Youth is full of pleasance,
 Age is full of care:
 Youth like summer morn,
 Age like winter weather;
 Youth like summer brave,
 Age like winter bare.
 Youth is full of sport,
 Age's breath is short;
 Youth is nimble, age is lame:
 Youth is hot and bold,
 Age is weak and cold;
 Youth is wild, and age is tame.
 Age, I do abhor thee,
 Youth, I do adore thee;
 O, my love, my love is young!
 Age, I do defy thee;
 O sweet shepherd, hie thee,
 For methinks thou stay'st too long.

XI.

Beauty is but a vain and doubtful good,
 A shining gloss, that vadeth suddenly;
 A flower that dies, when first it 'gins to bud;
 A brittle glass, that 's broken presently:
 A doubtful good, a gloss, a glass, a flower,
 Lost, vaded, broken, dead within an hour.

And as goods lost are sold or never found,
 As vaded gloss no rubbing will refresh,
 As flowers dead lie wither'd on the ground,
 As broken glass no cement can redress,<sup>a</sup>
 So beauty, blemish'd once, for ever's lost,
 In spite of physic, painting, pain, and cost.

XII.

Good night, good rest. Ah! neither be my share:
 She bade good night, that kept my rest away;
 And daff'd me to a cabin hang'd with care,
 To descant on the doubts of my decay.
 Farewell, quoth she, and come again to-morrow
 Fare well I could not, for I supp'd with sorrow.

Yet at my parting sweetly did she smile,
 In scorn or friendship, nill I construe whether:
 'T may be, she joy'd to jest at my exile,
 'T may be, again to make me wander thither:
 Wander, a word for shadows like myself,
 As take the pain, but cannot pluck the pelf.

XIII.

Lord, how mine eyes throw gazes to the east!
 My heart doth charge the watch; the morning rise
 Doth cite each moving sense from idle rest.
 Not daring trust the office of mine eyes,
 While Philomela sits and sings, I sit and mark,
 And wish her lays were tuned like the lark;

For she doth welcome daylight with her ditty,
 And drives away dark dismal-dreaming night:
 The night so pack'd, I post unto my pretty;
 Heart hath his hope, and eyes their wished sight;
 Sorrow chang'd to solace, solace mix'd with sorrow,
 For why? she sigh'd, and bade me come to-morrow.

Were I with her, the night would post too soon;
 But now are minutes added to the hours;
 To spite me now, each minute seems a moon;<sup>b</sup>
 Yet not for me, shine sun to succour flowers!
 Pack night, peep day; good day, of night now borrow;
 Short, night, to-night, and length thyself to-morrow.

SONNETS TO SUNDRY NOTES OF MUSIC.

XIV.

was a lord's daughter, the fairest one of three,
 at liked of her master as well as well might be, ll looking on an Englishman, the fairest that eye could see,
 Her fancy fell a turning.
 ng was the combat doubtful, that love with love did fight,
 eave the master loveless, or kill the gallant knight:
 put in practice either, alas it was a spite Unto the silly damsel.

<sup>a</sup> Faded—faded.

<sup>b</sup> This Sonnet is found in 'Fidessa,' by B. Griffin, 1596.
 ere are great variations in that copy.

But one must be refused, more mickle was the pain,
 That nothing could be used, to turn them both to gain,
 For of the two the trusty knight was wounded with disdain:
 Alas, she could not help it!

<sup>a</sup> In the twenty-ninth volume of the 'Gentleman's Magazine'
 a copy of this poem is given, as from an ancient manuscript, in which there are the following variations:—

"And as goods lost are sold or never found,
 As faded gloss no rubbing will excite,
 As flowers dead lie wither'd on the ground,
 As broken glass no cement can unite."

<sup>b</sup> A moon. The original has an hour—evidently a misprint.
 The emendation of moon, in the sense of month, is by Steevens, and it ought to atone for some faults of the commentator.

Thus art, with arms contending, was victor of the day,
Which by a gift of learning did bear the maid away ;
Then lullaby, the learned man hath got the lady gay ;
For now my song is ended.

xv.

On a day (alack the day !),
Love, whose month was ever May,
Spied a blossom passing fair,
Playing in the wanton air :
'Through the velvet leaves the wind,
All unseen, 'gan passage find ;
That the lover, sick to death,
Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.
Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow ;
Air, would I might triumph so !
But, alas, my hand hath sworn Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn :
Vow, alack, for youth unmeet,
Youth, so apt to pluck a sweet.
Thou for whom Jove would swear
Juno but an Ethiopie were ;
And deny himself for Jove,
Turning mortal for thy love.<sup>a</sup>

xvi.

My flocks feed not,
My ewes breed not,
My rams speed not,
All is amiss :
Love is dying,
Faith 's defying,
Heart 's denying,
Causer of this.<sup>b</sup>
All my merry jigs are quite forgot,
All my lady's love is lost, God wot :
Where her faith was firmly fix'd in love,
There a nay is plac'd without remove.
One silly cross
Wrought all my loss ;
O frowning Fortune, cursed, fickle dame !
For now I see,
Incipnancy
More in women than in men remain.
In black mourn I,
All fears scorn I,
Love hath forlorn me,
Living in thrall :
Heart is bleeding,
All help needing,
(O cruel speeding !)
Fraughted with gall.
My shepherd's pipe can sound no deal,<sup>c</sup>
My wether's bell rings doleful knell ;
My curtail dog, that wont to have play'd,
Plays not at all, but seems afraid ;
With sighs so deep,
Procures<sup>d</sup> to weep,
In howling wise, to see my doleful plight.
How sighs resound
Through heartless ground,
Like a thousand vanquish'd men in bloody fight !
Clear wells spring not,
Sweet birds sing not,
Green plants bring not Forth ; they die :

<sup>a</sup> This beautiful little poem also occurs, with variations, in 'Love's Labour's Lost.'

<sup>b</sup> We have two other ancient copies of this poem—one in 'England's Helicon,' 1600; the other in a collection of Madrigals by Thomas Weelkes, 1597.

<sup>c</sup> No deal—in no degree: some deal and no deal were common expressions.

<sup>d</sup> Procures. The curtail dog is the nominative case to this verb.

Herds stand weeping,
Flocks all sleeping,
Nymphs back peeping
Fearfully.

All our pleasure known to us poor swain
All our merry meetings on the plains,
All our evening sport from us is fled,
All our love is lost, for love is dead.
Farewell, sweet lass,
Thy like ne'er was
For a sweet content, the cause of all my mean :
Poor Coridon
Must live alone,
Other help for him I see that there is none.

xvii.

Whenas thine eye hath chose the dame,
And stall'd the deer that thou shouldst strike,
Let reason rule things worthy blame,
As well as fancy, partial might :<sup>a</sup>
Take counsel of some wiser head,
Neither too young, nor yet unwed.

And when thou com'st thy tale to tell,
Smooth not thy tongue with tild talk,
Lest she some subtle practice smell ;
(A cripple soon can find a halt :)
But plainly say thou lov'st her well,
And set her person forth to sell.

What though her frowning brows be bent,
Her cloudy looks will calm ere night ;
And then too late she will repent,
That thus dissembled her delight ;
And twice desire, ere it be day,
That which with scorn she put away.

What though she strive to try her strength,
And ban and brawl, and say thee nay,
Her feeble force will yield at length,
When craft hath taught her thus to say :
" Had women been so strong as men,
In faith you had not had it then."

And to her will frame all thy ways ;
Spare not to spend,—and chiefly there
Where thy desert may merit praise,
By ringing in thy lady's ear :
The strongest castle, tower, and town,
The golden bullet beats it down.

Serve always with assured trust,
And in thy suit be humble, true ;
Unless thy lady prove unjust,
Press never thou to choose anew :
When time shall serve, be thou not slack
To proffer, though she put thee back.

The wiles and guiles that women work,
Dissembled with an outward show,
The tricks and toys that in them lurk,
The cock that treads them shall not know.
Have you not heard it said full oft,
A woman's nay doth stand for nought ?

Think women still to strive with men,
To sin, and never for to saint :
There is no heaven, by holy then,
When time with age shall them attain.
Were kisses all the joys in bed,
One woman would another wed.

<sup>a</sup> Fancy is here used as love, and might as power. Servens mischievously we should imagine, changed partial might to partial like; and Malone adopts this reading, which makes Cupid a bull-dog.

But soft; enough,—too much I fear,
Lest that my mistress hear my song;
She 'll not stick to round me i' th' ear,
To teach my tongue to be so long;
Yet will she blush, here be it said,
To hear her secrets so bewray'd.

XVIII.

Live with me, and be my love,
And we will all the pleasures prove
That hills and valleys, dales and fields,
And all the craggy mountains yields.

There will we sit upon the rocks,
And see the shepherds feed their flocks,
By shallow rivers, by whose falls
Melodious birds sing madrigals.

There will I make thee a bed of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies,
A cap of flowers, and a kirtle
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

A belt of straw and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Then live with me and be my love.

LOVE'S ANSWER.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in every shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move
To live with thee and be thy love.

XIX.<sup>a</sup>

As it fell upon a day,
In the merry month of May,
Sitting in a pleasant shade
Which a grove of myrtles made,
Beasts did leap, and birds did sing,
Trees did grow, and plants did spring:
Everything did banish moan,
Save the nightingale alone:
She, poor bird, as all forlorn,
Lean'd her breast up-till a thorn,
And there sung the dolefull' st ditty,
That to hear it was great pity:
Fie, fie, fie, now would she cry,
Teru, Teru, by and by:
That to hear her so complain,
Scarce I could from tears refrain;
For her griefs so lively shown,
Made me think upon mine own.
Ah! thought I, thou mourn'st in vain;
None take pity on thy pain:

This poem is also incompletely printed in 'England's son'; where it bears the signature Malou.

Senseless trees, they cannot hear thee;
Ruthless bears, they will not cheer thee.
King Pandion, he is dead;
All thy friends are lapp'd in lead:
All thy fellow-birds do sing,
Careless of thy sorrowing.
Even so, poor bird, like thee,
None alive will pity me.
Whilst as fickle Fortune smil'd,
Thou and I were both beguil'd.
Every one that flatters thee
Is no friend in misery.
Words are easy like the wind;
Faithful friends are hard to find.
Every man will be thy friend,
Whilst thou hast wherewith to spend;
But if store of crowns be scant,
No man will supply thy want.
If that one be prodigal,
Bountiful they will him call:
And with such-like flattering,
"Pity but he were a king."
If he be addict to vice,
Quickly him they will entice;
If to women he be bent,
They have him at commandment;
But if fortune once do frown,
Then farewell his great renown;
They that fawn'd on him before,
Use his company no more.
He that is thy friend indeed,
He will help thee in thy need;
If thou sorrow, he will weep;
If thou wake, he cannot sleep:
Thus of every grief in heart
He with thee doth bear a part.
These are certain signs to know
Faithful friend from flattering foe.

SONG.

Take, oh, take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn,
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morrow:
But my kisses bring again,
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.

Hide, oh, hide those hills of snow,
Which thy frozen bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow
Are of those that April wears.
But first set my poor heart free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.<sup>a</sup>

<sup>a</sup> The collection entitled 'The Passionate Pilgrim,' &c., ends with the Sonnet to Sundry Notes of Music which we have numbered XIX. Malou adds to the collection this exquisite song, of which we find the first verse in 'Measure for Measure.'

VERSES AMONG THE ADDITIONAL POEMS TO CHESTER'S LOVE'S MARTYR, PRINTED IN 1601.

Lest the bird of loudest lay,
On the sole Arabian tree,<sup>a</sup>
Herald sad and trumpet be,
To whose sound chaste wings obey.

But thou, shrieking harbinger,
Foul pre-currer of the fiend,
Augur of the fever's end,
To this troop come thou not near.

From this session interdict
Every fowl of tyrant wing,
Save the eagle, feather'd king:
Keep the obsequy so strict.

Let the priest in surplice white,
That defunctive music can,<sup>b</sup>
Be the death-divining swan,
Lest the requiem lack his right.

And thou, treble-dated crow,
That thy sable gender mak'st
With the breath thou giv'st and tak'st,
'Mongst our mourners shalt thou go.

Here the anthem doth commence:
Love and constancy is dead;
Phoenix and the turtle fled
In a mutual flame from hence.

So they lov'd, as love in twain
Had the essence but in one;
Two distincts, division none:
Number there in love was slain.

Hearts remote, yet not asunder;
Distance, and no space was seen:
'Twixt the turtle and his queen:
But in them it were a wonder.

<sup>a</sup> There is a curious coincidence in a passage in 'The Tempest':—

"Now I will believe
That there are unicorns; that in Arabia
There is one tree, the phoenix' throne."

<sup>b</sup> Can—knows.

So between them love did shine,
That the turtle saw his right
Flaming in the phoenix' sight:
Either was the other's mine.

Property was thus appall'd,
That the self was not the same;
Single nature's double name
Neither two nor one was call'd.

Reason, in itself confounded,
Saw division grow together;
To themselves yet either-neither.
Simple were so well compounde'd.

That it cried how true a twain
Seemeth this concordant one!
Love hath reason, reason none,
If what parts can so remain.

Whereupon it made this threne<sup>1</sup>
To the phoenix and the dove,
Co-supremes and stars of love;
As chorus to their tragic scene.

THRENOS.

Beauty, truth, and rarity,
Grace in all simplicity,
Here enclos'd in cinders lie.

Death is now the phoenix' nest;
And the turtle's loyal breast:
To eternity doth rest,

Leaving no posterity:—
'T was not their infirmity,
It was married chastity.

Truth may seem, but cannot be.
Beauty brag, but 't is not she;
Truth and beauty buried be.

To this urn let those repair
That are either true or fair;
For these dead birds sign a pray'rt.

<sup>1</sup> Threne—funeral song.

F A C T S

CONNECTED WITH

T H E L I F E A N D W R I T I N G S

O F

William Shakspeare

ABRIDGED

FROM 'WILLIAM SHAKSPERE, A BIOGRAPHY,'

BY THE AUTHOR.

17 18 19 20 21
22
23 24
25
26
27 28
29 30 31 32
33 34 35
36 37
38
39 40
41 42
43
44
45
46
47 48
49
50 51
52
53
54
55
56 57
58 59 60
61
62
63
64
65
66
67
68
69
70
71
72 73
74
75 76
77
78
79 80
81
82 83
84
85
86
87
88 89
90
91 92
93
94
95
96
97
98
99 100

TITLE

LIFE AND WRITINGS OF WILLIAM SHAKSPERE.

ON the 22nd of August, 1485, there was a battle fought for the crown of England, a short battle ending in a decisive victory. The battle-field was Bosworth. Was there in that victorious army of the Earl of Richmond an Englishman bearing the name of Chacksper, or Shake-peyre, or Shakespere, or Schakespeire, or Schakspere, or Shakspeare, or Shaksper,*—a martial name, however spelt? Of the warlike achievements of this Shaksper there is no record: his name or his deeds would have no interest for us unless there had been born, eighty years after this battle-day, a direct descendant from him—

* Whose moss, full of high thought's invention, Dust like himself heroically sound! †—

a Shaksper, of whom it was also said—

<sup>**</sup> He seems to shake a lance
As brandish'd at the eyes of ignorance. ‡

A public document bearing the date of 1596 affirms of John Shaksper of Stratford-upon-Avon, the father of William Shaksper, that his "parent and late antecessors were, for their valiant and faithful services, advanced and rewarded of the most prudent prince King Henry VII. of famous memory;" and it adds, "sithence which time they have continued at those parts [Warwickshire] in good reputation and credit." Another document of a similar character, bearing the date of 1599, also affirms upon "creditable report," of "John Shaksper, now of Stratford-upon-Avon, in the county of Warwick, gentleman," that his "parent and great-grandfather, late antecessor, for his faithful and approved service to the late most prudent prince King Henry VII. of famous memory, was advanced and rewarded with lands and tenements, given to him in those parts of Warwickshire, where they have continued by some descents in good reputation and credit." Such are the recitals of two several grants of arms to John Shaksper, confirming a previous grant made to him in 1569.

The great-grandson of the faithful and approved servant of Henry VII., John Shaksper, was a burgess of the corporation of Stratford, and was in all probability born about 1530. The family had continued in those parts, "by some descents;" but how they were occupied in the business of life, what was their station in society, how they branched out into other lines of Shaksperes, we have no record.

In 1599 John Shaksper a second time went to the * A list of the brethren and sisters of the Guild of Knowledge, near Rowington, in Warwickshire, exhibits a great number of the name of Shaksper in that fraternity, from about 1460 to 1827; and the names are spelt with the diversity here given, Shaksper being the latest.

† Spenser.

‡ Ben Jonson.

College of Arms, and, producing his own "ancient coat of arms," said that he had "married the daughter and one of the heirs of Robert Arden, of Wellingcote;" and then the heralds say—"We have likewise upon one other escutcheon impaled the same with the ancient arms of the said Arden of Wellingcote." They add that John Shaksper, and his children, issue, and posterity, may bear and use the same shield of arms, single or impaled.

The family of Arden was one of the highest antiquity in Warwickshire. Dugdale traces its pedigree uninterruptedly up to the time of Edward the Confessor. The pedigree which Dugdale gives of the Arden family brings us no nearer in the direct line to the mother of Shaksper than to Robert Arden, her great-grandfather: he was the third son of Walter Arden, who married Eleanor the daughter of John Hampden, of Buckinghamshire; and he was brother to Sir John Arden, squire for the body to Henry VII. Robert's son, also called Robert, was groom of the chamber to Henry VII. He married, and he had a son, also Robert, who married Agnes Webbe. Their youngest daughter was Mary, the mother of William Shaksper.

High as was her descent, wealthy and powerful as were the numerous branches of her family, Mary Arden, we doubt not, led a life of usefulness as well as innocence, within her native forest hamlet. She had three sisters, and they all, with their mother Agnes, survived their father, who died in December, 1556. His will is dated the 24th of November in the same year, and the testator styles himself "Robert Arden, of Wylmccote, in the paryche of Aston Cauntlow." Mary, his youngest daughter, from superiority of mind, or some other cause of her father's confidence, occupies the most prominent position in the will. She has an undivided estate and a sum of money; and, from the crop being also bequeathed to her, it is evident that she was considered able to continue the tillage. The estate thus bequeathed to her consisted of about sixty acres of arable and pasture, and a house; and was called Asbies.

In the winter of 1556 was Mary Arden left without the guidance of a father, under this somewhat naked roof-tree, now become her own. Her sister Alice was to occupy another property in Wilmecote with her mother, provided the widow would so consent; and she did consent. And so she lived a somewhat lonely life, till a young yeoman of Stratford, who had probably some acquaintance with her father, came to sit oftener and oftener upon the wooden benches in the old hall—a substantial yeoman, a burgess of the corporation in 1557 or 1558; and then in due season Mary Arden and John Shaksper were standing before the altar of the parish church of Aston Cantlow, and the house and lands of Asbies became administered by one who took possession "by the right of the said Mary," who thenceforward abided for half a century in the good town of Stratford.

There have been endless theories, old and new, affirmations, contradictions, as to the worldly calling of John Shakspeare. There are ancient registers in Stratford, minutes of the Common Hall, proceedings of the Court-leet, pleas of the Court of Record, writs, which have been hunted over with unwearied diligence, and yet they tell us nothing, or next to nothing, of John Shakspeare. When he was elected an alderman in 1565, we can trace out the occupations of his brother aldermen, and readily come to the conclusion that the municipal authority of Stratford was vested, as we may naturally suppose it to have been, in the hands of substantial tradesmen, brewers, bakers, butchers, grocers, victuallers, mercers, woollen-draperies. Prying into the secrets of time, we are enabled to form some notion of the literary acquirements of this worshipful body. On rare, very rare occasions, the aldermen and burgesses constituting the town council affixed their signatures, for greater solemnity, to some order of the court; and on the 29th of September, in the seventh of Elizabeth, upon an order that John Wheeler should take the office of bailiff, we have nineteen names subscribed, aldermen and burgesses. There is something in this document which suggests a motive higher than mere curiosity for calling up these dignitaries from their happy oblivion, saying to each, "Dost thou use to write thy name? or hast thou a mark to thyself like an honest plain-dealing man?" Alas! out of the nineteen seven only can answer, "I thank God I have been so well brought up that I can write my name." It is a matter of controversy whether John Shakspeare was one of the more clerklly corporators. We think he was; others believe he was not. In 1556, the year that Robert, the father of Mary Arden, died, John Shakspeare was admitted at the court-leet to two copyhold estates in Stratford. The jurors of the leet present that George Turnor had alienated to John Shakspeare and his heirs one tenement, with a garden and croft, and other premises, in Grenehill-street, held of the lord at an annual quit-rent; and John Shakspeare, who is present in court and does fealty, is admitted to the same. The same jurors present that Edward West has alienated to John Shakspeare one tenement and a garden adjacent in Henley Street, who is in the same way admitted, upon fealty done to the lord. Here then is John Shakspeare, before his marriage, the purchaser of two copyholds in Stratford, both with gardens, and one with a croft, or small enclosed field. In 1570 John Shakspeare is holding, as tenant under William Clopton, a meadow of fourteen acres, with its appurtenance, called Ingon, at the annual rent of eight pounds. This rent, equivalent to at least forty pounds of our present money, would indicate that the appurtenance included a house.—and a very good house. This meadow of Ingon forms part of a large property known by that name near Clopton-house. When John Shakspeare married, the estate of Asbies, within a short ride of Stratford, came also into his possession. With these facts before us, scanty as they are, can we reasonably doubt that John Shakspeare was living upon his own land, renting the land of others, actively engaged in the business of cultivation, in an age when tillage was becoming rapidly profitable—so much so that men of wealth very often thought it better to take the profits direct than to share them with the tenant?

And is all this, it may be said, of any importance in looking at the life of William Shakspeare—a man who stands above all other individual men, above all ranks of men; in comparison with whom, in his permanent influence upon mankind, generations of nobles, fighting men, statesmen, princes, are but as dust? It is something, we think. It offers a better, because a more natural, explanation of the circumstances connected with the early life of the great poet than those stories which would make him of obscure birth and menial employments. Take old Aubrey's story, the stored learned gossip and antiquary, who survived Shakspeare some eighty years:—"Mr. William Shakspeare was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, in the county of Warwick. His father was a butcher, and I have been told hereafter by some of the neighbours that when he was a boy he exercised his father's trade; but when he killed a calf he would do it in a high style, and make a speech. There was at that time another butcher's son in the town that was held not at all inferior to him for a natural wit, his acquaintance and coetaneous, but died young." The story, however, has a variation. There was at Stratford, in the year 1693, a clerk of the parish church eighty years old,—that is, he was three years old when William Shakspeare died,—and he, pointing to the monument of the poet, with the pithy remark that he was the "best of his family," proclaimed to a member of one of the Inns of Court that "this Shakspeare was formerly in this town bound apprentice to a butcher, but that he ran from his master to London." His father was a butcher, says Aubrey; he was apprenticed to a butcher, says the parish clerk.

Akin to the butcher's trade is that of the dealer in wool. It is upon the authority of Betterton, the actor, who in the beginning of the last century, made a journey into Warwickshire to collect anecdotes relating to Shakspeare, that Rowe tells us that John Shakspeare was a dealer in wool:—"His family, as appears by the register and public writings relating to that town, were of good figure and fashion there, and are mentioned as gentlemen. His father, who was a considerable dealer in wool, had so large a family, ten children in all, that though he was his eldest son, he could give him a better education than his own employment." Tradition is here, we think, becoming a little more assimilated with the truth. The considerable dealer in wool might very well have been the landed proprietor, the cultivator, that we believe John Shakspeare to have been. Not indeed was the incidental business even of a butcher, a slayer and seller of carcasses, incompatible with the occupation of a landholder. Harrison (1598), who mingles laments at the increasing luxury of the farmer with somewhat contradictory denunciations of the oppression of the tenant by the landlord, holds that the landlord is monopolising the tenant's profits:—"Not sorrowful of all to understand, that men of great per-re so far from suffering their farmers at all, that they themselves become us, tanners, SHEEPMASTERS, wood-guid non, thereby to enrich themselves the wealth of the country into having the commonalty weak, or as in feeble arms, which may in time lausible show, but, when necessity an heavy and bitter sequel." Has the mystery of the butcher, and ex- of the woolman ?

in the Bailiff's Court of Stratford, in us one John Shakspeare, a glover. that if this record be of the father of s, a young man in 1555, that he was If he were a glover in 1555, he was der of land—a land proprietor.*

Baptisms of the parish of Stratford—that William, the son of John tized on the 26th April, 1564. And want of such information is a defect ters. Baptism so immediately folose times, when infancy was surer dangers than in our own days of science, that we may believe that s first saw the light only a day or this legal record of his existence. t evidence that he was born on the rding to the common belief. But a tradition to that effect; for some v. Joseph Greene, a master of the Stratford, in an extract which he rister of Shakspeare's baptism, wrote Born on the 23rd." We turn back the registry, 1558, and we find the daughter to John Shakspeare, on the r. Again, in 1562, on the 2nd of et, daughter to John Shakspeare, is entry of burials in 1563 we find, il 30, that Margaret closed a short s. We look forward, and in 1566 nother son registered:—Gilbert, son was baptized on the 13th of October 1569 there is the registry of the lter, Joan, daughter of John Shakof April. Thus, the registry of a s no reasonable doubt that the first avourite name was preserved in the another daughter was born,—Anne, r John Shakspeare, baptized on the

In 1574 another son was baptized, Master John Shakspeare, on the 11th egister of sorrow and blighted hope ras buried on the 4th of April, 1579. hich determines the extent of John y, is that of Edmund, son of Master aptized on the 3rd of May, 1580. ad that two sisters of William were, probably before his birth. In two another son, Gilbert, came to be his en he was five years old that most precious gift to a loving boy was granted, a sister, who grew up with him. Then came another sister, who faded untimely. When he was ten years old he had another brother to lead by the hand into the green meadows. When he was grown into youthful strength, a boy of sixteen, his youngest brother was born. William, Gilbert, Joan, Richard, Edmund, constituted the whole of the family amongst whom John Shakspeare was to share his means of existence. Rowe, we have already seen, mentions the large family of John Shakspeare "ten children in all." Malone has established very satisfactorily the origin of this error into which Rowe has fallen. In later years there was another John Shakspeare in Stratford. In the books of the corporation the name of John Shakspeare, shoemaker, can be traced in 1586; in the register in 1584 we find him married to Margery Roberts, who dies in 1587; he is, without doubt, married a second time, for in 1589, 1590, and 1591, Ursula, Humphrey, and Philip are born. It is unquestionable that these are not the children of the father of William Shakspeare, for they are entered in the register as the daughter, or sons, of John Shakspeare, without the style which our John Shakspeare always bore after 1569—"Magister." There can be no doubt that the mother of all the children of Master John Shakspeare was Mary Arden; for in proceedings in Chancery in 1597 it is set forth that John Shakspeare and his wife Mary, in the 20th Elizabeth, 1577, mortgaged her inheritance of Asbies. Nor can there be a doubt that the children born before 1569, when he is styled John Shakspeare, without the honourable addition of Master, were also her children; for in 1599, when William Shakspeare is an opulent man, application is made to the College of Arms, that John Shakspeare, and his issue and posterity, might use a "shield of arms," impaled with the arms of Shakspeare and Arden. This application would in all probability have been at the instance of John Shakspeare's eldest son and heir. The history of the family up to the period of William Shakspeare's manhood is as clear as can reasonably be expected.

* See page 1044.

The year of William Shakspeare's birth was a fearful year for Stratford. The plague raged with terrific violence in the little town. It was the same epidemic which ravaged Europe in that year; which in the previous year had desolated London, and still continued there. The red cross was probably not on the door of John Shakspeare's dwelling. "Fortunately for mankind," says Malone, "it did not reach the house where the infant Shakspeare lay; for not one of that name appears on the dead list."

The parish of Stratford, then, was unquestionably the birth-place of William Shakspeare. But in what part of Stratford dwelt his parents in the year 1564? It was ten years after this that his father became the purchaser of two freehold houses in Henley Street—houses which still exist. Nine years before William Shakspeare was born, his father had also purchased two copyhold tenements in Stratford—one in Greenhill Street, one in Henley Street. The copyhold house in Henley Street, purchased in 1555, was unquestionably not one of the freehold houses in the same street, per-closed in 1574; yet, from Malone's loose way of stating that in 1555 the lease of a house in Henley Street was assigned to John Shakspeare, it has been conjectured that he purchased in 1574 the house he had occupied for many years. As he purchased two houses in 1555 in different parts of the town, it is not likely that he occupied both; he might not have occupied either. Before he purchased the two houses in Henley Street, in 1574, he occupied fourteen acres of meadow-land, with appurtenances, at a very high rent; the property is called Ingon meadow in the "Close Rolls." Dugdale calls the place where it was situated "Inge;" saying that it was a member of the manor of Old Stratford, "and signifyeth in our old English a meadow or low ground, the name well agreeing with its situation." It is about a mile and a quarter from the town of Stratford, on the road to Warwick. William Shakspeare, then, might have been born at either of his father's copyhold houses, in Greenhill Street, or in Henley Street; he might have been born at Ingon; or his father might have occupied one of the two freehold houses in Henley Street at the time of the birth of his eldest son. Tradition says that William Shakspeare was born in one of these houses; tradition points out the very room in which he was born. Let us not disturb the belief. To look upon that ancient house—perhaps now one of the oldest in Stratford—pilgrims have come from every region where the name of Shakspeare is known. The property passed into a younger branch of the poet's family; the descendants of that branch grew poorer and poorer; they sold off its orchards and gardens; they divided and subdivided it into smaller tenements; it became partly a butcher's shop, partly a little inn. The external appearance was greatly altered, and its humble front rendered still humbler. The windows in the roof were removed; and the half which had become the inn received a new brick casing. The central portion is that which is now shown as the birth-place of the illustrious man—"the myriad-minded."

There is a passage in one of Shakspeare's Sonnets, the 89th, which has induced a belief that he had the misfortune of a physical defect, which would render him peculiarly the object of maternal solicitude:—

"Say that thou didst forsake me for some fault,
And I will comment upon that offence:
Speak of my lameness, and I straight will halt;
Against thy reasons making no defence."

Again, in the 37th Sonnet:—

"As a decrepit father takes delight
To see his active child do deeds of youth,
So I, made lame by fortune's dearest spite,
Take all my comfort of thy worth and truth."

These lines have been interpreted to mean that William Shakspeare was literally lame, and that his lameness was such as to limit him, when he became an actor, to the representation of the parts of old men. We should, on the contrary, have no doubt whatever that the verses we have quoted may be most fitly received in a metaphorical sense, were there not some subsequent lines in the 37th Sonnet which really appear to have a literal meaning; and thus to render the previous lame and lameness expressive of something more than the gross self-abasement which they would otherwise appear to imply. In the following lines lame means something distinct from poor and despised:—

"For whether beauty, birth, or wealth, or wit,
Or any of these all, or all, or more,
Entitled in thy parts do crowned sit,
I make my love engrafted to this store.
So thou I am not lame, poor, nor despis'd, Whilst that this shadow doth such substance give."

Of one thing, however, we may be quite sure—that, if Shakspeare were lame, his infirmity was not such as to disqualify him for active bodily exertion. The same series of verses that have suggested this belief that he was lame also show that he was a horseman. His entire works exhibit that familiarity with external nature, with rural occupations, with athletic sports, which is incompatible with an inactive boyhood. It is not impossible that some natural defect, or some accidental injury, may have modified the energy of such a child, and have cherished in him that love of books, and traditional lore, and silent contemplation, without which his intellect could not have been nourished into its wondrous strength. But we cannot imagine William Shakspeare a petted child, chained to home, not breathing the free air upon his native hills, denied the boy's privilege to explore every nook of his own river. We would imagine him communing from the first with Nature, as Gray has painted him—

"The sewerless child Stretch'd forth his little arms and smil'd."

The only qualifications necessary for the admission of a boy into the Free Grammar School of Stratford were, that he should be a resident in the town, of seven years of age, and able to read. The Grammar School was essentially connected with the Corporation of Stratford; and it is impossible to imagine that, when the son of John Shakspeare became qualified by age for admission to a school where the best education of the time was given, literally for nothing, his father, in that year, being chief alderman, should not have sent him to the school. We assume, without any hesitation, that William Shakspeare did receive in every just sense of the word the education of a scholar; and as such education was to be had at his own door, we also assume that he was brought up at the Free Grammar School of his own town. His earlier instruction would therefore be a preparation for this school, and the probability is that such instruction was given him at home.

A question arises, did William Shakspeare receive his elementary instruction in Christianity from the books sanctioned by the Reformed Church? It has been maintained that his father belonged to the Roman Catholic persuasion. This belief rests upon the following foundation. In the year 1770, Thomas Hart, who then inhabited one of the tenements in Henley Street which had been bequeathed to his family by William Shakspeare's granddaughter, employed a bricklayer to new tile the house; and this bricklayer, by name Mosely, found hidden between the rafters and the tiling a manuscript consisting of six leaves stained gave to Mr. Peyton, an alderman sent it to Mr. Malone, through the vicar of Stratford. This paper, published by Malone in 1790, is printed in Malone's edition of Shakspeare and in Drake's 'Shakspeare'. It consists of fourteen articles, professing of faith of "John Shakspeare, a member of the holy Catholic religion," and in believing this document a fabrication. Malone, when he published his edition of Shakspeare, took some pains to ascertain the genuineness of the manuscript, and, after a very careful examination, is fully satisfied that it is genuine." In his work on the Ireland forgeries, he has obtained documents that clearly show that they have been the composition of any one of our poet's family." We not only do not believe in the composition of any one of our poet's family, but we do not believe that it is the work of a man at all. That John Shakspeare was a Catholic in the year 1568, when William was four years old, may be proved by a host of proofs. He was in that year at Stratford; he could not have been taking the Oath of Supremacy, a statute of the 1st of Elizabeth, 1558-9, which was made punishable with forfeiture of goods, with the pains of præmunire and excommunication, says Chalmers (speaking of the authenticity of this confession of Shakspeare's family were Roman Catholics, and by the fact that his father debarred him from the corporation meetings, and was at the removal of the corporate body." He was removed from the corporate body in 1585, with a distinct reason for this removal—his non-attendance at the halls. According to Chalmers, John Shakspeare did not take the Oath of Supremacy when he was a child, but retired from the corporation where he might have remained with a clear conscience or to others, being, in that day, a Popish recusant, to be persecuted, and subject to the penalties. If he left or was expelled the corporation for his religious opinions, he would, of course, be liable, in 1585, to a fine of 20*l.* for non-attendance, to crown the whole, in this his will, and testament, he calls himself a Catholic, and calls his works to assist and succour him after the holy sacrifice of the mass," with a will not be ungrateful unto them for the same," well knowing that by the Act of Supremacy the sacrifice of the mass was punishable by a year's imprisonment, a fine of 200 marks, and the bearing of the cross, or imprisonment and a fine of 100 marks. This indication appears to us as gross as can be made of a free-school, then, with some preparation, William Shakspeare goes, about the year

1571. His father is at this time, as we have said, chief alderman of his town; he is a gentleman, now, of repute and authority; he is Master John Shakspeare; and assuredly the worthy curate of the neighbouring village of Luddington, Thomas Hunt, who was also the schoolmaster, would have received his new scholar with some kindness. As his "shining morning face" first passed out of the main street into that old court through which the upper room of learning was to be reached, a new life would be opening upon him. The humble minister of religion who was his first instructor has left no memorials of his talents or his acquirements; and in a few years another master came after him, Thomas Jenkins, also unknown to fame. All praise and honour be to them; for it is impossible to imagine that the teachers of William Shakspeare were evil instructors—giving the boy husks instead of wholesome aliment. They could not have been harsh and perverse instructors, for such spoil the gentlest natures, and his was always gentle:—"My gentle Shakspeare" is he called by a rough but noble spirit—one in whom was all honesty and genial friendship under a rude exterior. His wondrous abilities could not be spoiled even by ignorant instructors.

The first who attempted to write 'Some Account of the Life of William Shakspeare,' Rowe, says, "His father, who was a considerable dealer in wool, had so large a family, ten children in all, that, though he was his eldest son, he could give him no better education than his own employment. He had bred him, it is true, for some time at a free-school, where, it is probable, he acquired what Latin he was master of; but the narrowness of his circumstances, and the want of his assistance at home, forced his father to withdraw him from thence, and unhappily prevented his further proficiency in that language." This statement, be it remembered, was written one hundred and thirty years after the event which it professes to record—the early removal of William Shakspeare from the free-school to which he had been sent by his father. We have no hesitation in saying that the statement is manifestly based upon two assumptions, both of which are incorrect:—The first, that his father had a large family of ten children, and was so narrowed in his circumstances that he could not spare even the time of his eldest son, he being taught for nothing; and, secondly, that the son, by his early removal from the school where he acquired "what Latin he was master of," was prevented attaining a "proficiency in that language," his works manifesting "an ignorance of the ancients." It may be convenient that we should in this place endeavour to dispose of both these assertions.

The family of John Shakspeare did not consist, as we have already shown, of ten children. In the year 1578, when the school education of William may be reasonably supposed to have terminated, and before which period his "assistance at home" would rather have been embarrassing than useful to his father, the family consisted of five children: William, aged fourteen; Gilbert, twelve; Joan, nine; Anne, seven; and Richard, four. Anne died early in the following year; and, in vandor parted with the premises. We hold, and we think more reasonably, that in 1578, when he mortgaged Asbies, John Shakspeare became the purchaser, or at any rate the occupier, of lands in the parish of Stratford, but not in the borough; and that, in either case, the money for which Asbies was mortgaged was the capital employed in this undertaking. The lands which were purchased by William Shakspeare of the Combe family, in 1601, are described in the deed as "lying or being within the parish, fields, or town of Old Stretford." But the will of William Shakspeare, he having become the heir-at-law of his father, devises all his lands and tenements "within the towns, hamlets, villages, fields, and grounds of Stratford-upon-Avon, Old Stratford, Bishopton, and Welcombe." Old Stratford is a local denomination, essentially different from Bishopton or Welcombe; and, therefore, whilst the lands purchased by the son in 1601 might be those recited in the will as lying in Old Stratford, he might have derived from his father the lands of Bishopton and Welcombe, of the purchase of which by himself we have no record. So, in the same way, the tenements referred to by the will as being in Stratford-upon-Avon, comprised not only the great house purchased by him, but the freeholds in Henley Street which he inherited from his father. Indeed it is expressly stated in a document of 1596, a memorandum upon the grant of arms in the Herald's College to John Shakspeare, "he hath lands and tenements, of good wealth and substance, 500*l*." The lands of Bishopton and Welcombe are in the parish of Stratford, but not in the borough. Bishopton was a hamlet, having an ancient chapel of ease. We hold, then, that in the year 1578 John Shakspeare ceased, though perhaps not wholly so, to reside within the borough of Stratford. Other aldermen are rated to pay towards the furniture of pikemen, billmen, and archers, six shillings and eight-pence; whilst John Shakspeare is to pay three shillings and four-pence. Why less than other aldermen? The next entry but one, which relates to a brother alderman, answers the question:—

"Robert Bratt, nothing in this place."

Again, ten months after,— "It is ordained that every alderman shall pay weekly, towards the relief of the poor, four-pence, save John Shakspeare and Robert Bratt, who shall not be taxed to pay anything." Here John Shakspeare is associated with Robert Bratt, who, according to the previous entry, was to pay nothing in this place; that is, in the borough of Stratford, to which the orders of the council alone apply. The return, in 1579, of Mr. Shakspeare as leaving unpaid the sum of three shillings and three pence, was the return upon a levy for the borough, in which, although the possessor of property, he might have ceased to reside. Seven years after this comes the celebrated return to the warrant of distress, that John Shakspeare has nothing to distraint upon. The jurisdiction of the Bailiff's Court of Stratford is wholly confined to the borough; and out of the borough the officers could not go. We have traced the course of this action in the bailiff's books of Stratford, beyond the entries which Malone gives us. It continued before the court for nearly five months; proceeding after proceeding being taken upon it, with a pertinacity on the part of the defendant which appears far more like the dogged resistance of a wealthy man to a demand which he thought unjust, than that of a man in the depths of poverty, seeking to evade a payment which must be ultimately enforced by the seizure of his goods, or by a prison. The distringas, which the officers of the borough of Stratford could not execute, was followed by a capias; and then, no doubt, the debt was paid, and the heavier fees of the lawyers discharged. Further, in the very year of this action, John Shakspeare ceases to be a member of the corporation; and the circumstances attending his withdrawal or removal from that body are strongly confirmatory of the view we have taken. "I find," says Malone, "on inspecting the records, that our poet's father had not attended at any hall for the seven preceding years." This is perfectly correct. At these halls, except on the very rarest occasions, the members attending do not sign their names; but after the entry of the preliminary form by the town-clerk,—such as "Stratford Burgus, ad aulam ibid. tent. vi. die Septembris anno regni dñe Elizabethæ vicesimo octavo,"—the town-clerk enters the names of all the aldermen and burgesses, and there is a dot or other mark placed against the names of those who are in attendance. The last entry in which the name of John Shakspeare is so distinguished as attending occurs in 1579. But at the hall held on the 6th of September, in the 28th of Elizabeth, is this entry:—"At this hall William Smythe and Richard Courte are chosen to be aldermen in the place of John Wheeler and John Shaxspere; for that Mr. Wheeler doth desyer to be put out of the companie, and Mr. Shaxspere doth not come to the halls when they be warned, nor hath not done of long tyme." Is it not more credible that, from the year 1579 till the year 1586, when he was removed from the corporation, in all probability by his own consent, John Shakspeare was not dwelling in the borough of Stratford,—that he had ceased to take an interest in its affairs, although he was unwilling to forego its dignities;—than that during these seven years he was struggling with hopeless poverty; that he allowed his brother aldermen and burgesses to sit in judgment on his means of paying the assessments of the borough; that they consented to reduce and altogether to discharge his assessment, although he was the undoubted possessor of property within the borough; that he proclaimed his poverty in the most abject manner, and proclaimed it untruly whilst he held any property at all, and his lands were mortgaged for a very inadequate sum, when the first object of an embarrassed man would have been to have upheld his credit by making an effort to meet every public demand? What is the most extraordinary thing of all is, that he should have recovered this long humiliation so suddenly that, in 1596, he goes to the College of Arms for additions to his armorial bearings, and states that he is worth five hundred pounds in lands and tenements. During this period he was unquestionably a resident in the parish of Stratford; for the register of that parish contains the entry of the burial of a daughter in 1579, and the baptism of a son in 1580. His grandchildren, also, are baptized in that parish in 1583 and 1585. But his assessments in "that place"—the borough—are reduced in 1578, and wholly foregone in 1579. He has ceased to be amenable to the borough assessments. The lauds of Wel-combe and Bishopton, we may fairly assume, were his home. He has not been dependent upon the trade of Stratford, whether in gloves or wool. He is a cultivator, and his profits are not very variable. His son purchases a large quantity of land in the same district a few years afterwards; and that son himself becomes a cultivator, even whilst he is the most successful dramatist of his time. That son has also his actions in the Bailiff's Court, as his father had, for corn sold and delivered, of which more hereafter. That son cleaves to his native place with a love which no fame won, no pleasure enjoyed, in the great capital,—the society of the great, the praises of the learned,—can extinguish. Neither does that son take any part in the affairs of the borough. He purchases the best house in Stratford in 1597, but the records of Stratford show that he had no desire for local honours. The father, instead of sinking into poverty, appears to us to have separated himself from the concerns of the borough, and from the society of the honest men who administered them. He probably had not more happiness in his struggle to maintain the rank of gentleman; but that he did make that struggle is, we think, consistent with all the circumstances upon record. That the children of William Shakspeare should have been brought up at Stratford,—that Stratford should have been his home, although London was his place of necessary sojourn,—is, we think, quite incompatible with the belief that, at the exact period when the poet was gaining rapid wealth as a sharer in the Blackfriars Theatre, the father was so reduced to the extremity of indigence that he had nothing to distrain upon in his dwelling in the place where he had dwelt for years, in competence and honour.

Seeing, then, that at any rate in the year 1574, when John Shakspeare purchased two freehold houses in Stratford, it was scarcely necessary for him to withdraw his son William from school, as Rowe has it, on account of the narrowness of his circumstances (the education at that school costing the father nothing), it is not difficult to believe that the son remained there till the period when boys were usually withdrawn from grammar-schools. In those days the education of the university commenced much earlier than at present. Boys intended for the learned professions, and more especially for the church, commonly went to Oxford and Cambridge at eleven or twelve years of age. If they were not intended for those professions, they probably remained at the grammar-school till they were thirteen or fourteen; and then they were fitted for being apprenticed to tradesmen, or articled to attorneys, a numerous and thriving body in those days of cheap litigation. Many also went early to the Inns of Court, which were the universities of the law, and where there was real study and discipline in direct connection with the Inns of Chancery and the Inns of Court Societies. To assume that William Shakspeare did not stay long enough at the grammar-school to obtain a very fair "proficiency in Latin," with son surdity could ne setting c works of thing tha that ther

them ma
them."
much ne
Latin pr
gical inf of Jonsu learning
notes wil
to be tak regard th
cumatan question of this a that the
with a s nature c
whilst it ancient those wh
the learn of his c had not from the dramati
mytholo and the ledge sh

It is examin
as to th
those of
We onl
that the does no ficiency early re
youthfu inventiv
Lucrece of Rom these su writers, alone o
to treat scholars and a p tempora treated the mo anythin
most pe concept visedly
be imit nature

undoubtedly one of the earliest comedies, shows—upon the principle laid down by Coleridge, that “a young author’s first work almost always bespeaks his recent pursuits”—that the habits of William Shakspeare “had been scholastic, and those of a student.” The ‘Comedy of Errors’ is full of those imitations of the ancients in particular passages which critics have in all cases been too apt to take as the chief evidences of learning. The critics of Shakspeare are puzzled by these imitations; and when they see with what skill he adopts, or amends, or rejects, the incidents of the ‘Menechmi’ of Plautus, they have no resource but to contend that his knowledge of Plautus was derived from a wretched translation, published in all probability eight or ten years after ‘The Comedy of Errors’ was written. The three Parts of ‘Henry VI.’ are the earliest of the historical plays. Those who dispute the genuineness of the First Part affirm that it contains more allusions to mythology and classical authors than Shakspeare ever uses; but, with a most singular inconsistency, in the passages of the Second and Third Parts which they have chosen to pronounce as the additions of Shakspeare to the original plays of another writer or writers, there are to be found as many allusions to mythology and classical writers as in the part which they deny to be his. We have observed upon these passages that they furnish the proof that, as a young writer, he possessed a competent knowledge of the ancient authors, and was not unwilling to display it; “but that, with that wonderful judgment which was as remarkable as the prodigious range of his imaginative powers, he soon learnt to avoid the pedantry to which inferior men so pertinaciously elung in the pride of their scholarship.” Ranging over the whole dramatic works of Shakspeare, whenever we find a classical image or allusion, such as in ‘Hamlet,’—

“A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill,”—

the management of the idea is always elegant and graceful; and the passage may sustain a contrast with the most refined imitations of his contemporaries, or of his own imitator, Milton. In his Roman plays he appears co-existent with his wonderful characters, and to have read all the obscure pages of Roman history with a clearer eye than philosopher or historian. When he employs Latinisms in the construction of his sentences, and even in the creation of new words, he does so with singular facility and unerring correctness. And then, we are to be told, he managed all this by studying bad translations, and by copying extracts from grammars and dictionaries; as if it was reserved for such miracles of talent and industry as the Farmers and the Steeveses to read Ovid and Virgil in their original tongues, whilst the dull Shakspeare, whether schoolboy or adult, was to be contented through life with the miserable translations of Arthur Golding and Thomas Phaer.* We believe that his familiarity at least with the best Roman writers was begun early, and continued late;

* See a series of learned and spirited papers by the late Dr. Mason on Farmer’s ‘Essay,’ printed in Fraser’s Magazine, 1839.

and that he, of all boys of Stratford, would be the least likely to discredit the teaching of Thomas Hunt and Thomas Jenkins, the masters of the grammar-school from 1572 till 1580.

There were other agencies than the grammar-school at work in the direction of Shakspeare’s inquiring boyhood. There are local associations connected with Stratford which could not be without their influence in the formation of his mind. Within the range of such a boy’s curiosity were the fine old historic towns of Warwick and Coventry, the sumptuous palace of Kenilworth, the grand monastic remains of Evesham. His own Avon abounded with spots of singular beauty, quiet hamlets, solitary woods. Nor was Stratford shut out from the general world, as many country towns are. It was a great highway; and dealers with every variety of merchandise resorted to its fairs. The eyes of Shakspeare must always have been open for observation. When he was twelve years old Elizabeth made her celebrated progress to Lord Leicester’s castle of Kenilworth. Was William Shakspeare at Kenilworth in that summer of 1575, when the great Dudley entertained the queen with a splendour which annalists have delighted to record, and upon which one of our own days has bestowed a fame more imperishable than that of any annals? Percy, speaking of the old Coventry Hock-play, says, “Whatever this old play or storial show was at the time it was exhibited to Queen Elizabeth, it had probably our young Shakspeare for a spectator, who was then in his twelfth year, and doubtless attended with all the inhabitants of the surrounding country at these ‘princely pleasures of Kenilworth,’ whence Stratford is only a few miles distant.” The preparations for this celebrated entertainment were on so magnificent a scale, the purveyings must have been so enormous, the posts so unintermitting, that there had needed not the flourishings of paragraphs (for the age of paragraphs was not as yet) to have roused the curiosity of all mid-England. In 1575, when Robert Dudley welcomed his sovereign with a more than regal magnificence, it is easy to believe that his ambition looked for a higher reward than that of continuing a queen’s most favoured servant and counsellor. It appears to us that the exquisite speech of Oberon in ‘A Midsummer Night’s Dream’ is founded upon a recollection of what the young Shakspeare heard of the intent of the princely pleasures of Kenilworth, and is associated with some of the poetical devices which he might have there beheld:—

“Obe. My gentle Puck, come hither: Thou remember’st
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin’s back,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song;
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-maid’s music.

Puck. I remember.

Obe. That very time I saw, (but thou couldst not,) Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all arm’d; a certain aim he took
At a fair vestal, throned by the west—
And loo’d his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts;

But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
 Quench'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon;
 And the imperial votaress passed on,
 In maiden meditation, fancy-free."

The most remarkable of the shows of Kenilworth were associated with the mythology and the romance of lakes and seas. "Triton, in likeness of a mermaid, came towards the Queen's Majesty." "Arion appeared sitting on a dolphin's back." So the quaint and really poetical George Gascoigne, in his 'Brief Rehearsal, or rather a true Copy of as much as was presented before her Majesty at Kenilworth.' But the diffuse and most entertaining coxcomb Laneham describes a song of Arion with an ecstasy which may justify the belief that the "dulcet and harmonious breath" of "the sea-maid's music" might be the echo of the melodies heard by the young poet as he stood beside the lake at Kenilworth:—"Now, Sir, the ditty in metre so aptly ended to the matter, and after by voice deliciously delivered; the song, by a skilful artist into his parts so sweetly sorted; each part in his instrument so clean and sharply touched; every instrument again in his kind so excellently tunable; and this in the evening of the day, resounding from the calm waters, where the presence of her Majesty, and longing to listen, had utterly damped all noise and din, the whole harmony conveyed in time, tune, and temper thus incomparably melodious; with what pleasure (Master Martin), with what sharpness of conceit, with what lively delight this might pierce into the hearers' hearts, I pray ye imagine yourself, as ye may." If Elizabeth be the "fair vestal throned by the west," of which there can be no reasonable doubt, the most appropriate scene of the mermaid's song would be Kenilworth, and "that very time" the summer of 1575. There were other circumstances connected with his locality which were favourable to the cultivation of the dramatic spirit in the boy-poet. It requires not the imagination of the romance-writer to assume that before William Shakspeare was sixteen, that is, before the year 1580, when the pageants at Coventry, with one or two rare exceptions, were finally suppressed, he would be a spectator of one of these remarkable performances, which were in a few years wholly to perish; becoming, however, the foundations of a drama more suited to the altered spirit of the people, more universal in its range,—the drama of the laity, and not of the church. The ancient accounts of the Chamberlain of the borough of Stratford exhibit a number of payments made out of the funds of the corporation for theatrical performances. In 1569, when John Shakspeare was chief magistrate, there is a payment of nine shillings to the Queen's players, and of twelve-pence to the Earl of Worcester's players. In 1573 the Earl of Leicester's players received six shillings and eight-pence. In 1574 "my Lord of Warwick's players" have a gratuity of seventeen shillings, and the Earl of Worcester's players of five and seven-pence. In 1577 "my Lord of Leicester's players" receive fifteen shillings, and "my Lord of Worcester's players" three and four-pence. In 1579 and 1580 the entries are more circumstantial:—

"1579. Item paid to my Lord Strange men the xith day of February at the comaunderment of Mr Bayliffe, vs.

P<sup>a</sup> at the comaunderment of Mr. Baliffe to the Countie of Essex plears, xiv. vid.
 1580. P<sup>a</sup> to the Earle of Darbyes players at the comaunderment of Mr. Baliffe, viiis. ijd."

It thus appears that there had been three sets of players at Stratford within a short distance of the time when William Shakspeare was sixteen years of age.

It is a curious circumstance that the most precise and interesting account which we possess of one of the earliest of the theatrical performances is from the recollection of a man who was born in the same year as William Shakspeare. In 1639 R. W. (R. Willis), stating his age to be seventy-five, published a line volume, called 'Mount Tabor,' which contains a passage, "upon a stage-play which I saw when I was a child," which is essential to be given in any history or sketch of the early stage:

"In the city of Gloucester the manner is (as I think it is in other like corporations) that, when players of interludes come to town, they first attend the mayor, to inform him what nobleman's servants they are, and so to get licence for their public playing; and if the mayor like the actors, or would show respect to their lord and master, he appoints them to play their first play before himself and the aldermen and common council of the city; and that is called the mayor's play, where every one that will comes in without money, the mayor giving the players a reward as he thinks fit, to show respect unto them. At such a play my father took me with him, and made me stand between his legs, as he sat upon one of the benches, where we saw and heard very well. The play was called 'The Cradle of Security,' wherein was personated a king or some great prince, with his courtiers of several kinds, amongst which three ladies were in special grace with him, and they, keeping him in delights and pleasures, drew him from his graver counsellors, hearing of sermons, and listening to good counsel and admonitions, that in the end they got him to lie down in a cradle upon the stage, where these three ladies, joining in a sweet song, rocked him asleep, that he snored again, and in the mean time closely conveyed under the clothes wherewithal he was covered a vizard like a swine's snout upon his face, with three wire chains fastened thereunto, the other end whereof being holden severally by those three ladies, who fall to singing again, and then discovered his face, that the spectators might see how they had transformed him going on with their singing. Whilst all this was acting, there came forth of another door at the farthest end of the stage two old men, the one in blue, with a sergeant-at-arms his sword on his shoulder, the other in red, with a drawn sword in his hand, and leaning with the other hand upon the other's shoulder, and so they two went along in a slow pace, round about by the skirt of the stage, till at last they came to the cradle, when all the court was in greatest jollity, and then the foremost old man with his mace stroke a fearful blow upon the cradle, wherewith all the courtiers, with the three ladies and the vizard, all vanished; and the desolate prince, starting up horror-faced, and finding himself thus sent for to judgment, made a lamentable complaint of his miserable case.

and so was carried away by wicked spirits. This prince did personate in the moral the wicked of the world; the three ladies, pride, covetousness, and luxury; the two old men, the end of the world and the last judgment. His sight took such impression in me, that when I came towards man's estate it was as fresh in my memory as if I had seen it newly acted."

We now understand why the bailiff of Stratford paid the players out of the public money. The first performance of each company in this town was the bailiff's, or the chief magistrate's, play; and thus, when the father of William Shakspeare was bailiff, the boy might have stood "between his legs as he sat upon one of the benches."

The hall of the Guild, which afterwards became the Town Hall, was the occasional theatre of Stratford. It is now a long room, and somewhat low, the building being divided into two floors, the upper of which is used as the Grammar School. The elevation for the Court at one end of the hall would form the stage; and on the other side is an ancient separate chamber to which the performers would retire. With a due provision of benches, about three hundred persons could be accommodated in this room; and no doubt Mr. Bailiff would be liberal in the issue of his invitations, so that Stratford might not grudge its expenditure of five shillings.

It would appear from Willis's description that 'The Battle of Security' was for the most part dumb show. It is probable that he was present at its performance at Gloucester when he was six or seven years of age; it evidently belongs to that class of moral plays which were of the simplest construction. And yet it was popular long after the English drama had reached its highest eminence. When the pageants and mysteries had been put down by the force of public opinion, when spectacles of a dramatic character had ceased to be employed as instruments of religious instruction, the professional players who had sprung up founded their popularity for a long period upon the ancient habits and associations of the people. Our drama was essentially formed by a course of steady progress, and not by rapid transition. We are accustomed to say that the drama was created by Shakspeare, Marlowe, Greene, Kyd, and a few others of distinguished genius; but they all of them worked upon a foundation which was ready for them. The superstructure of real tragedy and comedy had to be erected upon the moral plays, the romances, the histories, which were beginning to be popular in the very first days of Queen Elizabeth, and continued to be so, even in their very rude forms, beyond the close of her long reign.

The controversy upon the lawfulness of stage-plays was a remarkable feature of the period which we are now noticing; and, as pamphlets were to that age what newspapers are to ours, there can be little doubt that even in the small literary society of Stratford the tracts upon this subject might be well known. The dispute about the Theatre was a contest between the holders of opposite opinions in religion. The Puritans, who even at that time were strong in their zeal if not in their numbers, made the Theatre the especial object of their indignation, for its unquestionable abuses allowed them so to frame their invectives that they might tell with double force against every description of public amusement, against poetry in general, against music, against dancing, associated as they were with the excesses of an ill-regulated stage. A Treatise of John Northbrooke, licensed for the press in 1577, is directed against "dicing, dancing, vain plays, or interludes." Gosson, who had been a student of Christchurch, Oxford, had himself written two or three plays previous to his publication, in 1579, of 'The School of Abuse, containing a Pleasant Invective against Poets, Pipers, Players, Jesters, and such-like Caterpillars of a Commonwealth.' This book, written with considerable ostentation of learning, and indeed with no common vigour and occasional eloquence, defeats its own purposes by too large an aim. Poets, whatever be the character of their poetry, are the objects of Gosson's new-born hostility. The three abuses of the time are held to be inseparable:—"As poetry and piping are cousin-germans, so piping and playing are of great affinity, and all three chained in links of abuse." If the young Shakspeare had his ambition turned towards dramatic poetry when he was sixteen, that ambition was not likely to be damped by Gosson's general declamation.

The earliest, and the most permanent, of poetical associations are those which are impressed upon the mind by localities which have a deep historical interest. It would be difficult to find a district possessing more striking remains of a past time than the neighbourhood in which William Shakspeare spent his youth. The poetical feeling which the battle-fields, and castles, and monastic ruins of mid-England would excite in him, may be reasonably considered to have derived an intensity through the real history of these celebrated spots being vague, and for the most part traditional. The age of local historians had not yet arrived. The monuments of the past were indeed themselves much more fresh and perfect than in the subsequent days, when every tomb inscription was copied, and every mouldering document set forth. But in the year 1580, if William Shakspeare desired to know, for example, with some precision, the history which belonged to those noble towers of Warwick upon which he had often gazed with a delight that scarcely required to be based upon knowledge, he would look in vain for any guide to his inquiries. Some old people might tell him that they remembered their fathers to have spoken of one John Rous, the son of Geoffrey Rous of Warwick, who, having diligently studied at Oxford, and obtained a reputation for uncommon learning, rejected all ambitious thoughts, shut himself up with his books in the solitude of Guy's Cliff, and was engaged to the last in writing the Chronicles of his country, and especially the history of his native County and its famous Earls; and there, in the quiet of that pleasant place, performing his daily offices of devotion as a chantry priest in the little chapel, did John Rous live a life of happy industry till 1491. But the world in general derived little profit from his labours. Yet if the future Poet sustained some disadvantage by living before the days of antiquarian minuteness, he could still dwell in the past, and people it with the beings of his own time.

gination. The Chroniclers would, however, afford him ample materials to work into his own topography. There was a truth which was to be found amidst all the mistakes and contradictions of the annalists—the great poetical truth, that the devices of men are insufficient to establish any permanent command over events; that crime would be followed by retribution; that evil passions would become their own tormentors; that injustice could not be successful to the end; that although dimly seen and unwillingly acknowledged, the great presiding power of the world could make evil work for good, and advance the general happiness out of the particular misery. This was the mode, we believe, in which that thoughtful youth read the Chronicles of his country, whether brief or elaborate. Looking at them by the strong light of local association, there would be local tradition at hand to enforce that universal belief in the justice of God's providence which is in itself alone one of the many proofs of that justice.

Hall, the chronicler, writing his history of 'The Families of Lancaster and York,' about seventy years after the "continual dissension for the crown of this noble realm" was terminated, says,—“What nobleman liveth at this day, or what gentleman of any ancient stock or progeny is clear, whose lineage hath not been infested and plagued with this unnatural division?” During the boyhood of William Shakspeare, it cannot be doubted that he would meet with many a gentleman, and many a yeoman, who would tell him how their forefathers had been thus “infested and plagued.” The traditions of the most stirring events of that contest would at this time be about a century old; generally diluted in their interest by passing through the lips of three or four generations, but occasionally presented vividly to the mind of the inquiring boy in the narration of some amongst the “hoary-headed eld,” whose fathers had fought at Bosworth or Tewksbury. Many of these traditions, too, would be essentially local; extending back even to the period when the banished Duke of Hereford, in his bold march gathered a host of followers in the counties of Derby, Nottingham, Leicester, Warwick, and Worcester. Fields, where battles had been fought; towns, where parliaments had assembled, and treaties had been ratified; castles, where the great leaders had stood at bay, or had sallied forth upon the terrified country—such were the objects which the young poet would associate with many an elaborate description of the chroniclers, and many an interesting anecdote of his ancient neighbours. It appears to us that his dramatic power was early directed towards this long and complicated story, by some principle even more exciting than its capabilities for the purposes of the drama. It was the story, we think, which was presented to him in the evening-talk around the hearth of his childhood; it was the story whose written details were most accessible to him, being narrated by Hall with a rare minuteness of picturesque circumstance; but it was a story also of which his own district had been the scene, in many of its most stirring events. Out of ten English Historical Plays which were written by him, and some undoubtedly amongst his first performances, he has devoted eight to circumstances belonging to this memorable story. No other nation ever possessed such a history of the events of a century,—a history in which the agents are not the hard abstractions of warriors and statesmen, but men of flesh and blood like ourselves; men of passion, real crime, and virtue; elevated perhaps by the poetical art, but filled, also through that art, with such a wondrous life, that we dwell amongst them as if they were of our own day, and feel that they must have spoken as he has made them speak, and act as he has made them act. It is in vain that we are told that some events are omitted, and some transposed; that documentary history does not exhibit its evidence here, that a contemporary narrative somewhat militates against the representation there. The general truth of this dramatic history cannot be shaken. It is a philosophical history in the very highest sense of that somewhat abused term. It contains the philosophy that can only be produced by the union of the noblest imagination with the most just and temperate judgment. It is the loftiness of the poetical spirit which has enabled Shakspeare alone to write this history with impartiality. Open the chroniclers, and we find the prejudices of the Yorkist or the Lancastrian manifesting the intensity of the old factious hatred. Who can say to which faction Shakspeare belongs? He has comprehended the whole, whilst others knew only a part.

“From Ravenspurg to Cotswold,”*

* Richard II., Act 2, scene 3.

The last play of the series which belongs to the war of the Roses is unquestionably written altogether with a more matured power than those which preceded it; yet the links which connect it with the other three plays of the series are so unbroken, the treatment of character is so consistent, and the poetical conception of the whole so uniform, that, whatever amount of criticism may be yet in store to show that our view is incorrect, we now confidently speak of them all as the plays of Shakspeare, and of Shakspeare alone. Matured, especially in its wonderful exhibition of character, as the 'Richard III.' is, we cannot doubt that the subject was very early familiar to the young poet's mind. The Battle of Bosworth Field was the great event of his own locality, which for a century had fixed the government of England. The course of the Reformation, and especially the dissolution of the Monasteries, had produced great social changes, which were in operation at the time in which William Shakspeare was born; whose effects, for good and for evil, he must have seen working around him, as he grew from year to year in knowledge and experience. But those events were too recent, and indeed of too delicate a nature, to assume the poetical aspect in his mind. They abided still in the region of prejudice and controversy. It was dangerous to speak of the great religious divisions of the kingdom with a tolerant impartiality. History could scarcely deal with these opinions in a spirit of justice. Poetry, thus, which has regard to what is permanent and universal, has passed by these matters, important as they are. But the great event which placed the Tudor family on the throne, and gave England a stable government, however occasionally in a religious division, was an event not upon such a mind as that of his ancestor, there can be little doubt of the Earl of Richmond. We are assured, by lands in Wardle of Bosworth would therefore be well as a local interest. Burton, who was born about ten years before Shakspeare, tells us "that his great-grandfather Hardwick, of Linley, near Loughborough, was a very short stature, but active and his service to Henry, with some doubt he lay at Atherston, became a great advantage to him in the attack, and he was slain by the wind." Burton in 1622, that the inhabitants living near Bosworth Field, more properly called Bosworth, have many occurrences and passages yet fresh in memory, by reason that some persons who were living at the battle fought, were living at the battle many years, of which persons myself have heard of their disclosures, and they are now viewing in relation to the second hand." This "living years" would take us back to the time of the battle. But certainly there is something in Burton's story, to enable us to understand Shakspeare, even as a very young man, who was conversed with "some persons there" who were present at a battle fought in 1485. That, probably of himself says, he might have seen the second-hand "is probably the plain derives its name from the fact that the plain was fought in a large, flat plain, and the distance from this town, Shenton, Sutton, Dadlington, and his town was the most worthy town and was therefore called Bosworth. The battle was fought in this plain in a remarkable place: By a little distance the common report is, that at the battle Henry Earl of Richmond was slain by a blow from a lance, and that the lance was broken in two; by divers arrows, and other warlike accoutrements, and arrowheads here found, whereof some were dug up, of which some were in my custody, being of a long and narrow shape, far greater than any now in use, and in the opinion of the inhabitants, who have many occurrences yet fresh in memory." All two stories connected with the one was the vision of King Richard, who was running about him, not suffering, still crying 'Revenge.' Hall says:—"The fame went that he had a fearful and a terrible dream, for it was in his sleep, that he saw divers images of suffering him to take any quiet or rest." Burton says, previous to his description of the dream, "The vision is reported to be in this manner." And certainly his account of the fearful ghosts "still crying Revenge" is essentially different from that of the chronicler. Shakspeare has followed the more poetical account of the old local historian; which, however, could not have been known to him:—

"Methought the souls of all that I have murder'd Came to my tent; and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard."

Did Shakspeare obtain his notion from the same source as Burton—from "relation of the inhabitants who have many occurrences and passages yet fresh in memory?"

The localities amidst which Shakspeare lived were, as we have thus seen, highly favourable to his cultivation of a poetical reverence for antiquity. But his unerring observation of the present prevented the past becoming to him an illusion. He had always an earnest patriotism; he had a strong sense of the blessings which had been conferred upon his own day through the security won out of peril and suffering by the middle classes. The destruction of the old institutions, after the first evil effects had been mitigated by the energy of the people, had diffused capital, and had caused it to be employed with more activity. But he, who scarcely ever stops to notice the political aspects of his own day, cannot forbear an indignant comment upon the sufferings of the very poorest, which, if not caused by, were at least coincident with, the great spoliation of the property of the Church. Poor Tom, "who is whipped from tithing to tithing, and stocked, punished, and imprisoned," was no fanciful portrait; he was the creature of the pauper legislation of half a century. Exhortations in the churches, "for the furtherance of the relief of such as were in unfeigned misery," were prescribed by the statute of the 1st of Edward VI.; but the same statute directs that the unhappy wanderer, after certain forms of proving that he has not offered himself for work, shall be marked V with a hot iron upon his breast, and adjudged to be "a slave" for two years to him who brings him before justices of the peace; and the statute goes on to direct the slave-owner "to cause the said slave to work by beating, chaining, or otherwise." Three years afterwards the statute is repealed, seeing that it could not be carried into effect by reason of the multitude of vagabonds and the extremity of their wants. The whipping and the stocking were applied by successive enactments of Elizabeth. The gallows, too, was always at hand to make an end of the wanderers when, hunted from tithing to tithing, they inevitably became thieves. Nothing but a compulsory provision for the maintenance of the poor could then have saved England from a fearful Jacquerie. It cannot reasonably be doubted that the vast destruction of capital by the dissolution of the monasteries threw for many years a quantity of superfluous labour upon the yet unsettled capital of the ordinary industry of the country. That Shakspeare had witnessed much of this misery is evident from his constant disposition to decry "a soul of goodness in things evil," and from his indignant hatred of the heartlessness of petty authority:—

"Thou rascal heeds, hold thy bloody hand."

And yet, with many social evils about him, the age of Shakspeare's youth was one in which the people were making a great intellectual progress. The poor were ill provided for. The Church was in an unsettled state, attacked by the natural restlessness of those who looked upon the Reformation with regret and hatred, and by the rigid enemies of its traditionary ceremonies and ancient observances, who had sprung up in its bosom. The promises which had been made that education should be fostered by the State had utterly failed; for even the preservation of the universities, and the protection and establishment of a few grammar-schools, had been unwillingly conceded by the avarice of those daring statesmen who had swallowed up the riches of the ancient establishment. The genial spirit of the English yeomanry had received a check from the intolerance of the powerful sect who frowned upon all sports and recreations—who despised the arts—who held poets and pipers to be "caterpillars of a commonwealth." But yet the wonderful stirring up of the intellect of the nation had made it an age favourable for the cultivation of the highest literature; and most favourable to those who looked upon society, as the young Shakspeare must have looked, in the spirit of cordial enjoyment and practical wisdom.

Charlote:—the name is familiar to every reader of Shakspeare; but it is not presented to the world under the influence of pleasant associations with the world's poet. The story, which was first told by Rowe, must be here repeated:—"An extravagance that he was guilty of forced him both out of his country, and that way of living which he had taken up; and though it seemed at first to be a blemish upon his good manners, and a misfortune to him, yet it afterwards happily proved the occasion of exerting one of the greatest geniuses that ever was known in dramatic poetry. He had, by a misfortune common enough to young fellows, fallen into ill company, and, amongst them, some that made a frequent practice of deer-stealing engaged him more than once in robbing a park that belonged to Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlote, near Stratford. For this he was prosecuted by that gentleman, as he thought, somewhat too severely; and, in order to revenge that ill usage, he made a ballad upon him. And though this, probably the first essay of his poetry, be lost, yet it is said to have been so very bitter, that it redoubled the prosecution against him to that degree, that he was obliged to leave his business and family in Warwickshire for some time, and shelter himself in London."*

The good old gossip Aubrey is wholly silent about the deer-stealing and the flight to London, merely saying, "This William, being inclined naturally to poetry and acting, came to London, I guess about eighteen." But there were other antiquarian gossips of Aubrey's age, who have left us their testimony upon this subject. The Reverend William Fulman, a fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, who died in 1688, bequeathed his papers to the Reverend Richard Davies of Sandford, Oxfordshire; and on the death of Mr. Davies, in 1707,

* 'Some Account of the Life of William Shakespear,' written by Mr. Rowe.

these papers were deposited in the library of Corpus Christi. Fulman appears to have made some collections for the biography of our English poets, and under the name Shakspeare he gives the dates of his birth and death. But Davies, who added notes to his friend's manuscripts, affords us the following piece of information:—"He was much given to all unluckiness in stealing venison and rabbits; particularly from Sir Lucy, who had him oft whipped, and sometimes imprisoned, and at last made him fly his native country, to his great advancement. But his revenge was so great, that he is his Justice Clodpate, and calls him a great man, and that, in allusion to his name, bore three louses rampant for his arms." The accuracy of this chronicler, as to events supposed to have happened a hundred years before he wrote, may be inferred from his correctness in what was accessible to him. Justice Clodpate is a new character; and the three louses rampant have diminished strangely from the "dozen white luses" of Master Slender. In Mr. Davies's account we have no mention of the ballad—through which, according to Rowe, the young poet revenged his "ill usage." But Capell, the editor of Shakspeare, found a new testimony to that fact: "The writer of his 'Lil' the first modern, [Rowe] speaks of a 'lost ballad' which added fuel, he says, to the knight's before-conceived anger, and 'redoubled the prosecution;' and calls the ballad 'the first essay of Shakspeare's poetry: one stanza of it, which has the appearance of genuine, was put into the editor's hands many years ago by an ingenious gentleman (grandson of its preserver), with this account of the way in which it descended to him: Mr. Thomas Jones, who dwelt at Tarbick, a village in Worcestershire, a few miles from Stratford-on-Avon, and died in the year 1703, aged upwards of ninety, remembered to have heard from several old people at Stratford the story of Shakspeare's robbing Sir Thomas Lucy's park; and their account of it agreed with Mr. Rowe's, with this addition—that the ballad written against Sir Thomas by Shakspeare was stuck upon his park-gate, which exasperated the knight to apply to a lawyer at Warwick to proceed against him. Mr. Jones had put down in writing the first stanza of the ballad, which was all he remembered of it, and Mr. Thomas Wilkes (my grandfather) transmitted it to my father by memory, who also took it in writing." This, then, is the entire evidence as to the deer-stealing tradition. According to Rowe, the young Shakspeare engaged more than once in robbing a park, for which he was prosecuted by Sir Thomas Lucy; he made a ballad upon his prosecutor, and then, being more severely pursued, fled to London. According to Davies, he was much given to all unluckiness in stealing venison and rabbits; for which he was often whipped, sometimes imprisoned, and at last forced to fly the country. According to Jones, the tradition of Rowe was correct as to robbing the park; and the obnoxious ballad being stuck upon the park-gate, a lawyer of Warwick was authorised to prosecute the offender. The tradition is thus full of contradictions upon the face of it. It necessarily would be so, for each of the witnesses speaks of circumstances that must have happened a hundred

We must examine the credibi- therefore by inquiring what was to the offence for which William have been prosecuted; what was inion as to the offence; and what sir Thomas Lucy as regarded his s. on at the period in question was chapter 21. The ancient forest- y to the possessions of the Crown; 2nd of Henry VIII. an Act was ion of "every inheritor and poss- d, and tenements," which made d the taking of rabbits and hawks, s repealed in the 1st of Edward kly re-enacted in the 3rd and 4th (and 1550), it being alleged that vailed to such an extent through- royal and private parks, that in s within a few miles of London e slain in one day. For the due offences the taking of deer was But the Act was again repealed In the 5th of Elizabeth it was ent once more to make the offence at this was successfully resisted; hat, if any person by night or by unlawfully break or enter into any other several ground closed with and used for the keeping, breed- of deer, and so wrongfully hunt, take, kill, or slay any deer within ark, or closed ground with wall, e, and used for deer, as is afore- three months' imprisonment, pay party offended, and find sureties behaviour. But there is a clause which renders it doubtful whether king deer could be applied twenty sing of the Act, in the case of Sir Provided always, That this Act, or therein, extend not to any park or reafter to be made and used for deer, r licence of our Sovereign Lady the successors, or progenitors." At the Charlote, it is said, was not a deer- enclosed ground royally licensed. ty-two years after the passing of this here was no remedy for deer-stealing or trespass) in grounds not enclosed at Act. The statute of the 3rd of at for offences within such grounds y provided by the Act of Elizabeth, t. It appears to us, however, that ase against the tradition too strongly s that Charlote was not a licensed that, therefore, its venison continued ill the statute of James. The Act of onemplates any "several ground" y, pale, or hedge, and used for the and as Sir Thomas Lucy built the cote in 1558, it may reasonably be supposed that at the date of the statute the domain of Charlote was closed with wall, pale, or hedge. The deer-stealing tradition, however, has grown more minute as it has advanced in age. Charlote, according to Mr. Samuel Ireland, was not the place of Shakspeare's unlucky adventures. The Park of Fullbrooke, he says, was the property of Sir Thomas Lucy; and he gives us a drawing of an old house where the young offender was conveyed after his detection. Upon the Ordnance Map of our own day is the Deer Barn, where, according to the same veracious tradition, the venison was concealed. A word or two disposes of this part of the tradition: Fullbrooke did not come into the possession of the Lucy family till the grandson of Sir Thomas purchased it in the reign of James I. We have seen, then, that for ten years previous to the passing of the Act of Elizabeth for the preservation of deer there had been no laws in force except the old forest-laws, which applied not to private property. The statute of Elizabeth makes the bird-nesting boy, who climbs up to the hawk's eyrie, as liable to punishment as the deer-stealer. The taking of rabbits, as well as deer, was felony by the statutes of Henry VIII. and Edward VI.; but from the time of Henry VIII. to James I. there was no protection for rabbits; they were feræ natura. Our unhappy poet, therefore, could not be held to steal rabbits, however fond he might be of hunting them; and certainly it would have been legally unsafe for Sir Thomas Lucy to have whipped him for such a disposition. Pheasants and partridges were free for men of all condition to shoot with gun or cross-bow, or capture with hawk. There was no restriction against taking hares except a statute of Henry VIII., which, for the protection of hunting, forbade tracking them in the snow. With this general right of sport it is scarcely to be expected that the statute against the taking of deer should be very strictly observed by the bold yeomanry of the days of Elizabeth; or that the offence of a young man should have been visited by such severe prosecution as should have compelled him to fly the country. The penalty for the offence was a defined one. The short imprisonment might have been painful for a youth to bear, but it would not have been held disgraceful. All the writers of the Elizabethan period speak of killing a deer with a sort of jovial sympathy, worthy the descendants of Robin Hood. "I'll have a buck till I die, I'll slay a doe while I live," is the maxim of the Host in 'The Merry Devil of Edmon- ton;' and even Sir John, the priest, reproves him not: he joins in the fun. With this loose state of public opinion, then, upon the subject of venison, is it likely that Sir Thomas Lucy would have pursued for such an offence the eldest son of an alderman of Stratford with any extraordinary severity? The knight was nearly the most important person residing in the immediate neighbourhood of Stratford. In 1578 he had been High Sheriff. At the period when the deer-stealing may be supposed to have taken place he was seeking to be member for the county of Warwick, f- which he was returned in 1584. He was in the habit of friendly intercourse with the residents of Stratford, for in 1583 he was chosen as an arbitrator in a matter of dispute by Hamnet Sadler, the friend of John Shakspeare and of his son. All these considerations tend, we think, to show that the improbable deer-stealing tradition is based, like many other stories connected with Shakspeare, on that vulgar love of the marvellous which is not satisfied with the wonder which a being eminently endowed himself presents, without seeking a contrast of profligacy, or meanness, or ignorance in his early condition, amongst the tales of a rude generation who came after him, and, hearing of his fame, endeavoured to bring him as near as might be to themselves.

Charlcote, then, shall not, at least by us, be surrounded by unpleasant associations in connexion with the name of Shakspeare. It is, perhaps, the most interesting locality connected with that name; for in its great features it is essentially unchanged. There stands, with slight alterations, and those in good taste, the old mansion as it was reared in the days of Elizabeth. A broad avenue leads to its great gateway, which opens into the court and the principal entrance. We would desire to people that hall with kindly inmates; to imagine the fine old knight, perhaps a little too puritanical, indeed, in his latter days, living there in peace and happiness with his family; merry as he ought to have been with his first wife, Jocosca (whose English name, Joyce, soundeth not quite so pleasant), whose epitaph, by her husband, is honourable alike to the deceased and to the survivor. We can picture him planting the second avenue, which leads obliquely across the park from the great gateway to the porch of the parish church. It is an avenue too narrow for carriages, if carriages then had been common; and the knight and his lady walk in stately guise along that grassy pathway, as the Sunday bells summon them to meet their humble neighbours in a place where all are equal. Charlcote is full of rich woodland scenery. The lime-tree avenue may, perhaps, be of a later date than the age of Elizabeth; and one elm has evidently succeeded another from century to century. But there are old gnarled oaks and beeches dotted about the park. Its little knolls and valleys are the same as they were two centuries ago. The same Avon flows beneath the gentle elevation on which the house stands, sparkling in the sunshine as brightly as when that house was first built. There may we still lie

"Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood," and doubt not that there was the place to which

"A poor sequester'd stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish."

There may we still see

"A careless herd, Full of the pasture," leaping gaily along, or crossing the river at their own will in search of fresh fields and low branches whereon to browse. The village of Charlcote is now one of the prettiest of objects. Whatever is new about it—and most of the cottages are new—looks like a restoration of what was old. The same character prevails in the neighbouring village of Hampton Lucy; and it may not be too much to assume that the memory of him who walked in these pleasant places in his younger days, long before the sound of his greatness had gone forth to the ends of the earth, has led to the desire to preserve here something of the architectural character of the age in which he lived.

In the sixteenth century young men married early. In the middle ranks there was little outfit required to begin housekeeping. A few articles of useful furniture satisfied their simple tastes; and we doubt not there was as much happiness seated on the wooden bench as now on the silken ottoman, and as light hearts tripped over the green rushes as upon the Persian carpet. A silver bowl or two, a few spoons, constituted the display of the more ambitious; but for use the treen platter was at once clean and substantial, though the pewter dish sometimes graced a solemn merry-making. Employment, especially agricultural, was easily obtained by the industrious; and the sons of the yeomen, whose ambition did not drive them into the towns to pursue commerce, or to the universities to try for the prizes of professions, walked humbly and contentedly in the same road as their fathers had walked before them. They tilled a little land with indifferent skill, and their herds and flocks gave food and raiment to their household. Surrounded by the cordial intimacies of the class to which he belonged, it is not difficult to understand how William Shakspeare married early; and the very circumstance of his so marrying is tolerably clear evidence of the course of life in which he was brought up. It has been a sort of fashion of late years to consider that Shakspeare was clerk to an attorney. Thomas Nash in 1589 published this sentence: "It is a common practice now-a-days, among a sort of shifting companions, that run through every art and thereby none, to leave the trade of Noverint, whereto they was born, and busy themselves with the endearments of art, that could scarcely latinize their neck-verse if they should have need; yet English Seneca, read by candlelight, yields many good sentences, as Blind is a Beggar, and so forth: and, if you entreat him full in a frosty morning, he will afford you whole Hamlets. I should say handfulls, of tragical speeches." This quotation is held to furnish the external evidence that Shakspeare had been an attorney, by the connexion here implied of "the trade of Noverint" and "whole Hamlets." Noverint was the technical beginning of a law. It is imputed, then, by Nash, to a sort of shifting companions, that, running through every art and thereby by none, they attempt dramatic composition, drawing their tragical speeches from English Seneca. Does this description apply to Shakspeare? Was he thinking of no art? In 1589 he was established in life as a student in the Blackfriars Theatre. Does the use of the term "whole Hamlets" fix the allusion upon him? It appears to us only to show that some tragedy called "Hamlet," it may be Shakspeare's, was then in existence; and that it was a play also at which Nash might seem to us that there is any absolute connexion between the Noverint and the Hamlet. The external evidence of this passage (and it is the only evidence of such a character that has been found) wholly fails, we think, in showing that Shakspeare was in 1589 reputed to have been an attorney. But had he pursued this occupation, either at Stratford or in London, it is tolerably clear that there would have been ample external evidence for the establishment of the fact. In those times an attorney was employed in almost every transaction between man and man, of any importance. Deeds, bonds, indentures, were much more common when legal documents were untaxed, and legal assistance was comparatively cheap. To every document attesting witnesses were numerous; and the attorney's clerk, as a matter of course, was amongst the number. Such papers and parchments are better secured against the ravages of time than any other manuscripts. It is scarcely possible that, if Shakspeare had been an attorney's clerk, his name would not have appeared in some such document, as a subscribing witness.* No such signature has ever been found. This fact appears to us to dispose of Malone's confident belief that upon Shakspeare leaving school he was placed for two or three years in the office of one of the seven attorneys who practised in the Court of Record in Stratford. Malone adds, "The comprehensive mind of our poet, it must be owned, embraced almost every object of nature, every trade, and every art, the manners of every description of men, and the general language of almost every profession: but his knowledge and application of legal terms seem to me not merely such as might have been acquired by the casual observation of his all-comprehending mind; it has the appearance of technical skill; and he is so fond of displaying it on all occasions, that there is, I think, some ground for supposing that he was early initiated in at least the forms of law." Malone then cites a number of passages exemplifying Shakspeare's knowledge and application of legal terms. The theory was originally propounded by Malone in his edition of 1790; and it gave rise to many subsequent notes of the commentators, pointing out these technical allusions. The frequency of their occurrence, and the accuracy of their use, are, however, no proof to us that Shakspeare was professionally a lawyer. There is every reason to believe that the principles of law, especially the law of real property, were much more generally understood in those days than in our own. Educated men, especially those who possessed property, looked upon law as a science instead of a mystery; and its terms were used in familiar speech instead of being regarded as a technical jargon. When Hamlet says, "This fellow might be in his time a great buyer of land, with his statutes, his recognizances, his fines, his double vouchers, his recoveries," he employs terms with which every gentleman was familiar, because the owner of property was often engaged in a practical acquaintance with them. This general knowledge, which it would be very remarkable

* Mr. Wheeler, of Stratford, having taken up the opinion many years ago, upon the suggestion of Malone, that Shakspeare might have been in an attorney's office, has availed himself of his opportunities as a solicitor to examine hundreds of documents of Shakspeare's time, in the hope of discovering his signature. The examination was altogether fruitless.

if Shakspeare had not acquired, involves the use of the familiar law-terms of his day, fee simple, fine and recovery, entail, remainder, escheat, mortgage. The commonest practice of the law, such as a sharp boy would have learnt in two or three casual attendances upon the Bailiff's Court at Stratford, would have familiarized Shakspeare very early with the words which are held to imply considerable technical knowledge—action, bond, warrant, bill, suit, plea, arrest. It must not be forgotten that the terms of law, however they may be technically applied, belong to the habitual commerce of mankind; they are no abstract terms, but essentially deal with human acts, and interests, and thoughts: and it is thus that, without any fanciful analogies, they more readily express the feelings of those who use them with a general significancy, than any other words that the poet could apply.

We hold, then, that William Shakspeare, the son of a possessor and cultivator of land, a gentleman by descent, married to the heiress of a good family, comfortable in his worldly circumstances, married very early the daughter of one in a similar rank of life, and in all probability did not quit his native place when he so married. The marriage-bond, which was discovered a few years since, has set at rest all doubt as to the name and residence of his wife. She is there described as Anne Hathway, of Stratford, in the diocese of Worcester, maiden. Rowe, in his 'Life,' says—"Upon his leaving school he seems to have given entirely into that way of living which his father proposed to him; and in order to settle in the world, after a family manner, he thought fit to marry while he was yet very young. His wife was the daughter of one Hathaway, said to have been a substantial yeoman in the neighbourhood of Stratford." At the hamlet of Shottery, which is in the parish of Stratford, the Hathaways had been settled forty years before the period of Shakspeare's marriage; for in the Warwickshire Surveys, in the time of Philip and Mary, it is recited that John Hathaway held property at Shottery, by copy of court-roll, dated 20th of April, 34th of Henry VIII. (1543).* The Hathaway of Shakspeare's time was named Richard; and the intimacy between him and John Shakspeare is shown by a precept in an action against Richard Hathaway, dated 1576, in which John Shakspeare is his bondman. Before the discovery of the marriage-bond Malone had found a confirmation of the traditional account that the maiden name of Shakspeare's wife was Hathaway; for Lady Barnard, the grand-daughter of Shakspeare, makes bequests in her will to the children of Thomas Hathaway, "her kinsman." But Malone doubts whether there were not other Hathaways than those of Shottery, residents in the town of Stratford, and not in the hamlet included in the parish. This is possible. But, on the other hand, the description in the marriage-bond of Anne Hathaway, as of Stratford, is no proof that she was not of Shottery; for such a document would necessarily have regard only to the parish of the person described. Tradition, always valuable when it is not opposed to evidence, has associated for many years the cottage of ten years after his marriage, when his e in the prime of womanhood. When * therefore, connects the saying of h Shakspeare's early love,—“ I like not as a great peard,”—he scarcely does n powers of observation and his book-history of the most imaginative minds, men of great ability, would show that and in the early marriages, of this as generally fallen upon women older and this without any reference to inte-But Mr. de Quincey holds that Shak-ack on this part of his youthful history years, breathes forth pathetic counsels into which his own inexperience had the disparity of years between himself notices in a beautiful scene of the

* The Shottery property, which was called Howland, remained with the descendants of the Hathaways till 1828.

In this scene Viola, disguised as a one of whom it is said—

“ All yet belle thy happy years
As art a man ”—

Duke to own that his eye “ hath stay'd
” Viola, who is enamoured of the replies,—“ A little, by your favour;”
used to describe the “ kind of woman,” Duke's “ complexion ” and the Duke's is who in the stage representation of to otherwise than make him a grave or forty, a staid and dignified man, Shakspeare's whole conception of the
would be a difference of twenty years Viola. No wonder, then, that the the Duke dramatically exclaim,—

“ Leave! Let still the woman take in herself; so wears she to him,
e level in her husband's heart.”

“ However we do praise ourselves, are more giddy and unfirm,
g. wavering, sooner lost and worn,
n's are.”

nels, therefore, which Shakspeare is breathe in his maturer years, have is own giddy and unfirm fancies. We at, upon the general principle upon subjects his conception of what is indi-that is universally true, he would have adopted whatever was peculiar in his f it had been emphatically recom-pation through the medium of his self-Shakspeare wrote these lines at a time of when a slight disparity of years be-his wife would have been a very poor conscience that his affection could and it certainly does happen, as a tion to his supposed “ earnestness in as to the inverted disparity of years, etty clearly an appeal to the lessons erience,” † that at this precise period red from his constant attendance upon are, in the ‘ Encyclopædia Britannica.’ Encyclopædia Britannica.

the stage, purchasing land in his native place, and thus seeking in all probability the more constant companionship of that object of his early choice of whom he is thus supposed to have expressed his distaste. It appears to us that this is a tolerably convincing proof that his affections could hold the bent, however he might dramatically and poetically have said,—

“ Then let thy love be younger than thyself,
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent :
For women are as roses; whose fair flower,
Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour.”

The marriage-bond of Shakspeare, which may be seen in the Consistorial Court of Worcester, was first published by Mr. Wheler in 1836, having been previously discovered by Sir R. Phillips. It consists of a bond to the officers of the Ecclesiastical Court, in which Falk Sandells, of the county of Warwick, farmer, and John Rychardson, of the same place, farmer, are bound in the sum of forty pounds, &c. It is dated the 25th day of November, in the 25th year of Elizabeth (1582). The date of this marriage-bond, and the date of the birth of Shakspeare's first child, have led to the belief that the marriage was forced upon a very young man by the friends of a woman whom he had injured. We believe that this is one of the cases in which we may fall into error by attempting to decide without knowing all the facts. We hold that the licence for matrimony, obtained from the Consistorial Court at Worcester, was a permission sought for under no extraordinary circumstances;—still less that the young man who was about to marry was compelled to urge on the marriage as a consequence of previous imprudence. We believe, on the contrary, that the course pursued was strictly in accordance with the customs of the time, and of the class to which Shakspeare belonged. The espousals before witnesses, we have no doubt, were then considered as constituting a valid marriage, if followed up within a limited time by the marriage of the Church; and these espousals might have taken place in Shakspeare's case, as in very many of the marriages of the middle classes of his time. However the Reformed Church might have endeavoured to abrogate this practice, it was unquestionably the ancient habit of the people. It was derived from the Roman law, the foundation of many of our institutions. It prevailed for a long period without offence. It still prevails in the Lutheran Church. We are not to judge of the customs of those days by our own, especially if our inferences have the effect of imputing criminality where the most perfect innocence may have existed.

The course of Shakspeare's life for a year or so after his marriage cannot be followed with any accuracy.
Aubrey says, “ This William, being inclined naturally to poetry and acting, came to London, I guess about eighteen, and was an actor at one of the playhouses, and did act exceedingly well. Now Ben Jonson was never a good actor, but an excellent instructor. He began early to make Essays at Dramatic Poetry, which at that time was very low, and his plays took well.”
Thus writes honest Aubrey, in the year 1680, in his ‘ Minutes of Lives,’ addressed to his “ worthy friend, Mr. Anthony à Wood, Antiquary of Oxford.” Of the value of Aubrey's evidence we may form some opinion from his own statement to his friend:—"T is a task that I never thought to have undertaken till you imposed it upon me, saying that I was fit for it by reason of my general acquaintance, having now not only lived above half a century of years in the world, but have also been much tumbled up and down in it; which hath made me so well known. Besides the modern advantage of coffeehouses in this great city, before which men knew not how to be acquainted but with their own relations or societies, I might add that I come of a longævous race, by which means I have wiped some feathers off the wings of time for several generations, which does reach high." It must not be forgotten that Aubrey's account of Shakspeare, brief and imperfect as it is, is the earliest known to exist. His story of Shakspeare's coming to London is a simple and natural one, without a single marvellous circumstance about it:—"This William, being inclined naturally to poetry and acting, came to London." This, the elder story, appears to us to have much greater verisimilitude than Rowe's, the later:—"He was obliged to leave his business and family in Warwickshire for some time, and shelter himself in London." Aubrey, who has picked up all the gossip "of coffeehouses in this great city," hears no word of Rowe's story, which would certainly have been handed down amongst the traditions of the theatre to Davenant and Shadwell, from whom he does hear something:—"I have heard Sir William Davenant and Mr. Thomas Shadwell (who is counted the best comedian we have now) say, that he had a most prodigious wit." Neither does he say, nor indeed any one else till two centuries and a quarter after Shakspeare is dead, that, "after four years' conjugal discord, he would resolve upon that plan of solitary emigration to the metropolis, which, at the same time that it released him from the humiliation of domestic feuds, succeeded so splendidly for his worldly prosperity, and with a train of circumstances so vast for all future ages."* It is certainly a singular vocation for a writer of genius to bury the legendary scandals of the days of Rowe, for the sake of exhuming a new scandal, which cannot be received at all without the belief that the circumstance must have had a permanent and most evil influence upon the mind of the unhappy man who thus cowardly and ignominiously is held to have severed himself from his duty as a husband and a father. We cannot trace the evil influence, and therefore we reject the scandal. It has not even the slightest support from the weakest tradition. It is founded upon an imperfect comparison of two documents, judging of the habits of that period by those of our own day; supported by quotations from a dramatist of whom it would be difficult to affirm that he ever wrote a line which had strict reference to his own feelings and circumstances.

In the baptismal register of the parish of Stratford for 1583 is the entry of the baptism of Susanna on the 26th May. This record necessarily implies the residence of the wife of William Shakspeare in the parish of Stratford. Did he himself continue to reside in this parish? There is no evidence of his residence. His name appears in no suit in the Bailiff's Court at this period. He fills no municipal office, such as his father had filled before him. But his wife continues to reside in the native place of her husband, surrounded by his relations and her own. His father and his mother no doubt watch with anxious solicitude over the fortunes of their first son. He has a brother, Gilbert, seventeen years of age, and a sister of fourteen. His brother Richard is nine years of age; but Edmund is young enough to be the playmate of his little Susanna. On the 2nd February, 1585, there is another entry in the parochial register, of the baptism of Hamnet and Judith, son and daughter to William Shakspeare. While he is yet a minor he is the father of three children. The circumstance of his minority may perhaps account for the absence of his name from all records of court-leet, or bailiff's court, or common-hall. He was neither a constable, nor an ale-conner, nor an overseer, nor a jury-man, because he was a minor. We cannot affirm that he did not leave Stratford before his minority expired; but it is to be inferred that, if he had continued to reside at Stratford after he was legally of age, we should have found traces of his residence in the records of the town. If his residence was out of the borough, as we have supposed his father's to have been at this period, some trace would yet have been found of him, in all likelihood, within the parish. Just before the termination of his minority we have an undeniable record that he was a second time a father within the parish. It is at this period, then, that we would place his removal from Stratford; his flight, according to the old legend; his solitary emigration, according to the new discovery. That his emigration was even solitary we have not a tittle of evidence. Rowe says that, after having settled in the world in a family manner, and continued in this kind of settlement for some time, the extravagance of which he was guilty in robbing Sir Thomas Lucy's park obliged him to leave his business and family. He could not have so left, even according to the circumstances which were known to Rowe, till after the birth of his son and daughter in 1585. But the story goes on:—"It is at this time, and upon this accident, that he is said to have made his first acquaintance in the playhouse. He was received into the company then in being, at first in a very mean rank; but his admirable wit, and the natural turn of it to the stage, soon distinguished him, if not as an extraordinary actor, yet as an excellent writer." Sixty years after the time of Rowe the story assumed a more circumstantial shape, as far as regards the mean rank which Shakspeare filled in his early connexion with the theatre. Dr. Johnson adds one passage to the 'Life,' which he says "Mr. Pope related, as communicated to him by Mr. Rowe." It is so remarkable an anecdote that it is somewhat surprising that Rowe did not himself add it to his own meagre account:—

* 'Encyclopædia Britannica.'

"In the time of Elizabeth, coaches being yet uncommon, and hired coaches not at all in use, those who were too proud, too tender, or too idle to walk, went on horseback to any distant business or diversion. Many came on horseback to the play; and when Shakspeare fled to London from the terror of a criminal prosecution, his first expedient was to wait at the door of the playhouse, and hold the horses of those that had no servants, that they might be ready again after the performance. In this office he became so conspicuous for his care and readiness, that in a short time every man as he alighted called for Will Shakspeare, and scarcely any other waiter was trusted with a horse while Will Shakspeare could be had. This was the first dawn of better fortune. Shakspeare, finding more horses put into his hand than he could hold, hired boys to wait under his inspection, who, when Will Shakspeare was summoned, were immediately to present themselves—'I am Shakspeare's boy, Sir.' In time, Shakspeare found higher employment; but as long as the practice of riding to the playhouse continued, the waiters that held the horses retained the appellation of Shakspeare's boys."

Steevens has attempted to impugn the credibility of this anecdote by saying,—“That it was once the general custom to ride on horseback to the play I am yet to learn. The most popular of the theatres were on the Bankside; and we are told by the satirical pamphleteers of that time that the usual mode of conveyance to these places of amusement was by water, but not a single writer so much as hints at the custom of riding to them, or at the practice of having horses held during the hours of exhibition.” Steevens is here in error; he has a vague notion—which is still persevered in with singular obstinacy, even by those who have now the means of knowing that Shakspeare had acquired property in the chief theatre in 1589—that the great dramatic poet had felt no inspiration till he was about eight-and-twenty, and that, therefore, his connexion with the theatre began in the palmy days of the Globe on the Bankside—a theatre not built till 1593. To the earlier theatres, if they were frequented by the gallants of the Court, they would have gone on horses. They did so go, as we learn from Dekker, long after the Bankside theatres were established. The story first appeared in a book entitled ‘The Lives of the Poets,’ considered to be the work of Theophilus Cibber, but said to be written by a Scotchman of the name of Shiels, who was an amanuensis of Dr. Johnson. Shiels had certainly some hand in the book; and there we find that Davenant told the anecdote to Betterton, who communicated it to Rowe, who told it to Pope, who told it to Dr. Newton. Improbable as the story is as it now stands, there may be a scintillation of truth in it, as in most traditions. It is by no means impossible that the Blackfriars Theatre might have had Shakspeare's boys to hold horses, but not Shakspeare himself. As a proprietor of the theatre, Shakspeare might sagaciously perceive that its interest would be promoted by the readiest accommodation being offered to its visitors; and further, with that worldly adroitness which, in him, was not incompatible with the exercise of the highest genius, he might have derived an individual profit by employing servants to perform this office. In an age when horse-stealing was one of the commonest occurrences, it would be a guarantee for the safe charge of the horses that they were committed to the care of the agents of one then well known in the world,—an actor, a writer, a proprietor of the theatre. Such an association with the author of ‘Hamlet’ must sound most anti-poetical; but the fact is scarcely less prosaic than that the same wondrous man, about the period when he wrote ‘Macbeth,’ had an action for debt in the Bailiff's Court at Stratford, to recover thirty-five shillings and tence for corn by him sold and delivered.

Familiar, then, with theatrical exhibitions, such as they were, from his earliest youth, and with a genius so essentially dramatic that all other writers that the world has seen have never approached him in his power of going out of himself, it is inconsistent with probability that he should not have attempted some dramatic composition at an early age. The theory that he was first employed in repairing the plays of others we hold to be altogether untenable; supported only by a very narrow view of the great essentials to a dramatic work, and by verbal criticism, which, when carefully examined, utterly fails even in its own petty assumptions.* There can be no doubt that the three Parts of ‘Henry VI.’ belong to the early stage. We believe them to be wholly and absolutely the early work of Shakspeare. But we do not necessarily hold that they were his earliest work; for the proof is so clear of the continual improvements and elaborations which he made in his best productions, that it would be difficult to say that some of the plays which have the most finished air, but of which there were no early editions, may not be founded upon very youthful compositions. Others may have wholly perished; thrown aside after a season; never printed; and neglected by their author, to whom new inventions would be easier than remodellings of pieces probably composed upon a false theory of art. For it is too much to imagine that his first productions would be wholly untainted by the taste of the period. Some might have been weak delineations of life and character, overloaded with mythological conceits and pastoral affectations, like the plays of Lyly, which were the Court fashion before 1590. Others might have been prompted by the false ambition to produce effect, which is the characteristic of ‘Locrine,’ and partially so of ‘Titus Andronicus.’ But of one thing we may be sure—that there would be no want of power even in his first productions; that real poetry would have gushed out of the bombast, and true wit sparkled amidst the conceits. His first plays would, we think, fall in with the prevailing desire of the people to learn the history of their country through the stage. If so, they would certainly not exhibit the feebleness of some of those performances which were popular about the period of which we are now speaking, and which continued to be popular even after he had most successfully undertaken

“To raise our ancient sovereigns from their hearse.”

The door of the theatre was not a difficult one for him to enter. It is a singular fact, that several of the most eminent actors of this very period are held to have been his immediate neighbours. We see no difficulty in believing that the first step taken by him in a decision as interesting to ages unborn as important to himself, was the experimental one of rendering his personal aid towards the proper performance of his first acted play. We inverse the usual belief in this matter. We think that Shakspeare became an actor because he was a dramatic writer, and not a dramatic writer because he was an actor. He very quickly made his way to wealth and reputation, not so much by a handsome person and pleasing manners, as by that genius which left all other competitors far behind him in the race of dramatic composition; and by that prudence which taught him to combine the exercise of his extraordinary powers with a constant reference to the course of life he had chosen, not lowering his art for the advancement of his fortune, but achieving his fortune in showing what mighty things might be accomplished by his art.

* See our ‘Essay on the Three Parts of Henry VI., and Richard III.’ in the Pictorial and Library editions.

Amongst those innumerable by-ways in London which are familiar to the hurried pedestrian, there is a well-known line of streets, or rather lanes, leading from the hill on which St. Paul's stands to the great thoroughfare of Blackfriars Bridge. Between Apothecaries' Hall and Printing-house Square is a short lane, leading into an open space called Playhouse Yard. It is one of those shabby places of which so many in London lie close to the glittering thoroughfares; but which are known only to their own inhabitants, and have at all times an air of quiet which seems like desolation. The houses of this little square, or yard, are neither ancient nor modern. Some of them were probably built soon after the great fire of London; for a few present their gable fronts to the streets, and the wide casements of others have evidently been filled up and modern sashes inserted. But there is nothing here, nor indeed in the whole precinct, with the exception of the few yards of ancient wall, that has any pretension to belong to what may be called the antiquities of London. In the heart of this precinct, close by the church of a suppressed monastery, surrounded by the new houses of the nobility, in the very spot which is now known as Playhouse Yard, was built, in 1575, the Blackfriars Theatre.

The history of the early stage, as it is to be deduced from statutes, and proclamations, and orders of council, exhibits a constant succession of conflicts between the civic authorities and the performers of plays. The act of the 14th of Elizabeth, "for the punishment of vagabonds, and for relief of the poor and impotent," was essentially an act of protection for the established companies of players. We have here, for the first time, a definition of rogues and vagabonds; and it includes not only those who can "give no reckoning how he or she doth lawfully get his or her living," but "all fencers, bearwards, common players in interludes, and minstrels, not belonging to any baron of this realm, or towards any other honourable personage of greater degree; all jugglers, pedlers, tinkers, and petty chapmen; which said fencers, bearwards, common players in interludes, minstrels, jugglers, pedlers, tinkers, and petty chapmen, shall wander abroad, and have not licence of two justices of the peace at the least, whereof one to be of the quorum, where and in what shire they shall happen to wander." The circumstance of belonging to any baron, or person of greater degree, was in itself a pretty large exception; and if in those times of rising puritanism the licence of two justices of the peace was not always to be procured, the large number of companies enrolled as the servants of the nobility offers sufficient evidence that the profession of a player was not a persecuted one, but one expressly sanctioned by the ruling powers. There was one company of players, the Earl of Leicester's, which, within two years after the legislative protection of this act, received a more important privilege from the Queen herself. In 1574 a writ of privy seal was issued to the keeper of the great seal, commanding him to set forth letters patent addressed to all justices, &c., licensing and authorizing James Burbadge, and four other persons, servants to the Earl of Leicester, "to use, exercise, and occupy the art and faculty of playing comedies, tragedies, interludes, stage-plays, and such other like as they have already used and studied, or hereafter shall use and study, as well for the recreation of our loving subjects, as for our solace and pleasure, when we shall think good to see them." And they were to exhibit their performances "as well within our City of London and liberties of the same, as throughout our realm of England." Without knowing how far the servants of the Earl of Leicester might have been molested by the authorities of the City of London, in defiance of this patent, it is clear that the patent was of itself insufficient to insure their kind reception within the city; for it appears that, within three months after the date of the patent, a letter was written from the Privy Council to the Lord Mayor, directing him "to admit the comedy-players within the city of London, and to be otherwise favourably used." This mandate was probably obeyed; but in 1575 the Court of Common Council, without any exception for the objects of the patent of 1574, made certain orders, in the city language termed an act, which assumed that the whole authority for the regulation of plays was in the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen; that they only could license theatrical exhibitions within the city; and that the players whom they did license should contribute half their receipts to charitable purposes. The civic authorities appear to have stretched their power somewhat too far; for in that very year James Burbadge, and the other servants of the Earl of Leicester, erected their theatre amidst the houses of the great in the Blackfriars, within a stone's throw of the city walls, but absolutely out of the control of the city officers. The immediate neighbours of the players were the Lord Chamberlain and Lord Hunsdon, as we learn from a petition against the players from the inhabitants of the precinct. The petition was unavailing. The reason which it states "one Burbadge hath lately bought" were converted "into a common playhouse; and within fourteen years from the period of its erection William Shakspeare was one of its proprietors.

The royal patent of 1574 authorized in the exercise of their art and faculty "James Burbadge, John Petyt, John Lanham, William Johnson, and Robert Wilson, who are described as the servants of the Earl of Leicester. Although on the early stage the character was frequently doubled, we can scarcely imagine that these five persons were of themselves sufficient to form a company of comedians. They had, no doubt, subordinate actors in their pay; they being the proprietors or shareholders in the general adventure. Of these five original patentees four remained as the "sharers in the Blackfriars Playhouse" in 1589, the name only of John Perkin being absent from the subscribers to a certificate to the Privy Council that the company acting at the Blackfriars "have never given cause of displeasure in that they have brought into their plays matters of state and religion." This certificate—which bears the date of November, 1589—exhibits to us the list of the professional companions of Shakspeare in an early stage of his career, though certainly not in the very earliest. The certificate describes the persons subscribing it as "her Majesty's poor players," and sets forth that they are "all of them sharers in the Blackfriars Playhouse." Their names are presented in the following order:—1. James Burbadge. 2. Richard Burbadge. 3. John Laneham. 4. Thomas Greene. 5. Robert Wilson. 6. John Taylor. 7. Anth. Wadson. 8. Thomas Pope. 9. George Peele. 10. Augustine Phillipps. 11. Nicholas Fowley. 12. William Shakspeare. 13. William Kempe. 14. William Johnson. 15. Baptiste Goodale. 16. Robert Armin.

It would not be an easy matter, without some knowledge of minute facts and a considerable effort of imagination, to form an accurate notion of that building in the Blackfriars—rooms converted into a common playhouse—in which we may conclude that the first plays of Shakspeare were exhibited. The very expression used by the petitioners against Burbadge's project would imply that the building was not very nicely adapted to the purposes of dramatic representation. They say, "which rooms the said Burbadge is now altering, and meaneth very shortly to convert and turn the same into a common playhouse." And yet we are not to infer that the rooms were hastily adapted to their object by the aid of a few boards and drapery, like the barn of a strolling company. In 1596 the shareholders say, in a petition to the Privy Council, that the theatre, "by reason of its having been so long built, hath fallen into great decay, and that, besides the reparation thereof, it has been found necessary to make the same more convenient for the entertainment of auditories coming thereto." The structure, no doubt, was adapted to its object without any very great regard to durability; and the accommodations, both for actors and audience, were of a somewhat rude nature. The Blackfriars was a winter theatre; so that, differing from the Globe, which belonged to the same company, it was, there can be little doubt, roofed in. It appears surprising that, in a climate like that of England, even a summer theatre should be without a roof; but the surprise is lessened when we consider that, when the Globe was built, in 1594, not twenty years had elapsed since plays were commonly represented in the open yards of the inns of London. The Belle Savage was amongst the most famous of these inn-yard theatres; and even the present area of that inn will show how readily it might be adapted for such performances. The Blackfriars theatre was probably little more than a large space, arranged pretty much like the Belle Savage yard, but with a roof over it. Indeed, so completely were the public-theatres adapted after the model of the temporary ones, that the space for the "groundlings" long continued to be called the yard. One of the earliest theatres, built probably about the same time as the Blackfriars, was called the Curtain, from which we may infer that the refinement of separating the actors from the audience during the intervals of the representation was at first peculiar to that theatre.

In the continuation of Stow's 'Chronicle,' by Edmund Howes, there is a very curious passage, which carries us back to the period in which he was writing (1631) for sixty years. He describes the destruction of the Globe by fire in 1613, the burning of the Fortune Playhouse four years after, the rebuilding of both theatres, and the erection of "a new fair playhouse near the Whitefriars." He then adds,—“And this is the seventeenth stage, or common playhouse, which hath been new made within the space of threescore years within London and the suburbs, viz.: five inns, or common hostleries, turned to playhouses, one Cockpit, St. Paul's singing-school, one in the Blackfriars, and one in the Whitefriars, which was built last of all, in the year one thousand six hundred twenty-nine. All the rest not named were erected only for common playhouses, besides the new-built Bear-garden, which was built as well for plays, and fencers' prizes, as bull-baiting; besides one in former time at Newington Butts. Before the space of threescore years abovesaid I neither knew, heard, nor read of any such theatres, set stages, or playhouses, as have been purposely built within man's memory." It would appear, as far as we can judge from the very imperfect materials which exist, that in the early period of Shakspeare's connexion with the Blackfriars it was the only private theatre. It is natural to conclude that the proprietors of this theatre, being the Queen's servants, were the most respectable of their vocation; conformed to the ordinances of the state with the utmost scrupulousness; endeavoured to attract a select audience rather than an uncritical multitude; and received higher prices for admission than were paid at the public theatres. The performances at the Blackfriars were for the most part in the winter. Whether the performances were in the day or evening, artificial lights were used. The audience in what we now call the pit (then also so called) sat upon benches, and did not stand, as in the yard open to the sky of the public playhouses. There were small rooms corresponding with the private boxes of existing theatres. A portion of the audience, including those who aspired to the distinction of critics, sat upon the stage. It is possible, and indeed there is some evidence, that the rate of admission varied according to the attraction of the performance; and we may be pretty sure that a company like that of Shakspeare's generally charged at a higher rate than the larger theatres, which depended more upon the multitude.

At an early period, but not so early as the date of the certificate of 1589, which shows that Shakspeare was a sharer in the company acting at the Blackfriars, he is mentioned by contemporaries. Henry Cressel one of the very few persons who have left us any distinct memorial of Shakspeare. He appears to have had some connexion with the writers of his time, in preparing their manuscripts for the press. He so prepared Greene's posthumous tract, 'The Groat's-worth of Wit,' copying out the author's faint and blotted sheets, written on his sick-bed. In this pamphlet of Greene's an insult was offered to Shakspeare; and it would appear from the allusions of Chettle that he was justly offended. Marlowe, also, resented, as well he might, a charge of impiety which was levelled against him. Chettle says, "With neither of them that take offence was I acquainted." By acquaintance he means companionship, if not friendship. He goes on, "And with one of them I care not if I never be." He is supposed here to point at Marlowe. But to the other he tenders an apology, in all sincerity: "The other, whom at that time I did not so much spare as since I wish I had, for that as I have moderated the heat of living writers, and might have used my own discretion (especially in such a case), the author being dead, that I did not I am as sorry as if the original fault had been my fault; because myself have seen his demeanour no less civil than he excellent in the quality he professes: besides, divers of worship have reported his uprightness of dealing, which argues his honesty, and his facetious grace in writing, that approves his art." In the Induction to 'Cynthia's Revels' Ben Jonson makes one of the personified spectators on the stage say, "I would speak with your author; where is he?" It may be presumed, therefore, that it was not uncommon for the author to mix with that part of the audience; and thus Henry Chettle may be good evidence of the civil demeanour of William Shakspeare. We may thus imagine the young author composedly moving amidst the throng of wits and critics that fill the stage. He moves amongst them modestly, but without any false humility. In worldly station, if such a consideration could influence his demeanour, he is fully their equal. They are for the most part, as he himself is, actors, as well as makers of plays. Phillips says Marlowe was an actor. Greene is reasonably conjectured to have been an actor. Peele and Wilson were actors of Shakspeare's own company; and so was Anthony Wadeson. There can be little doubt that upon the early stage the occupations for the most part went together. The dialogue was less regarded than the action. A plot was hastily got up, with rude shows and startling incidents. The characters were little discriminated; one actor took the tyrant line, and another the lover; and ready words were at hand for the one to rant with and the other to whine. The actors were not very solicitous about the words, and often discharged their mimic passions in extemporaneous eloquence. In a few years the necessity of pleasing more refined audiences changed the economy of the stage. Men of high talent sought the theatre as a ready mode of maintenance by their writings; but their connexion with the stage would naturally begin in acting rather than in authorship. The managers, themselves actors, would think, and perhaps rightly, that an actor would be the best judge of dramatic effect. The rewards of authorship through the medium of the press were in those days small indeed; and paltry as was the dramatist's fee, the players were far better paymasters than the stationers. To become a sharer in a theatrical speculation offered a reasonable chance of competence, if not of wealth. If a sharer existed who was "excellent" enough in "his quality" he professed to fill the stage creditably, and added to that quality "a facetious grace in writing," there is no doubt that with "uprightness of dealing" he would, in such a company as that of the Blackfriars, advance rapidly to distinction, and have the countenance and friendship of "divers of worship." Those of Shakspeare's early competitors who approached the nearest to him in genius possessed not that practical wisdom which carried him safely and honourably through a life beset with some temptations. They knew not the value of "government and modesty." He lived amongst them, but we may readily conclude that he was not of them.

In the spring of 1588, and through the summer also, we may well believe that Shakspeare abided in London, whether or not he had his wife and children about him. The course of public events was such that he would scarcely have left the capital, even for a few weeks. For the hearts of all men in the vast city were mightily stirred; and whilst in that "shop of war" might be heard on every side the din of "anvils and hammers waking to fashion out the plates and instruments of armed justice,"* the poet had his own work to do, in urging forward the noble impulse through which the people, of whatever sect or whatever party, willed that they would be free. It was the year of the Armada.

But, glorious as was the contemplation of the attitude of England during this year, the very energy that had called forth this noble display of patriotic spirit exhibited itself in domestic controversy when the peace from without was removed. The same season that witnessed the utter destruction of the armament of Spain saw London excited to the pitch of fury by polemical disputes. It was not now the quarrel between Protestant and Romanist, but between the National Church and Puritanism. The theatres, those new and powerful teachers, lent themselves to the controversy. In some of these their licence to entertain the people was abused by the introduction of matters connected with religion and politics; so that in 1589 Lord Burghley not only directed the Lord Mayor to inquire what companies of players had offended, but a commission was appointed for the same purpose. How Shakspeare's company proceeded during this inquiry has been made out most clearly by the valuable document discovered at Bridgewater House by Mr. Collier, wherein they disclaim to have conducted themselves amiss. "There are to certify your Right Honourable Lordships that her Majesty's poor players, James Burbage, Richard Burbage, John Laneham, Thomas Greene, Robert Wilson, John Taylor, Anth. Wadeson, Thomas Pope, George Peele, Augustine Phillipps, Nicholas Towley, William Shakespeare, William Kempe, William Johnson, Baptiste Goodale, and Robert Armin, being all of them sharers in the Blackfriars playhouse, have never given displeasure, in that they have brought into their letters of state and religion, unfit to be handled or to be presented before lewd spectators: neither any complaint in that kind ever been preferred to any of them. Wherefore they trust most to your Lordships' consideration of their former favour, being at all times ready and willing to oblige to any command whatsoever your Lordships' wisdom may think in such case meet," &c. 1589."

* Milton: 'Speech for the Liberty of Unlicensed Printing.'

petition, Shakspeare, a sharer in the theatre, but below him in the list, says, and they all say, they have never brought into their plays matters of religion." The public mind in 1589-90 was agitated by "matters of state and religious controversy was going on which is now known as Martin Marprelate, in which the constitution of the church were most furiously attacked in a succession of pamphlets; and they were written with equal violence and scurrility. The chief part in the controversy, as we learn from Gabriel Harvey.

Shakspeare's great contemporary, Edmund Spenser, in his entitled 'The Tears of the Muses,' originally written in 1591, describes, in the 'Complaint' of the Muse of Comedy, the state of the drama at that time which he is writing:—

Be the sweet delights of learning's treasure,
Went with comic sock to beautify
The staid theatres, and fill with pleasure
The listeners' eyes, and ears with melody;
Which I late was wont to reign as queen,
And ask in mirth with graces well beseen?
Is gone; and all that goodly glee,
Which went to be the glory of gay wits,
Is fled, and nowhere now to see;
In her room unseemly Sorrow sits,
With hollow brows and griesly countenance,
To grieve my joyous gentle dalliance.

And beside sits ugly Barbarism,
With brutish Ignorance, ycrept of late
From dread darkness of the deep abyss,
Where being bred, he light and heaven does hate;
Which the minds of men now tyrannize,
And make a fair scene with rudeness foul disguise.

And they with folly have possess'd,
With vain toys the vulgar entertain;
Which have banished, with all the rest
Whom wont to wait upon my train,
The counterfeits, and unhurtful Sport,
And Laughter, deck'd in seemly sort."

as in England in 1590-91, and it is probable

'Tears of the Muses' was written in 1590. The stanzas which we have quoted are descriptive, not only of a period of the drama when it had fallen from the semi-barbarism by which it was characterized, but from the commencement of Shakspeare's career till about the earliest date at which his name in London can be possibly fixed.* This stanza has nothing in common with those accounts of the drama which have reference to this "semi-barbarism." Nor does the writer of it belong to the school which considered a violation of the unities of time and place as the great defect of the English theatre. Nor does he assert his preference of the classic school over the romantic, by objecting, as Sir Philip Sidney objects, that "plays be neither right tragedies nor right comedies, mingling kings and clowns." There had been, according to Spenser, a state of the drama that would

"Fill with pleasure
The listeners' eyes, and ears with melody."

Can any comedy be named, if we assume that Shakspeare had, in 1590, not written any, which could be celebrated—and by the exquisite versifier of 'The Fairy Queen'—for its "melody"? Could any also be praised for

"That goodly glee
Which went to be the glory of gay wits"?

Could the plays before Shakspeare be described by the most competent of judges—the most poetical mind of that age next to Shakspeare—as abounding in

"Fine Counterfeits, and unurtful Sport, Delight, and Laughter, deck'd in seemly sort"?

We have not seen such a comedy, except some three or four of Shakspeare's, which could have existed before 1590. We do not believe there is such a comedy from any other pen. What, according to the 'Complaint' of Thalia, has banished such comedy? "Unseemly Sorrow," it appears, has been fashionable;—not the proprieties of tragedy, but a Sorrow

"With hollow brows and griesly countenance;"—

the violent scenes of blood which were offered for the excitement of the multitude, before the tragedy of real art was devised. But this state of the drama is shortly passed over. There is something more defined. By the side of this false tragic sits "ugly Barbarism and brutish Ignorance." These are not the barbarism and ignorance of the old stage;—they are

"Ycrept of late
Out of dread darkness of the deep abyss."

They "now tyrannize;" they now "disguise" the fair scene "with rudeness." The Muse of Tragedy, Melpomene, had previously described the "rueful spectacles" of "the stage." It was a stage which had no "true tragedy." But it had possessed

"Delight, and Laughter, deck'd in seemly sort."

The four stanzas which we have quoted are immediately followed by these four others:—

"All these, and all that else the comic stage
With season'd wit and goodly pleasure graced,
By which man's life in his likeliest image
Was limed forth, are wholly now defaced;
And those sweet wits, which wont the like to frame,
Are now despis'd, and made a laughing game.
And he, the man whom Nature self had made
To mock herself, and Truth to imitate
With kindly counter, under mimic shade
Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late
With whom all joy and jolly merriment
Is also dead, and in dolour drest.

Instead thereof scoffing Scurrility,
And scornful Folly, with Contempt, is crept,
Rolling in rhymes of shameless ribaldry,
Without regard or due decorum kept;
Each idle wit at will presumes to make,
And doth the Learner's task upon him take.

* Edinburgh Review, vol. lxxi., p. 469.

But that was not a word from whose pen Large volumes of poetry had ever been Scouring the world of their unnumbered
 Which gave the world a new and better
 Both in the way of the world and Thus as aimed to mockery to show

The love of personal abuse had driven out real comedy, and there was one who for a brief season had left the madness to take its course. We cannot doubt that "He, the man whom Nature self had made To most benefit and Truth to imitate, was William Shakespeare.

England was sorely visited by the plague in 1592 and 1593. The theatres were shut; there were no performances at Court. Shakespeare, we may believe, during the long period of the continuance of the plague in London, had no occupation at the Blackfriars Theatre;
 and the pastimes of the Lord Chamberlain's servants were discontinued at the palace. It is probable that he was residing at his own Stratford. The leisure, we think, afforded him opportunity of preparing the most important of that wonderful series of historical dramas which unquestionably appeared within a few years of this period; and of producing some other dramatic compositions of the highest order of poetical excellence.
 It appears to us, looking at the printed labours of Shakespeare at this exact period, that there was some pause in his professional occupation; and that many months' residence in Stratford, from the autumn of 1592 to the summer of 1593, enabled him more systematically to cultivate those higher faculties which placed him, even in the opinion of his contemporaries, at the head of the living poets of England.

It is easy to believe that if any external impulse were wanting to stimulate the poetical ambition of Shaks-pere—to make him aspire to some higher character than that of the most popular of dramatists—such might be found in 1593 in the clear field which was left for the exercise of his peculiar powers. Robert Greene had died on the 3rd of September, 1592, leaving behind him a sneer at the actor who aspired "to bombast out a blank verse." Had his genius not been destroyed by the wear and tear, and the corrupting influences, of a profligate life, he never could have competed with the mature Shakespeare. But as we know that "the only Shake-scene in a country," at whom the unhappy man presumed to scoff, felt the insult somewhat deeply, so we may presume he took the most effectual means to prove to the world that he was not, according to the malignant insinuation of his envious compeer, "an upstart crow beautified with our feathers." We believe that in the gentleness of his nature, when he introduced into 'A Midsummer Night's Dream'

"The thrice three Muses mourning for the death Of learning late deceas'd in beggary,"

he dropped a tear upon the grave of Greene, whose demerits were to be forgiven in his misery. On the 1st of June, 1593, Christopher Marlowe perished in a wretched brawl, "slain by Francis Archer," as the Register of Burials of the parish of St. Nicholas, Deptford, informs us. Who was left of the dramatists that could enter into competition with William Shakespeare, such as he was almost alone. The great disciples of his age to be found and the own time poetry of

 of the in-fully an rather in parts an the of a
 was scar-
 in itself
 tation of
 It was
 There in literally produce critical not be di-think th
 that he u
 with out poets of ampton
 the work
 he vows
 honours graver l it was a Dryden
 dies: an name for inventor
 He was a differ accustom isted. V ference t
 the word
 by Shaks tution m not have first time argued fi
 duced no
 —that u was only hold that We ha re-opened Henslowe acted 'H 1593. E this comp
 of the Bl
 We have
 of the wit shows th theatre at the Lord
 men. H lasted in

tries of the exhibition of 'Andro-' and of 'The Taming of a Shrew.' es exhibit the names of plays which pparent connexion with Shakspeare. December, 1593, Richard Burbage with Peter Streete, a carpenter, for the part of Burbage of the cove- an indenture of agreement by ertook to erect a new theatre for . This was the famous Globe on hich Shakspeare was unquestionably us see that in 1594 there were new e upon his invention; and we may e that the reliance of Burbage and on their poet's unequalled powers eipal inducements to engage in this is professional engagements, which ewed with increased activity after a, Shakspeare published his 'Rape of vowed to take advantage of all had honoured Lord Southampton our than the first heir of his inven- and Adonis' was entered in the ationers' Company on the 18th of 'Lucrece' appears in the same Re- f May, 1594. That this elaborate in part composed in that interval esulted from the shutting of the ay be reasonably conjectured; but uring the year which had elapsed ation of the first and the second ul been brought into more intimate his noble patron. The language ion is that of distant respect, the grateful friendship. At the period edicated to him his 'Venus and hampton was scarcely twenty years sed to have become intimate with circumstance that his mother had s Heneage, who filled the office of umber, and in the discharge of his ld be brought into frequent inter- ed Chamberlain's players. This is e more natural belief appears to be ; attachment to literature, and, with osity of his character, did not res- of rank to the extent with which y men of colder temperaments inds. Shakspeare appears to have t the writers of his day that offered e merits of the young nobleman, is, and especially that of 'Lucrece,' modest and a manly spirit, entirely rdinary language of literary adula- dence in the second dedication of a ecourse between the two minds than forced adulation of any kind, and y extravagant compliments to the e abilities of a superior in rank. e always suspicious; and probably e always suspicious; and probably when he dedicated his 'World of

Words' to the Earl in 1598, shows pretty correctly what the race of panegyrists expected in return for their compliments: "In truth, I acknowledge an entire debt, not only of my best knowledge, but of all; yea of more than I know, or can, to your bounteous lordship, in whose pay and patronage I have lived some years; to whom I owe and vow the years I have to live. But, as to me, and many more, the glorious and gracious sunshine of your honour hath infused light and life." There is an extraordinary anecdote told by Rowe of Lord Southampton's munificence to Shakspeare, which seems to bring the poet somewhat near to Florio's plain-speaking association of pay and patronage:—"What grace soever the Queen conferred upon him, it was not to her only he owed the fortune which the reputation of his wit made. He had the honour to meet with many great and uncommon marks of favour and friendship from the Earl of Southampton, famous in the histories of that time for his friendship to the unfortunate Earl of Essex. It was to that noble lord that he dedicated his poem of 'Venus and Adonis.' There is one instance so singular in the magnificence of this patron of Shakspeare's, that if I had not been assured that the story was handed down by Sir William D'Avenant, who was probably very well acquainted with his affairs, I should not have ventured to have inserted; that my Lord Southampton at one time gave him a thousand pounds, to enable him to go through with a purchase which he heard he had a mind to. A bounty very great, and very rare at any time, and almost equal to that profuse generosity the present age has shown to French dancers and Italian singers." This is one of the many instances in which we are not warranted in rejecting a tradition, however we may look suspiciously upon the accuracy of its details. D'Avenant could scarcely be very well acquainted with Shakspeare's affairs, for he was only ten years old when Shakspeare died. The sum mentioned as the gift of the young nobleman to the poet is so large, looking at the value of money in those days, that it could scarcely consist with the independence of a generous spirit to bear the load of such a prodigality of bounty. The notions of those days were, however, different from ours. Examples will readily suggest themselves of the most lavish rewards bestowed by princes and nobles upon great painters. They received such gifts without any compromise of their intellectual dignity. It was the same then with poets. According to the habits of the time Shakspeare might have received a large gift from Lord Southampton, without any forfeiture of his self-respect. Nevertheless, Rowe's story must still appear sufficiently apocryphal: "My Lord Southampton at one time gave him a thousand pounds, to enable him to go through with a purchase which he heard he had a mind to." It is not necessary to account for the gradual acquisition of property by Shakspeare that we should yield our assent to this tradition, without some qualification. In 1589, when Lord Southampton was a lad at College, Shakspeare had already acquired that property which was to be the foundation of his future fortune. He was then a shareholder in the Blackfriars Theatre. That the adventure was a prosperous one, not only to himself but to his brother shareholders, may be inferred from the fact that four years afterwards they began the building of another theatre. The Globe was commenced in December, 1593; and being constructed for the most part of wood, was ready to be opened, we should imagine, in the summer of 1594. In 1596 the same prosperous company were prepared to expend considerable sums upon the repair and extension of their original theatre, the Blackfriars. The name of Shakspeare occupies a prominent position in the document from which we collect this fact: it is a petition to the Lords of the Privy Council from "Thomas Pope, Richard Burbadge, John Hemings, Augustine Philips, William Shakspeare, William Kempe, William Slye, Nicholas Tooley, and others, servants to the Right Honorable the Lord Chamberlain to her Majesty;" and it sets forth that they are "the owners and players of the private theatre in the Blackfriars; that it hath fallen into decay; and that it has been found necessary to make the same more convenient for the entertainment of auditories coming thereto." It then states what is important to the present question:—"To this end your petitioners have all and each of them put down sums of money according to their shares in the said theatre, and which they have justly and honestly gained by the exercise of their quality of stage-players." It then alleges that certain inhabitants of the precinct had besought the Council not to allow the said private house to remain open, "but hereafter to be shut up and closed, to the manifest and great injury of your petitioners, who have no other means whereby to maintain their wives and families, but by the exercise of their quality as they have heretofore done." The common proprietorship of the company in the Globe and Blackfriars is also noticed:—"In the summer season your petitioners are able to play at their new-built house on the Bankside, called the Globe, but in the winter they are compelled to come to the Blackfriars." If the winter theatre be shut up, they say they will be "unable to practise themselves in any plays or interludes when called upon to perform for the recreation and solace of her Majesty and her honourable Court, as they have been heretofore accustomed." Though the Registers of the Council and the Office-books of the Treasurer of the Chamber are wanting for this exact period, we have here the distinct evidence of the intimate relation between Shakspeare's company and the Court. The petitioners, in concluding by the prayer that their "honourable Lordships will grant permission to finish the reparations and alterations they have begun," add as a reason for this favour that they "have hitherto been well ordered in their behaviour and just in their dealings." The performances at the Blackfriars went on without interruption. Shakspeare, in 1597, bought "all that capital messuage or tenement in Stratford called the New Place." This appears to have been his first investment in property distinct from his theatrical speculations. The purchase of the best house in his native town, at a period of his life when his professional occupations could have allowed him little leisure to reside in it, would appear to have had in view an early retirement from a pursuit which probably was little agreeable to him. His powers as a dramatic writer might be profitably exercised without being associated with the actor's vocation. We know from other circumstances that at this period Stratford was nearest to his heart. On the 24th of January, 1598, Mr. Abraham Sturley, an alderman of Stratford, writes to his brother-in-law, Richard Quiney, then in London:—"I would write nothing unto you now—but come home. I pray God send you comfortably home. This is one special remembrance, from your father's motion. It seemeth by him that our countryman Mr. Shakspeare is willing to disburse some money upon some odd yard land or other at Shottery, or near about us. He thinketh it a very fit pattern to move him to deal in the matter of our tithes. By the instructions you can give him thereof, and by the friends he can make therefore, we think it a fair mark for him to shoot at, and not impossible to hit. It obtained, would advance him indeed, and would do us much good." We thus see that in a year after the purchase of New Place, Shakspeare's accumulation of money was going on. The worthy alderman and his connexions appear to look confidently to their countryman, Mr. Shakspeare, to assist them in their needs. On the 4th of November, in the same year, Sturley again writes a very long letter "to his most loving brother Mr. Richard Quiney, at the Bell, in Cane Lane, in London," in which he says of a letter written by Quiney to him on the 21st of October, that it imported, amongst other matters, "that our countryman Mr. W. Shakspeare would procure us money, which I well like of, as I shall hear when, and where, and how; and I pray let not go that occasion, if it may sort to any indifferent conditions." Quiney himself at this very time writes the following characteristic letter to his "loving good friend and countryman, Mr. William Shakspeare:"—"Loving countryman, I am bold of you as of a friend, craving your help with thirty pounds upon Mr. Bushell and my security, or Mr. Mythen with me. Mr. Rosswell is not come to London as yet, and I have especial cause. You shall friend me much in helping me out of all the debts I owe in London, I thank God, and much quiet to my mind which would not be indebted. I am now towards the Court in hope your answer for the dispatch of my business. You shall neither lose credit nor money by me, the Lord willing; and now but persuade yourself so as I hope, and you shall not need to fear but with all hearty thankfulness I will hold my time, and content your friend, and if we bargain farther, you shall be the paymaster yourself. My time bids me to hasten to an end, and so I commit this to your care and hope of your help. I fear I shall not be back this night from the Court. Haste. The Lord be with you and with us all. Amen. From the Bell in Cane Lane, the 25th October, 1598. Yours in all kindness, Ryc. Quiney." The anxious dependence which these honest men appear to have upon the good offices of their townsman is more satisfactory even than the evidence which their letters afford of his worldly condition.

In the midst of this prosperity the registers of the upon-Avon present to us an event thrown a shade over the brightest trial of the only son of the poet is

Hamnet was born on the 2nd of that at his death he was eleven years old. He was a twin child; and that he was constitutionally weak, interfered probably with the education which he received; for whilst Susanna, the elder, had been "witty above her sex," and of a vigorous hand, as we may judge from the deed in 1639, the mark of Judith being a witness to a conveyance in the case of this inevitable calamity, the poet probably be regarded as a happy man for the rest of his life. He had conquered any adversity by which his earlier career might have been hindered.

He had taken his rank among the great poets; and, above all, his pursuits were not without demand a constant exercise of his mind, and that exercise in the cultivation of the most pleasurable thoughts. To these belong the great histories of 'Richard III.,' and 'Henry IV.,' and the comedies of the 'Merchant of Venice,' 'Twelfth Night,' and 'As You Like It.'

Nothing, and 'Twelfth Night.' afford the most abundant evidence of his intellects was in the most healthful and vigorous. These were not hasty adaptations, as we may well believe, but the result of a long and steady application. It is not surprising that the dramatic poet appears not to have been with the applause of the Globe or even with the gracious encouragement of the Court. During three years he gave to the world editions of some of these plays, as if to remove from the pedantic notion that they and comedy did not meet their end.

'Richard II.' and 'Richard III.' in 1597; 'Love's Labour's Lost,' in 1598; 'Romeo and Juliet,' in 1599; 'Henry IV., Part I.' in 1599; 'A Midsummer Night's Dream,' in 1600. The publication then ceased. It is no doubt the interests of his fellows; and Shakspeare to assert an exclusive interest, or to pride, at the expense of his association was higher than that of any other of his plays were accessible to the public. In 1598 it was proclaimed, and it is not surprising, that "as Plautus and Terence were the best for tragedy and comedy of Shakespeare, among the English, there is not a man in both kinds for the stage;" and it is not surprising that the sweet witty soul of Ovid lives in the tongue of Shakspeare. It was a period of Shakspeare's life that he wrote, with reference to himself, unlocking his heart to some nameless friend:—

"When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes,
I all alone beweep my outcast state."

Sonnets of Shakspeare were in existence in 1598, when Meres tells us of "his sugared sonnets among his private friends." We do not receive these Sonnets altogether as evidences of Shakspeare's personal history or feelings. We believe that the order in which they were printed is an arbitrary one; that some form a continuous poem or poems, that others are isolated in their subjects and the persons to whom they are addressed; that some may express the poet's personal feelings, that others are wholly fictitious, dealing with imaginary loves and jealousies, and not attempting to separate the personal identity of the artist from the sentiments which he expressed, and the situations which he delineated. We believe that, taken as works of art, having a certain degree of continuity, the Sonnets of Spenser, of Daniel, of Drayton, of Shakspeare, although in many instances they might shadow forth real feelings and be outpourings of the inmost heart, were presented to the world as exercises of fancy, and were received by the world as such. Even of those portions of these remarkable lyrics which appear to have an obvious reference to the poet's feelings and circumstances, we cannot avoid rejecting the principle of continuity; for they clearly belong to different periods of his life, if they are the reflection of his real sentiments. We have the playfulness of an early love, and the agonizing throes of an unlawful passion. They speak of a period when the writer had won no honour or substantial rewards—"in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes," the period of his youth, if the allusion was at all real; and yet the writer is

"With time's injurious hand crush'd and o'erworn."

One little dedicatory poem says,

"Lord of my love, to whom in vassalage
Thy merit hath my duty strongly knit,
To thee I send this written embassy,
To witness duty, not to show my wit."

Another (and it is distinctly associated with what we hold to be a continued little poem, wholly fictitious, in which the poet dramatizes as it were the poetical character) boasts that

"Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes shall outlive this powerful rhyme."

Without attempting therefore to disprove that these Sonnets were addressed to the Earl of Southampton, or to the Earl of Pembroke, we must leave the reader who fancies he can find in them a shadowy outline of Shakspeare's life to form his own conclusion from their careful perusal. They want unity and consistency too much to be received as credible illustrations of this life. The 71st to the 74th Sonnets seem bursting from a heart oppressed with a sense of its own unworthiness, and surrendered to some overwhelming misery. There is a line in the 74th which points at suicide. We cling to the belief that the sentiments here expressed are essentially dramatic. In the 32nd Sonnet, where we recognise the man Shakspeare speaking in his own modest and cheerful spirit, death is to come across his "well-contented day." We must place one sentiment in opposition to the other, and then the effect is neutralized. The opinion which we have formed of the probable admixture of the artificial and the real in the Sonnets, arising from their supposed original fragmentary state, necessarily leads to the belief that some are accurate illustrations of the poet's situation and feelings. It is collected from these Sonnets, for example, that his profession as a player was disagreeable to him; and this complaint is found amongst those portions which may be separated from the series of verses which appear to us to be written in an artificial character. It might be addressed to any one of his family, or some honoured friend, such as Lord Southampton:—

“O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
The guilty goddess of my harmful deeds,
That did not better for my life provide
Than public means, which public manners breeds.
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost thence my nature is subdued
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand.”

But if from his professional occupation his nature was felt by him to be subdued to what it worked in,—if thence his name received a brand,—if vulgar scandal sometimes assailed him,—he had high thoughts to console him, such as were never before imparted to mortal. This was probably written in some period of dejection, when his heart was ill at ease, and he looked upon the world with a slight tinge of indifference, if not of dislike. Every man of high genius has felt something of this. It was reserved for the highest to throw it off, “like dew-drops from the lion's mane.” But the profound self-abasement and despondency of the 74th Sonnet, exquisite as the diction is, appear to us unreal, as a representation of the mental state of William Shakspeare; written, as it most probably was, at a period of his life when he revels and luxuriates (in the comedies which belong to the close of the sixteenth century) in the spirit of enjoyment, gushing from a heart full of love for his species, at peace with itself and with all the world.

About the close of the year 1599, the Blackfriars Theatre was remarkable for the constant presence of two men of high rank, who were there seeking amusement and instruction as some solace for the bitter mortifications of disappointed ambition. “My Lord Southampton and Lord Rutland came not to the Court; the one doth but very seldom; they pass away the time in London merely in going to plays every day.”* Essex had arrived from Ireland on the 28th of September, 1599—not

“Bringing rebellion broached on his sword.”— not surrounded with swarms of citizens who “Go forth, and fetch their conquering Cæsar in.”

but a fugitive from his army; one who in his desire for peace had treated with rebels, and had brought down upon him the censures of the Court; one who knew that his sovereign was surrounded with his personal enemies, and who in his reckless anger once thought to turn his army homeward to compel justice at their hands; one who at last rushed alone into the Queen's * Letter of Rowland Whyte to Sir Robert Sydney, in the Sydney Papers.

presence, was in the till the 26 of the Lo but to all Southamp London m ampton, i cousin of consent of under the dismissed had appoi land was having m first husb The seas the Theat and to the the state. period ab gratificati at the op twenty p ‘Henry I 1598; ‘M (not in I have to s ‘Taming which are were unq cannot wi velly fro and Rutl there is e belongs a is pleasur that migh banished most deli ampton v Lord Ke time to t found in into the b reference Southamp There is tially mis alone in influences the exiled the ingra upon, eve and simpl The pe Southamp a gloomy ship of Sc actor to t alone pre worked inequality of rank and the inequality of intellect, and the fruit had been a continuance and a strengthening of that "love" which seven years earlier had been described as "without end." Those ties were now broken by calamity. The accomplished noble, a prisoner looking daily for death, could not know the depth of the love of his "especial friend." * He was beyond the reach of any service that this friend could render him. All was gloom and uncertainty. It has been said, and we believe without any intention to depreciate the character of the great poet, that "There seems to have been a period of Shakspeare's life when his heart was ill at ease, and ill content with the world or his own conscience; the memory of hours mis-spent, the pang of affection misplaced or unrequited, the experience of man's worse nature, which intercourse with ill-chosen associates, by choice or circumstance, peculiarly teaches;—these, as they sank down into the depths of his great mind, seem not only to have inspired into it the conception of Lear and Timon, but that of one primary character, the censurer of mankind." † The genius of Shakspeare was so essentially dramatic, that neither Lear, nor Timon, nor Jaques, nor the Duke in 'Measure for Measure,' nor Hamlet, whatever censure of mankind they may express, can altogether be held to reflect "a period of Shakspeare's life when his heart was ill at ease, and ill content with the world." ‡ That period is referred to the beginning of the seventeenth century, to which the plays belong that are said to exhibit these attributes. § But from this period there is certainly a more solemn cast of thought in all the works of the great poet. The influence of time in the formation and direction of the poetical power must yet be taken into account, as well as any temper arising out of passing events. Shakspeare was now thirty-seven years of age. He had attained to the consciousness of his own intellectual strength, and he had acquired by long practice the mastery of his own genius. He had already learnt to direct the stage to higher and nobler purposes than those of mere amusement. It might be carried farther into the teaching of the highest philosophy through the medium of the grandest poetry. The epoch which produced 'Othello,' 'Lear,' and 'Macbeth' has been described as exhibiting the genius of Shakspeare in full possession and habitual exercise of power, "at its very point of culmination."

The year 1601 was also a year which brought to Shakspeare a great domestic affliction. His father died on the 8th of September of that year. It is impossible not to feel that Shakspeare's family arrangements, imperfectly as we know them, had especial reference to the comfort and honour of his parents. When he bought New Place in 1597, his occupations then demanding his presence in London through great part of the year, his wife and children, we may readily imagine, were under the same roof with his father and mother. They had sighed over the declining health of his little Hamnet,—they had watched over the growth of his Susanna and Judith. If restricted means had at any previous period assailed them, he had provided for the comforts of their advanced age. And now that father, the companion of his boyhood—he who had led him forth into the fields and had taught him to look at nature with a practical eye—was gone. More materials for deep thought in the year 1601. The Register of Stratford attests the death of this earliest friend.

The fortieth volume of the registers of the Town Council of Aberdeen contains some entries, which are not without their reference to the life of Shakspeare:—

"Nouo Octobris 1601.

"Ordinance to the dean of gild.

"The samen day The prouest Baillies and counsall ordanis the sume of threttie tua merkis to be gevin to the Kingis seruantes presently in this burcht. . . quha playes comedie and stage playes. Be reason they ar recommendit be his majesties special letter and hes played sum of their comedies in this burcht and ordanis the said sume to be payit to thame be the dean of gild quhilk salbe allowit in his comptis."

"22 Octr 1601.

"The Quhilk day Sir Francis Hospitall of Hanlsie knycht Frenschman being recommendit be his majestie to the Prouest Baillies and Counsall of this burcht to be favorable Intertenent with the gentillmen his majesties seruants efter specifett quha war direct to this burcht be his majestie to accompanie the said Frenschman being ane nobillman of France cumming only to this burcht to sic the towne and countrie the said Frenschman with the knightis and gentillmen folowing wer all reassuit and admittit Burgesses of Gild of this burcht quha gave their althia in common form folowis the names of thame that war admittit burgesses

Sir Francis Hospitall of halke knycht
Sir Claud Hamilton of Schawfeld knycht
Sir John Grahame of orkhill knycht
Sir John Ramsay of Ester Baronie knycht
James Hay James Auchterlony Robert Ker James Schaw
Thomas foster James Gleghorne David Drummond
Scrutours to his Majestie
Monsieur de Scheyne Monsieur la Bar Scrutours to the said
Sir Francis
James Law
James Hamilton scrutour to the said Sir Claud
Archibald Sym Trumpeter
Laurence Fletcher comediane to his majestie.
Mr David Wed
Johns Bronderstainis "

These documents present something more than the facts, that a company of players, specially recommended by the King, were paid a gratuity from the Corporation of Aberdeen for their performances in that town, one of them subsequently receiving the freedom of the borough. The provost, baillies, and council ordain that thirty-two marks should be given to the King's servants then in that borough, who played comedies and stage-plays. The circumstance that they are recommended by the King's special letter is not so important as the description of them as the King's servants. Thirteen days after the entry of the 9th of October, at which first period these servants of the King had played some of their comedies, Lawrence Fletcher, comedian to his Majesty, is admitted a Burgess of guild of the borough of Aberdeen—the greatest honour which the Corporation could bestow. He is admitted to this honour in company with a nobleman of France visiting Aberdeen for

* The expression is used by Southampton in his letter to Lord Ellesmere introducing Shakspeare and Burbage in 1608. See Collier's 'New Facts,' p. 33.

† Hallam's 'Literature of Europe,' vol. iii., p. 508.

‡ Mr. Hallam refers to 'Hamlet' in its altered form.

the gratification of his curiosity, and recommended by the King to be favourably entertained; as well as with three men of rank, and others, who were directed by his Majesty to accompany "the said Frenchman." All the party are described in the document as knights and gentlemen. We have to inquire, then, who was Lawrence Fletcher, comedian to his Majesty? Assuredly the King had not in his service a company of Scotch players. In 1599 he had licensed a company of English comedians to play at Edinburgh. Fond as James was of theatrical exhibitions, he had not the means of gratifying his taste, except through the visits of English comedians. Scotland had no drama in the proper sense of the word. We may safely conclude that King James would have no Scottish company of players, because Scotland had no dramas to play.

"Lawrence Fletcher, comedian to his Majesty," was undoubtedly an Englishman; and "the King's servants presently in this borough who play comedies and stage-plays" were as certainly English players. There are not many facts known by which we can trace the history of Lawrence Fletcher. He is not mentioned amongst "the names of the principal actors in all these plays," which list is given in the first folio edition of Shakspeare; but he undoubtedly belonged to Shakspeare's company. Augustine Phillipps, who, by his will, in 1605, bequeathed a thirty-shilling piece of gold to his "fellow" William Shakspeare, also bequeathed twenty shillings to his "fellow" Lawrence Fletcher. But there is more direct evidence than this of the connexion of Fletcher with Shakspeare's company. The patent of James I., dated at Westminster on the nineteenth of May, 1603, in favour of the players acting at the Globe, is headed "Pro Laurentio Fletcher et Willielmo Shakspeare et aliis;" and it licenses and authorises the performances of "Laurence Fletcher, William Shakspeare, Richard Burbage, Augustine Phillipps, John Hemings, Henrie Condell, William Sly, Robert Armin, Richard Cowly, and the rest of their associates." The connexion in 1603 of Fletcher and Shakspeare cannot be more distinctly established than by this document. Chalmers says that Fletcher "was placed before Shakspeare and Richard Burbage in King James's licence as much perhaps by accident as by design." The Aberdeen Register is evidence against this opinion. Lawrence Fletcher, comedian to his Majesty, is admitted to honours which are not bestowed upon the other King's servants who had acted plays in the borough of Aberdeen in 1601. Lawrence Fletcher is first named in the letters patent of 1603. It is evident, we think, that he was admitted a burgher of Aberdeen as the head of the company, and that he was placed first in the royal licence for the same reason. But there is a circumstance, we apprehend, set forth in the Aberdeen Registers which is not only important with reference to the question of Shakspeare having visited Scotland, but which explains a remarkable event in the history of the stage. The company rewarded by the Corporation of Aberdeen on the 9th of October, 1601, were not only recommended by his Majesty's special letter, but they were the King's servants. Lawrence Fletcher, according to the second entry, was comedian to his Majesty received; not been. They were 1590; but tioned in servants. Laurence says that of this i servants, wards con did not c and other the King that we, c mere mot presents &c. The and facu subjects s think goo ercise pu infection usual ho The justi letters pa assist the ment thu you shall shall tak patent ex and coun their wel belief tha tue of thi the Chart removed on the l patent to Greenwic the exact words of iraply sor named as sible that James tak on which lain's serv performed that he c at first business of the K ject of pl company cedent of the serva servants o course; t above all act, carri within his new metropolis. But all these objections are removed when we refer to the facts opened to us by the council registers of Aberdeen. King James the Sixth of Scotland had recommended his servants to the magistrates of Aberdeen; and Lawrence Fletcher, there can be no doubt, was one of those servants so recommended. The patent of James the First of England directed to Lawrence Fletcher, William Shakspeare, and others, eighteen months after the performances at Aberdeen, is directed to those persons as "our servants." It does not appoint them the King's servants, but recognises the appointment as already existing. Can there be a reasonable doubt that the appointment was originally made by the King in Scotland, and subsisted when the same King ascended the English throne? Lawrence Fletcher was admitted a burgher of Guild of the borough of Aberdeen as comedian to his Majesty, in company with other persons who were servitors to his Majesty. He received that honour, we may conclude, as the head of the company, also the King's servants. We know not how he attained this distinction amongst his fellows, but it is impossible to imagine that accident so favoured him in two instances. The King's servant who was most favoured at Aberdeen, and the King's servant who is first in the patent in 1603, was surely placed in that position by the voice of his fellows, the other King's servants. William Shakspeare is named with him in a marked manner in the heading of the patent. Seven of their fellows are also named, as distinguished from "the rest of their associates." There can be no doubt of the identity of the Lawrence Fletcher, the servant of James VI. of Scotland, and the Lawrence Fletcher, the servant of James I. of England. Can we doubt that the King's servants who played comedies and stage plays in Aberdeen, in 1601, were, taken as a company, the King's servants who were licensed to exercise the art and faculty of playing, throughout all the realm, in 1603? If these points are evident, what reason have we to doubt that William Shakspeare, the second named in the licence of 1603, was amongst the King's servants at Aberdeen in 1601? Every circumstance concurs in the likelihood that he was of that number recommended by the King's special letter; and his position in the licence, even before Burbage, was, we may well believe, a compliment to him who in 1601 had taught "our James" something of the power and riches of the English drama. These circumstances give us, we think, warranty to conclude that the story of Macbeth might have been suggested to Shakspeare upon Scottish ground; that the accuracy displayed in the local descriptions and allusions might have been derived from a rapid personal observation; and that some of the peculiarities of his witchcraft imagery might have been found in Scottish superstitions, and more especially in those which were rife at Aberdeen at the beginning of the seventeenth century.

In May, 1602, Shakspeare made a large addition to his property at Stratford by the purchase, from William and John Combe, for the sum of three hundred and twenty pounds, of one hundred and seven acres of arable land in the town of Old Stratford. The indenture, which is in the possession of Mr. Wheeler of Stratford, is dated the 1st of May, 1602. The conveyance bears the signatures of the vendors of the property. But although it concludes in the usual form, "The parties to these presents having interchangeably set to their hands and seals," the counterpart (also in the possession of Mr. Wheeler) has not the hand and seal of the purchaser of the property described in the deed as "William Shakspeare, of Stratford-upon-Avon, in the countie aforesaide, Gentleman." The counterpart is not signed, and the piece of wax which is affixed to it is unimpressed with any seal. The acknowledgment of possession is however recorded. The property is delivered to Gilbert Shakspeare to the use of William. Gilbert was two years and a half younger than William, and in all likelihood was the cultivator of the land which the poet thus bought, or assisted their father in the cultivation.

Amongst the few papers rescued from "time's devouring maw" which enable us to trace Shakspeare's career with any exactness, there is another which relates to the acquisition of property in the same year. It is a copy of Court Roll for the Manor of Rowington, dated the 28th of September, 1602, containing the surrender by Walter Getley to the use of William Shakspeare of a house in Stratford, situated in Walker Street. This tenement was opposite Shakspeare's house of New Place. It is now taken down; it was in existence a few years ago. This document, which is in the possession of Mr. Hunt, the town-clerk of Stratford, also shows that at the latter end of September, 1602, William Shakspeare, the purchaser of this property, was not at Stratford. It could not legally pass to him, being a copyhold, till he had done suit and service in the Lord's Court; and the surrender therefore provides that it should remain in the possession of the lord till he, the purchaser, should appear.

In the September of 1602 the Earl of Worcester, writing to the Earl of Shrewsbury, says, "We are frolic here in Court, much dancing in the Privy Chamber of country-dances before the Queen's Majesty, who is exceedingly pleased therewith." In the December she was entertained at Sir Robert Cecil's house in the Strand, and some of the usual devices of flattering mummery were exhibited before her. A few months saw a period to the frolic and the flattery. The last entry in the books of the Treasurer of the Chamber during the reign of Elizabeth, which pertains to Shakspeare, is the following;—melancholy in the contrast between the Candlemas-Day of 1603, the 2nd of February, and the following 24th of March, when Elizabeth died:—"To John Hemynges and the rest of his companie, servants to the Lorde Chamberleyne, upon the Councells Warraunte, dated at Whitehall the xxth of Aprill, 1603, for their paines and expences in presenting before the late Queenes Ma<sup>tie</sup> twoe playes, the one upon St. Stephens day at night, and thother upon Candlemas day at night, for ech of which they were allowed, by way of her Ma<sup>tie</sup> reward, tenne poundes, amounting in all to xx<sup>li</sup>."

King James I. of England left his good city of Edinburgh on the 5th of April, 1603. He was nearly five weeks on the road. On the 7th of May he was safely lodged at the Charter House; and one of his first acts of authority was, as already noticed, after creating four new peers, and issuing a proclamation against robbery on the Borders, to order the Privy Seal for the patent to Lawrence Fletcher, William Shakspeare, and others. We learn from the patent itself that the King's servants were to perform publicly "when the infection of the plague shall decrease." It is clear that the King's servants were not at liberty then to perform publicly. How long the theatres were closed we do not exactly know; but a document is in existence, dated April 9th, 1604, directing the Lord Mayor of London, and Justices of Middlesex and Surrey, "to permit and suffer the three companies of players to the King, Queen, and Prince to exercise their plays in their several and usual houses." On the 20th of October, 1603, Joan, the wife of the celebrated Edward Alleyn, writes to her husband from London,—“About us the sickness doth cease, and likely more and more, by God's help, to cease. All the companies be come home, and well, for aught we know.” Her husband is hawking in the country, and Henslowe, his partner, is at the Court. Shakspeare is in London. Some one propounded a theory that there was no real man called William Shakspeare, and that the plays which passed with his name were the works of Marlowe and others. This very letter of good Mrs. Alleyn shows that William Shakspeare not only lived, but went about pretty much like other people, calling common things by their common names, giving advice about worldly matters in the way of ordinary folk, and spoken of by the wife of his friend without any wonder or laudation, just as if he had written no ‘Midsummer Night's Dream,’ or ‘Othello’ :—“Aboute a weeke a goe there came a youthe, who said he was Mr. Francis Chaloner, who would have borrowed xli to have bought things for . . . . and said he was known unto you, and Mr. Shakespeare of the Globe, who came . . . said he knewe hym not, onely he herde of hym that he was a roge . . . . so he was glade we did not lend him the monney. . . . Richard Johnes [went] to seeke and inquire after the fellow, and said he had lent hym a horse. I feare me he gulled hym, though he gulled not us. The youthe was a prety youthe, and hansome in appayrell: we knowe not what became of hym.”* But although Shakspeare was in London on the 20th of October, 1603, it is tolerably clear that the performances at the public theatres were not resumed till after the order of the 9th of April, 1604. In the Office Books of the Treasurer of the Chamber there is an entry of a payment of thirty-two pounds upon the Council's warrant dated at Hampton Court, February 8th, 1604, “by way of his Majesty's free gift” to Richard Burbage, one of his Majesty's comedians, “for the maintenance and relief of himself and the rest of his company, being prohibited to present any plays publicly in or near London, by reason of great peril that might grow through the extraordinary concourse and assembly of people, to a new increase of the plague, till it shall please God to settle the city in a more perfect health.” † But though the fear of of people,” for his own before the same Office John Hem and the re in the cou there prese of Deceml Wilton wa broke, to v nets were s opinion. nobleman, of any ma friended S his acts of and Henry tion of th most noble Earl of Pe In the su “singular places you dignity gr trifles; an priv'd ou since your trifles som them, and we hope tl the fate, c writings) ; you have speak of tl volume wl object of to Wilton arisen from It would t before Jar towards S the player poet's life.

At the taken up l a little be formity is eleven la Masque; plays befo nobles for to his serv have been accession early frie a long i: Southam;

* From the Papers in Dulwich College, printed in Mr. Collier's 'Memoirs of Edward Alleyn.'

† Cunningham's 'Revels at Court,' p. xxxv.

the King, their tastes may have led the monarch to a just preference of the works of Shakspeare before those of any other dramatist. The six plays performed before the King and Prince in the Christmas of 1603-4 at Hampton Court, were followed at the succeeding Christmas by performances "at the Banqueting-House at Whitehall," in which the plays of Shakspeare were preferred above those of every other competitor. There were eleven performances by the King's players, of which eight were plays of Shakspeare. Jonson shared this honour with him in the representation of 'Every One in his Humour,' and 'Every One out of his Humour.' A single play by Heywood, another by Chapman, and a tragedy by an unknown author, completed the list of these revels at Whitehall. It is told, Malone says, "upon authority which there is no reason to doubt, that King James bestowed especial honour upon Shakspeare." The story is told in the Advertisement to Lintot's edition of Shakspeare's Poems—"That most learned Prince, and great patron of learning, King James the First, was pleased with his own hand to write an amicable letter to Mr. Shakespeare; which letter, though now lost, remained long in the hands of Sir William Davenant, as a credible person now living can testify." Was the honour bestowed as a reward for the compliment to the King in 'Macbeth,' or was the compliment to the King a tribute of gratitude for the honour?

We have seen that in the year 1602 Shakspeare was investing the gains of his profession in the purchase of property at Stratford. It appears from the original Fines of the Court of King's Bench, preserved in the Chapter-house, that a little before the accession of James, in 1603, Shakspeare had also purchased a messuage at Stratford, with barns, gardens, and orchards, of Hercules Underhill, for the sum of sixty pounds. There can be little doubt that this continued acquisition of property in his native place had reference to the ruling desire of the poet to retire to his quiet fields and the placid intercourse of society at Stratford, out of the turmoil of his professional life and the excitement of the companionship of the gay and the brilliant. And yet it appears highly probable that he was encouraged, at this very period, through the favour of those who rightly estimated his merit, to apply for an office which would have brought him even more closely in connexion with the Court, that of Master of the Queen's Revels, to which office Samuel Daniel was appointed. It is not impossible that Shakspeare looked to this appointment as a compensation for his retirement from the profession of an actor, retaining his interest, however, as a theatrical proprietor. Be that as it may, he still carried forward his ruling purpose of the acquisition of property at Stratford. In 1605 he accomplished a purchase which required a larger outlay than any previous investment. On the 24th of July, in the third year of James, a conveyance was made by Ralph Hubbard, Esq., to William Shakspeare, gentleman, of a moiety of a lease of the great and small tithes of Stratford, for the remainder of a term of ninety-two years, and the amount of the purchase was four hundred and forty pounds. There can be little doubt that he was the cultivator of his own land, availing himself of the assistance of his brother Gilbert, and, in an earlier period, probably of his father. An account in 1597 of the stock of malt in the borough of Stratford, is said to exhibit ten quarters in the possession of William Shakspeare, of Chapel Street Ward. New Place was situated in Chapel Street. The purchase of a moiety of the tithes of so large a parish as Stratford might require extensive arrangements for their collection. Tithes in those days were more frequently collected in kind than by a modus. But even if a modus was taken, it would require a knowledge of the value of agricultural produce to farm the tithes with advantage. But before the date of this purchase it is perfectly clear that William Shakspeare was in the exercise of the trading part of a farmer's business. He bought the hundred and seven acres of land of John and William Combe in May, 1602. In 1604 a declaration was entered in the Borough Court of Stratford, on a plea of debt, William Shakspeare against Philip Rogers, for the sum of thirty-five shillings and ten-pence, for corn delivered. The precept was issued in the usual form upon this declaration, the delivery of the corn being stated to have taken place at several times in the first and second years of James. There cannot be more distinct evidence that William Shakspeare, at the very period when his dramas were calling forth the rapturous applause of the new Sovereign and his Court, and when he himself, as it would seem, was ambitious of a courtly office, did not disdain to pursue the humble though honourable occupation of a farmer in Stratford, and to exercise his just rights of property in connexion with that occupation. We must believe that he looked forward to the calm and healthful employment of the evening of his days, as a tiller of the land which his father had tilled before him, at the same time working out noble plans of poetical employment in his comparative leisure, as the best scheme of life in his declining years. The exact period when he commenced the complete realization of these plans is somewhat doubtful. He had probably ceased to appear as an actor before 1605. If the date 1608 be correctly assigned to a letter held to be written by Lord Southampton, it is clear that Shakspeare was not then an actor, for he is there described as "till of late an actor of good account in the company, now a sharer in the same." His partial freedom from his professional labours certainly preceded his final settlement at Stratford.

In the conveyance by the Combes to Shakspeare in 1602, he is designated as William Shakspeare of Stratford-upon-Avon. The same designation holds in subsequent legal documents connected with Stratford; but there is no doubt that, at the period of the conveyance from the Combes, he was an actor in the company performing at the Blackfriars and at the Globe; and in tracing therefore the "whereabout" of Shakspeare, from the imperfect records which remain to us, we have assumed that where the fellows of Shakspeare are to be found, there is he to be also located. But in the belief that before 1608 he had ceased to be an actor, we are not required to assume that he was so ~~consequently~~ consequently ~~with~~ his company as before that partial retirement. His interest would no doubt require his occasional presence with them, for he continued to be a considerable proprietor in their lucrative concerns. That prudence and careful management which could alone have enabled him to realize a large property out of his professional pursuits, and at the same time not to dissipate it by his agricultural occupations, appears to have been founded upon an arrangement by which he secured the assistance of his family, and at the same time made a provision for them. We have seen that in 1602 his brother Gilbert was his representative at Stratford. Richard, who was ten years his junior, and who, dying a year before him, was buried at Stratford, would also appear to have been resident there. His youngest brother Edmund, sixteen years his junior, was, there can be little question, associated with him in the theatre; and he probably looked to him to attend to the management of his property in London, after he retired from any active attention to its conduct. But Edmund died early. He lived in the parish of St. Saviour's, in all probability at his brother's house in the liberty of the Clink; and the register of burials of that parish has the following record:—"1607, December 31st, Edmond Shakespeare, a player, in the church." The death of his brother might probably have had a considerable influence upon the habits of his life, and might have induced him to dispose of all his theatrical property, as there is reason to believe he did, several years before his death. The value of a portion of this property has been ascertained, as far as it can be, upon an estimate for its sale; and by this estimate the amount of his portion, as compared with that of his co-proprietors, is distinctly shown. In 1608 the question of the jurisdiction of the City in the Blackfriars, and especially with reference to the playhouse, was brought before Lord Ellesmere, the Chancellor. The proprietors of the theatre remained in undisturbed possession. Out of this attempt a negotiation appears to have arisen for the purchase of the property by the City; for amongst the documents connected with this attempt of the Corporation is found a paper headed, "For avoiding of the playhouse in the precinct of the Blackfriars." The document states, in conclusion, that "in the whole it will cost the Lord Mayor and the citizens at the least 7000*l*." Richard Burbage claims 1000*l*. for the fee, and for his four shares 933*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*. Laz. Fletcher owns three shares, which he rates at 700*l*., that is, at seven years' purchase. "W. Shakespeare asketh for the wardrobe and properties of the same playhouse 500*l*," and for his four shares, the same as his fellowes Burbidge and Fletcher, viz. 933*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*." Heminge and Condell have each two shares, Taylor and Lowin each a share and a half; four more players each a half share; which they all value at the same rate. The hired men of the company also claim recompense for their loss; "and the widows and orphans of players who are paid by the sharers at divers rates and proportions."* It thus appears that, next to Richard Burbage, Shakspeare was the largest proprietor

* This valuable document was discovered by Mr. Collier, and published by him in his 'New Facts.'

sive own personal.
nual inco
alone, wa being per years' pur
100*l*. T alone. E likelihood ditional a a profess num, whi amount i spere pos diture at from the s sums, whi place. A and the r cession of advance.

were as greatness
the cours
year by y wealth; a suing an exercise o pleasurab which he tercourse
they were

Aubrey
his nativ which the
the perio
There is which doe informatic
Rev. John manuscrip
the Medic curious r heard tha
any art at time, but supplied for itt hac rate of 10
John Was
many res;
he united
of his dut
the vicars

It is elapsed s
the leadin noticing t
entry pres
vicar of S daughter

married Thomas Quiney in 1616, lived to the age of seventy-seven, having been buried on the 9th of February, 1662. The descendants of Shakspeare's family and of his friends surrounded the worthy vicar on every side; and he appears to have thought it absolutely necessary to acquire such a knowledge of the productions of the great poet as might qualify him to speak of them in general society:—"Remember to peruse Shakespeare's plays, and bee much versed in them, that I may not bee ignorant in that matter." The honest vicar was not quite certain whether the fame of Shakspeare was only a provincial one, for he adds—"Whether Dr. Heylin does well, in reckoning up the dramatick poets which have been famous in England, to omit Shakespeare?" The good man is not altogether to be blamed for having previously to 1662 been "ignorant" of Shakspeare's plays. He was only thirty-three years of age; and his youth had been passed in the stormy period when the Puritans had well nigh banished all literature, and especially dramatic literature, from the minds of the people, in their intolerant proscription of all pleasure and recreation. At any rate we may accept the statements of the good vicar as founded upon the recollections of those with whom he was associated in 1662. It is wholly consistent with what we otherwise know of Shakspeare's life, that "he frequented the plays all his younger time." It is equally consistent that he "in his elder days lived at Stratford." There is nothing improbable in the belief that he "supplied the stage with two plays every year." The last clause of the sentence is somewhat startling:—"And for it had an allowance so large, that he spent at the rate of 1000*l.* a-year, as I have heard." And yet the assertion must not be considered wholly an exaggeration. "He spent at the rate of 1000*l.* a-year," must mean the rate of the time when Mr. Ward is writing. During the half century which had preceded the Restoration there had been a more important decrease in the value of money than had even taken place in the reign of Elizabeth. During that reign the prices of all commodities were constantly rising; but after the reduction of the legal rate of interest from ten per cent. to eight in 1624, and from eight to six in 1651, the change was still more remarkable. Sir Josias Child, in 1688, says that five hundred pounds with a daughter, sixty years before, was esteemed a larger portion than two thousand pounds now. It would appear, therefore, that the thousand a-year in 1662 was not more than one-third of the amount in 1612; and this sum, from 300*l.* to 400*l.*, was, as near as may be, the amount which Shakspeare appears to have derived from his theatrical property. In all probability he held that property during the greater part of the period when he "supplied the stage with two plays every year;" and this indirect remuneration for his poetical labours might readily have been mistaken, fifty years afterwards, as "an allowance so large" for authorship that the good vicar records it as a memorable thing.

It is established that 'Othello' was performed in 1602; 'Hamlet,' greatly enlarged, was published in 1604; 'Measure for Measure' was acted before the Court on St. Stephen's night in the same year. If we place Shak-speare's partial retirement from his professional duties about this period, and regard the plays whose dates up to this point have not been fixed by any authentic record, or satisfactory combination of circumstances, we have abundant work in reserve for the great poet in the maturity of his intellect. 'Lear,' 'Macbeth,' 'Timon of Athens,' 'Troilus and Cressida,' 'Cymbeline,' 'The Winter's Tale,' 'The Tempest,' 'Henry VIII.,' 'Coriolanus,' 'Julius Cæsar,' 'Antony and Cleopatra,' eleven of the noblest productions of the human intellect, so varied in their character,—the deepest passion, the profoundest philosophy, the wildest romance, the most comprehensive history—what a glorious labour to fill the nine or ten remaining years of the life of the man who had left his native fields twenty years before to seek for advancement in doubtful and perilous paths,—in a profession which was denounced by some and despised by others,—amongst companions full of genius and learning, but who had perished early in their pride and their self-abandonment! And he returns wealthy and honoured to the bosom of those who are dearest to him—his wife and daughters, his mother, his sisters and brothers. The companions of his boyhood are all around him. They have been useful members of society in their native place. He has constantly kept up his intercourse with them. They have looked to him for assistance in their difficulties. He is come to be one of them, to dwell wholly amongst them, to take a deeper interest in their pleasures and in their cares, to receive their sympathy. He is come to walk amidst his own fields, to till them, to sell their produce. His labour will be his recreation. In the activity of his body will the energy of his intellect find its support and its rest. His nature is eminently fitted for action as well as contemplation. Were it otherwise, he would have "bad dreams," like his own Hamlet. Morbid thoughts may have come over him "like a passing cloud;" but from this time his mind will be eminently healthful. The imagination and the reason henceforth will be wonderfully balanced. Much of this belongs to the progressive character of his understanding; something to his favourable position.

With the exception of a playful piece of ridicule in 'The Merry Wives of Windsor,' we know not of a single personality which can be alleged against Shakspeare, in an age when his dramatic contemporaries, especially, bespattered their rivals and their enemies as fiercely as any modern paragraph writer. But vulgar opinion, which is too apt most easily to recognise the power of talent in its ability to inflict pain, has assigned to Shakspeare a performance which has the quality, extraordinary as regards himself, of possessing scurrility without wit. It is something lower in the moral scale even than the fabricated ballad upon Sir Thomas Lucy; for it exhibits a wanton and unprovoked outrage upon an unoffending neighbour, in the hour of convivial intercourse. Rowe tells the story as if he thought he were doing honour to the genius of the man whose good qualities he is at the same moment recording: "The latter part of his life was spent, as all men of good sense will wish theirs may be—in ease, retirement, and the conversation of his friends. He had the good fortune to gather an estate equal to his occasion, and, in that, to his wish; and is said to have spent some years before his death at his native Stratford. His pleasurable wit and good nature engaged him in the acquaintance, and entitled him to the friendship, of the gentlemen of the neighbourhood. Amongst them, it is a story still remembered in that country that he had a particular intimacy with Mr. Combe, an old gentleman noted thereabouts for his wealth and usury: it happened, that in a pleasant conversation amongst their common friends, Mr. Combe told Shakspeare, in a laughing manner, that he fancied he intended to write his epitaph, if he happened to outlive him, and since he could not know what might be said of him when he was dead, he desired it might be done immediately, upon which Shakspeare gave him these four lines:—

‘Ten in the hundred lies here ingrav’d;
‘T is a hundred to ten his soul is not sav’d.
If any man ask, Who lies in this tomb?
Oh! Oh! quoth the devil, ‘t is my John-a-Combe.’

But the sharpness of the satire is said to have stung the man so severely, that he never forgave it." Certainly this is an extraordinary illustration of Shakspeare's "pleasurable wit and good nature"—of those qualities which won for him the name of the "gentle Shakspeare;" which made Jonson, stern enough to most men, proclaim—"He was honest, and of an open and free nature," and that his "mind and manners" were reflected in his "well-turned and true-filed lines." John-a-Combe never forgave the sharpness of the satire! And yet he bequeathed by his last will "To Mr. William Shakspeare, five pounds." Aubrey tells the story with a difference:—"One time, as he was at the tavern at Stratford-upon-Avon, one Combes, an old rich usurer, was to be buried, he makes there this extemporary epitaph;" and then he gives the lines with a variation, in which "vows" rhymes to "allows," instead of "sav'd" to "ingrav'd." Of course, following out this second story, the family of John Combe resented the insult to the memory of their parent, who died in 1614; and yet an intimacy subsisted between them even till the death of Shakspeare, for in his own will he bequeaths to the son of the usurer a remarkable token of personal regard, the badge of a gentleman:—"To Mr. Thomas Combe my sword." The whole story is a fabrication. Ten in the hundred was the old name of opprobrium for one who lent money. To receive interest at all was called usury. "That ten in the hundred was gone to the devil," was an old joke, that shaped itself into epigrams long before the death of John Combe; and in the 'Remains of Richard Brathwaite,' printed in 1618, we have the very epitaph assigned to Shakspeare, with a third set of variations, given as a notable production, of this voluminous writer: "Upon one John Combe, of Stratford-upon-Avon, a notable usurer, fastened upon a Tombe that he had caused to be built in his Lifetime." The lie direct is given by the will of John Combe to this third version of the lines against him; for it directs that a convenient tomb shall be erected one year after his decease.

The register of marriages at Stratford-upon-Avon for the year 1607 contains the entry of the marriage of John Hall, gentleman, and Susanna Shakspeare, on the 5th June. Susanna, the eldest daughter of William Shakspeare, was now twenty-four years of age. John Hall, gentleman, a physician settled at Stratford, was in his thirty-second year. This appears in every respect to have been a propitious alliance. Shakspeare received into his family a man of learning and talent.

The season at which the marriage of Shakspeare's eldest daughter took place would appear to give some corroboration to the belief that, at this period, he had wholly ceased to be an actor. It is not likely that an event to him so deeply interesting would have taken place during his absence from Stratford. It was the season of performances at the Globe. It is at this period that we can fix the date of 'Lear.' That wonderful tragedy was first published in 1608; and the title-page recites that "It was plaid before the King's Majesty at White-Hall, uppon S. Stephen's Night; in Christmas Halli-daies." This most extraordinary production might well have been the first fruits of a period of comparative leisure; when the creative faculty was wholly untrammelled by petty cares, and the judgment might be employed in working again and again upon the first conceptions, so as to produce such a masterpiece of consummate art without after labour. The next season of repose gave birth to an effort of genius wholly different in character; but almost as wonderful in its profound sagacity and knowledge of the world, as 'Lear' is unequalled for its depth of individual passion. 'Troilus and Cressida' was published in 1609. We may well believe that the Sonnets were published in 1609, without the consent of their author. That the appearance of those remarkable lyrics should have annoyed him, by exposing, as they now appear in the eyes of some to do, the frailties of his nature, we do not for a moment believe. They would be received by his family and by the world as essentially fictitious; and ranked with the productions of the same class with which the age abounded.

The year 1608 brought its domestic joys and calamities to Shakspeare. In the same font where he had been baptized, forty-three years before, was baptized, on the 21st of February, his grand-daughter, "Elizabeth, daughter of John Hall." In the same grave where his father was laid in 1601, was buried his mother, "Mary Shakspeare, widow," on the 29th of September, 1608. She was the youngest daughter of Robert Arden, who died in 1556. She was probably, therefore, about seventy years of age when her sons followed her to the "house of all living."

There is a memorandum existing, by Thomas Greene, a contemporary of Shakspeare, residing at Stratford, which, under the date of November 17th, 1614, bears this record:—"My cousin Shakspeare coming yesterday to town, I went to see him how he did." We cite this memorandum here, as an indication of Shakspeare's habit of occasionally visiting London; for Thomas Greene was then in the capital, with the intent of opposing the project of an inclosure at Stratford. The frequency of Shakspeare's visits to London would naturally depend upon the nature of his connexion with the theatres. He was a permanent shareholder, as we have ackfriars; and no doubt at the Globe rests as a sharer might be diligently by his fellows; and he might only have when he had a new play to bring forth of his leisure in the country. But until his wardrobe and other properties, more ads might be made upon his personal if he were totally free from the responsibility to the charge of such an embarrassment. Mr. Collier has printed a memorandum of Edward Alleyn, dated the payment of various sums "for the amounting to 590*l*. 6*s*. 8*d*. Mr. Collier on the money was paid is nowhere ought we know, it was to Shakespeare anterior to his departure from London—memorandum is introduced with the it seems very likely, from evidence now e to be adduced, that Alleyn became the great dramatist's interest in the theatre, robe, and stock of the Blackfriars." document itself says nothing about prose, and stock. It is simply as follows:—

" 1613.

me E. A. for the Blackfriars	160 l ackfriars . . . . .	126 l t the Lease . . . . .	310 l
of the same, and other small	3 l 6 s . 8 d ."

of the entire sum is paid "again for the estimate "For avoiding of the Playt rejected as an authority, the conjecture that the property purchased by id to Shakspeare is wholly untenable; dued at a thousand pounds, was the arbage, and to the owner of the Fee the sum for the lease. Subsequent Alleyn show that he paid rent for and expended sums upon the building oofs that it was not Shakspeare's perthat he bought in April 1612. There nce furnished by another document that ot a resident in London in 1613; for in ecuted by him on the 10th of March in e purchase of a dwelling-house in the Blackfriars, he is described as "William Stratforde Upon Avon in the countie of man;" whilst his fellow John Hemyng, o the same deed, is described as "of nan." From the situation of the proppear to have been bought either as an the theatre, or for some protection of he sharers. In the deed of 1602, Shakscribed as of Stratford-upon-Avon. It is hould be so described, in a deed for the l at Stratford; but upon the same prinpen a resident in London in 1613, he n described as of London in a deed for property in London. Yet we also look yance as evidence that Shakspeare had in wholly severed himself from his intere. He is in London at the signing of the deed, attending, probably, to the duties which still devolved upon him as a sharer in the Blackfriars. He is not a resident in London; he has come to town, as Thomas Greene describes in 1614. But we have no evidence that he sold his theatrical property at all. Certainly the evidence that he sold it to Edward Alleyn may be laid aside in any attempt to fix the date of Shakspeare's departure from London.

* See page 1074.

Every one agrees that during the last three or four years of his life Shakspeare ceased to write. Yet we venture to think that every one is in error. The opinion is founded upon a belief that he only finally left London towards the close of 1613. We have shown, from his purchase of a large house at Stratford, his constant acquisition of landed property there, his active engagements in the business of agriculture, the interest which he took in matters connected with his property in which his neighbours had a common interest, that he must have partially left London before this period. There were no circumstances, as far as we can collect, to have prevented him finally leaving London several years before 1613. But his biographers, having fixed a period for the termination of his connexion with the active business of the theatre, assume that he became wholly unemployed; that he gave himself up, as Rowe has described, to "ease, retirement, and the conversation of his friends." His income was enough, they say, to dispense with labour; and therefore he did not labour. But when the days of leisure arrived, is it reasonable to believe that the mere habit of his life would not assert its ordinary control; that the greatest of intellects would suddenly sink to the condition of an every-day man—cherishing no high plans for the future, looking back with no desire to equal and excel the work of the past? At the period of life when Chaucer began to write the 'Canterbury Tales,' Shakspeare, according to his biographers, was suddenly and utterly to cease to write. We cannot believe it. Is there a parallel case in the career of any great artist who had won for himself competence and fame? Is the mere applause of the world, and a sufficiency of the goods of life, "the end-all and the be-all" of the labours of a mighty mind? These attained, is the voice of his spiritual being to be heard no more? If those who reason thus could present a satisfactory record of the dates of all Shakspeare's works, and especially of his later works, we should still cling to the belief that some fruits of the last years of his literary industry had wholly perished. It is unnecessary, as it appears to us, to adopt any such theory. Without the means of fixing the precise date of many particular dramas, we have indisputable traces, up to this period, of the appearance of at least five-sixths of all Shakspeare's undoubted works. Are there any dramas whose individual appearance is not accounted for by those who have attempted to fix the exact chronology of other plays? There are such dramas, and they form a class. They are the three great Roman plays of 'Coriolanus,' 'Julius Caesar,' and 'Antony and Cleopatra.'

The happy quiet of Shakspeare's retreat was not wholly undisturbed by calamity, domestic and public. His brother Richard, who was ten years his junior, was buried at Stratford on the 4th of February, 1613. Of his father's family his sister Joan, who had married Mr. William Hart of Stratford, was probably the only other left. There is no record of the death of his brother Gilbert; but as he is not mentioned in the will of William, in all likelihood he died before him. Oldys, in his manuscript notes upon Langbaine, has a story of "One of Shakspeare's younger brothers, who lived to a good old age, even some years, as I compute, after the restoration of King Charles II." Gilbert was born in 1566; so that if he had lived some years after the restoration of Charles II. it is not surprising that "his memory was weakened," as Oldys reports, and that he could give "the most noted actors" but "little satisfaction in their endeavours to learn something from him of his brother." The story of Oldys is clearly apocryphal, as far as regards any brother of Shakspeare's. They were a short-lived race. His sister, indeed, survived him thirty years. The family at New Place, at this period, would be composed therefore of his wife only, and his unmarried daughter Judith; unless his elder daughter and his son-in-law formed a part of the same household, with their only child Elizabeth, who was born in 1608. The public calamity to which we have alluded was a great fire, which broke out at Stratford on the 9th of July, 1614. That Shakspeare assisted with all the energy of his character in alleviating the miseries of this calamity, and in the restoration of his town, we cannot doubt. In the same year we find him taking some interest in the project of an inclosure of the common-fields of Stratford. The inclosure would probably have improved his property, and especially have increased the value of the tithes, of the moiety of which he held a lease. The Corporation of Stratford were opposed to the inclosure. They held that it would be injurious to the poorer inhabitants, who were then deeply suffering from the desolation of the fire; and they appear to have been solicitous that Shakspeare should take the same view of the matter as themselves. His friend William Combe, then high sheriff of the county, was a principal person engaged in forwarding the inclosure. The Corporation sent their common clerk, Thomas Greene, to London, to oppose the project; and a memorandum in his hand-writing, which still remains, exhibits the business-like manner in which Shakspeare informed himself of the details of the plan. The first memorandum is dated the 17th of November, 1614, and is as follows:—"My Cosen Shakspeare comyng yesterday to town, I went to see how he did. He told me that they assured him they ment to inclose no further than to Gospel Bush, and so upp straight (leaving out pt. of the Dyngles to the field) to the gate in Clopton hedg, and take in Salisbury's peece; and that they mean in Aprill to svey. the land and then to gyve satisfaccion, and not before: and he and Mr. Hall say they think yr. will be nothyng done at all." Mr. Greene appears to have returned to Stratford in about a fortnight after the date of this memorandum, and Shakspeare seems to have remained in London; for according to a second memorandum, which is damaged and partly illegible, an official letter was written to Shakspeare by the Corporation, accompanied by a private letter from Mr. Greene, moving him to exert his influence against this plan of the inclosure:—"23 Dec. A. Hall, Lres. wrytten, one to Mr. Manyring—another to Mr. Shakspeare, with almost all the company's hands to eyther. I also wrytte myself to my Cen. Shakspeare, the coppyes of all our . . . then also a note of the inconvenyences wold . . . by the inclosure." Arthur Mannerling, to whom one of these letters was written by the Corporation, was officially connected with the Lord Chancellor, and then residing at his house; and from the letter to him, which has been preserved, it appears that he was apprised of the injury to be expected from the intended inclosure; reminded of the damage that Stratford, then "lying in the ashes of desolation," had sustained from recent fires; and entreated to forbear the inclosure." The letter to Shakspeare has not been discovered. The fact of its having been written leaves no doubt of the importance which was attached to his opinion by his neighbours. Truly in his later years he had

"Honour, love, obedience, troops of friends!"

The younger daughter of Shakspeare was married at the 10th of February, 1616, to Thomas Quiney, as the register of Stratford shows. Thomas Quiney was the son of Richard Quiney of Stratford, whom we have seen in 1598 soliciting the kind offices of his lowly countryman Shakspeare. Thomas, who was born in 1588, was probably a well-educated man. The last will of Shakspeare would appear to have been prepared in some degree with reference to this marriage. It is dated the 25th of March, 1616; but the word "Januarii" seems to have been first written and afterwards struck out, "Martii" having been written above it. It is not unlikely, and indeed it appears most probable, that the document was prepared before the marriage of Judith; for the elder daughter is mentioned as Susanna Hall,—the younger simply as Judith. To her, one hundred pounds is bequeathed, and fifty pounds conditionally. The life-interest of a further sum of one hundred and fifty pounds is also bequeathed to her, with remainder to her children; but if she died without issue within three years after the date of the will, the hundred and fifty pounds was to be otherwise appropriated. We pass over the various legacies to relations and friends to come to the bequest of the great bulk of the property. All the real estate is devised to his daughter Susanna Hall, for and during the term of her natural life. It is then entailed upon her first son and his heirs male; and in default of such issue, to her second son and his heirs male; and so on: in default of such issue, to his granddaughter Elizabeth Hall (called in the language of the time his "niece"); and in default of such issue, to his daughter Judith and her heirs male. By this strict entailment it was manifestly the object of Shakspeare to found a family. Like many other such purposes of short-sighted humanity the object was not accomplished. His elder daughter had no issue but Elizabeth, and she died childless. The heirs male of Judith died before her. The estates were scattered after the second generation, and the descendants of his sister were the only transmitters to posterity of his blood and lineage.

"Item, I give unto my wife my second-best bed, with the furniture." This is the clause of the will upon which, for half a century, all men believed that Shakspeare recollected his wife only to mark how little he esteemed her,—to "cut her off, not indeed with a shilling, but with an old bed."* We had the satisfaction of first showing the utter groundlessness of this opinion; and we here briefly repeat the statement which we made in our Postscript to 'Twelfth Night,' that the wife of Shakspeare was unquestionably provided for by the natural operation of the law of England. His estates, with the exception of a copyhold tenement, expressly mentioned in his will, were freehold. His wife was entitled to dower. She was provided for amply, by the clear and undeniable operation of the English law. Of the houses and gardens which Shakspeare inherited from his father, she was assured of the life-interest of a third, should she survive her husband, the instant that old John Shakspeare died. Of the capital messuage called New Place, the best house in Stratford, which Shakspeare purchased in 1597, she was assured of the same life-interest, from the moment of the conveyance, provided it was a direct conveyance to her husband. That it was so conveyed we may infer from the terms of the conveyance of the lands in Old Stratford, and other places, which were purchased by Shakspeare in 1602, and were then conveyed "to the onlye proper use and behoofe of the saide William Shakspeare, his heires and assignes, for ever." Of a life-interest in a third of these lands also was she assured. The tenement in Blackfriars, purchased in 1614, was conveyed to Shakspeare and three other persons; and after his death was re-conveyed by those persons to the uses of his will, "for and in performance of the confidence and trust in them reposed by William Shakespeare deceased." In this estate, certainly, the widow of our poet had not dower. It has been remarked to us that even the express mention of the second-best bed was anything but unkindness and insult; that the best bed was in all probability an heir-loom: it might have descended to Shakspeare himself from his father as an heir-loom and, as such, was the property of his own heirs. The best bed was considered amongst the most important of those chattels which went to the heir by custom with the house.†

* Malone.

† "And note that in some places chattels as heir-looms (as the best bed, table, pot, pan, cart, and other dead chattels moveable) may go to the heir, and the heir in that case may

The will of Shakspeare thus commences:—"I, William Shakspeare, of Stratford-upon-Avon, in the county of Warwick, gent., in perfect health and memory, (God be praised!) do make and ordain this my last will and testament." And yet within one month of this declaration William Shakspeare is no more:

OBITU ANO. DOI. 1616. ETATIS 53. DIE 23. AP.

Such is the inscription on his tomb. It is corroborated by the register of his burial:—"April 25. Will Shakspeare gent." Writing forty-six years after the event, the vicar of Stratford says, "Shakspeare, Drayton, and Ben Jonson had a merry meeting, and, it seems, drank too hard, for Shakspeare died of a fever there contracted." A tradition of this nature, surviving its object nearly half a century, is not much to be relied on. But if it were absolutely true, our reverence for Shakspeare would not be diminished by the fact that he accelerated his end in the exercise of hospitality, according to the manner of his age, towards two of the most illustrious of his friends. The "merry-meeting," the last of many social hours spent with the full-hearted Jonson and the elegant Drayton, may be contemplated without a painful feeling. Shakspeare possessed a mind eminently social—"he was of a free and generous nature." But, says the tradition of half a century, "he drank too hard" at this "merry meeting." We believe that this is the vulgar colouring of a common incident. He "died of a fever there contracted." The fever that is too often the attendant upon a hot spring, when the low grounds upon a river bank have been recently inundated, is a fever that the good people of Stratford did not well understand at that day. The "merry meeting" rounded off a tradition much more effectively. Whatever was the immediate cause of his last illness, we may well believe that the closing scene was full of tranquillity and hope; and that he who had sought, perhaps more than any man, to look beyond the material and finite things of the world, should rest at last in the "peace which passeth all understanding"—in that assured belief which the opening of his will has expressed with far more than formal solemnity:—"I commend my soul into the hands of God my creator, hoping, and assuredly believing, through the only merits of Jesus Christ, my Saviour, to be made partaker of life everlasting."

have an action for them at the common law, and shall not sue for them in the ecclesiastical court; but the heir-loom is due by custom, and not by the common law."—Coke upon Littleton, 18 b.

A TABLE OF SHAKSPERE'S PLAYS, SHOWING THE POSITIVE FACTS WHICH DETERMINE THE DATES PREVIOUS TO WHICH THEY WERE PRODUCED.

HENRY VI., Part I. . . . .	Alluded to by Nashe in Pierce Pennilesse . . . . .	1592	TWELFTH NIGHT . . . . .	Acted in the Mill Temple Hall . . . . .
HENRY VI., Part II. . . . .	Printed as 'The First Part of the Contention' . . . . .	1594	OTHELLO . . . . .	Acted at Hamfeld . . . . .
HENRY VI., Part III. . . . .	Printed as 'The True Trage- dy of Richard Duke of York' . . . . .	1596	MEASURE FOR MEASURE . . . . .	Acted at Whitehall . . . . .
RICHARD II. . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1597	LEAR . . . . .	Printed 1608. Acted Whitehall . . . . .
RICHARD III. . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1597	TAMING OF THE SHREW . . . . .	Supposed to have been acted at Hamfeld Theatre, 1593. Banned at Stationers' Hall . . . . .
ROMEO AND JULIET . . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1597	TROILUS AND CRESSIDA . . . . .	Printed 1609. Previously acted at Court . . . . .
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST . . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1598	PERICLES . . . . .	Printed . . . . .
HENRY IV., Part I. . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1598	THE TEMPEST . . . . .	Acted at Whitehall . . . . .
HENRY IV., Part II. . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1600	THE WINTER'S TALE . . . . .	Acted at Whitehall . . . . .
HENRY V. . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1600	HENRY VIII. . . . .	Acted as a new play in the Globe was burnt . . . . .
MERCHANT OF VENICE . . . . .	Printed 1600. Mentioned by Meres . . . . .	1596
MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM . . . . .	Printed 1600. Mentioned by Meres . . . . .	1598
MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING . . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1600
AS YOU LIKE IT . . . . .	Entrd. at Stationers' Hall	1600
ALL 'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL . . . . .	Held to be mentioned by Meres as 'Love's La- bour's Won' . . . . .	1598
TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA . . . . .	Mentioned by Meres . . . . .	1598
COMEDY OF ERRORS . . . . .	Mentioned by Meres . . . . .	1598
KING JOHN . . . . .	Mentioned by Meres . . . . .	1598
TITUS ANDRONICUS . . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1600
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR . . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1602
HAMLET . . . . .	Printed . . . . .	1603

* * * Out of the thirty-seven Plays of Shakspeare, the first thirty-one are thus to some extent fixed in epochs. These are, of course, to be modified by other circumstances, which are stated in our Introductory Notice to each Play. There are six Plays remaining, whose dates are not thus limited by publication, by the notice of contemporaries, or by the date of their performance; and these certainly belong to the latter period. They are

MACBETH, JULIUS CÆSAR, CYMBELINE, ANTONY AND CLODIA,
TIMON OF ATHENS, CORIOLANUS

